F. Lohr BAUER and Elizabeth Bauer, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

L. A. 23362.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Oct. 21, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1955.

Action for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by waters overflowing from defendants' storm drain ditch. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Ventura County, Ernest D. Wagner, J., dismissing the action, plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, P. J., held that the complaint stated a cause of action against defendant county, storm drain maintenance district, and county board of supervisors under constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation and Government Code section declaring local agency liable for injuries resulting from dangerous or defective condition of public property, but stated no cause of action against individual members of county board.

Judgment reversed in part with directions, and affirmed in part.

Cal.Rep. 289-290 P.2d—1

1. Eminent Domain ⇨1

Taking of private property by state for public use is an attribute of sovereignty. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

2. Eminent Domain ⇨75

Generally, the state, in taking private property for public use, must follow constitutional procedure requiring payment of compensation to owner before dispossessing him of property. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Eminent Domain ⇨271

When constitutional requirement that compensation for taking of private property be paid to owner before dispossessing him is not fully satisfied, action will lie against state to recover value of property taken. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

4. Eminent Domain ⇨271

The constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation is designed, not to create new causes of action, but only to give private property owner a remedy he would not otherwise have against state for unlawful dispossession or destruction of or damage to his property, so that state is not liable thereunder for property damage which is damnum absque injuria. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

5. Eminent Domain ⇨270

An owner of private property taken or damaged by state for public use has no claim against state for compensation under Constitution, if he would have no cause of action against a private citizen on same facts. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

6. Eminent Domain ¶70

The effect of constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation is to waive state's immunity from liability for taking or damaging of property for public purposes. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

7. Eminent Domain ¶270

To bring complaint within constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, plaintiff must show, not only taking or damaging of his property for public use, but also that it is actionable under general law. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

8. Waters and Water Courses ¶84

Diversion of water from its natural course, resulting in damage to adjacent property, is actionable.

9. Waters and Water Courses ¶79

Mere improvement within existing watercourse, which accelerates rather than diverts flow of water, does not give rise to cause of action for damage resulting from overflow.

10. Waters and Water Courses ¶79, 119(3)

Straightening, widening or deepening channel of stream to improve drainage or collecting surface waters for discharge into their natural stream entails no diversion in event of resulting overflow, but to escape liability for damage to inundated adjacent property, such improvements must follow natural drainage of country or natural stream.

11. Eminent Domain ¶13

"Public use" within constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation is a use concerning whole community or promoting general interest in its relation to any legitimate object of government. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Use".

12. Eminent Domain ¶13

To constitute "public use" within constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, a duty must fall on person or corporation holding property appropriated by eminent domain to furnish public with use intended and public must be entitled to use or enjoy property. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

13. Eminent Domain ¶31

Ordinary taking of private property for purpose of constructing storm drainage systems is taking for "public use" within constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

14. Eminent Domain ¶17

Taking or damaging of private property for maintenance of existing public improvement involving a deliberate act for direct or indirect accomplishment of purpose of improvement as whole constitutes taking or damaging of property for "public use," so as to entitle owner thereof to compensation under Constitution. West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 14.

15. Eminent Domain ¶2(3)

Damage resulting from negligent maintenance, rather than original construction, of public improvement, such as storm drainage system, to adjacent property, is not beyond purview of constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

16. Eminent Domain ¶2(3)

Application of constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation to negligent maintenance of public improvement, as in raising storm drain ditch bank so as to cause overflow of water onto adjacent property, is not precluded as subjecting state to general tort liability to property owner for negligent acts in routine operation of ditch, such act being deliberate one for purpose of fulfilling public objects of project as whole, whereas damage resulting from negligence in routine operation of improvement has no relation to function of project as conceived. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

17. Eminent Domain ⇨293(1)

In action for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by waters from defendants' storm drain ditch, allegations of complaint that collection of debris and stumps in ditch and placing of pipe across it, thereby obstructing flow of water, were parts of construction of ditch and constituted taking of plaintiffs' land for public use properly characterized obstructions as part of plan for maintenance or construction of ditch, not mere negligent operation thereof, so as to render county and storm drain maintenance district liable to plaintiffs for compensation. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

18. Eminent Domain ⇨293(1)

In action for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by water from storm drain ditch built and maintained by defendants county and storm drain maintenance district, complaint was not demurrable as failing to state cause of action under constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 14.

19. Drains ⇨63

Allegations of complaint that storm drain ditch was constructed and maintained by defendants county and storm drain maintenance district in defective condition, as proximate result of which plaintiffs' land was damaged by inundation of water overflowing ditch, and that defendants failed to remedy such condition within reasonable time after learning thereof, were sufficient to state cause of action under statute declaring local agency liable for injuries resulting from defective condition of public property, if board or person authorized to remedy condition fails to do so within reasonable time after acquiring knowledge or receiving notice thereof. West's Ann. Gov.Code, § 53051.

20. Drains ⇨63

In action against county and storm drain maintenance district for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by water from defendants' storm drain ditch, complaint was not defective because of failure to allege that ditch, claimed by plaintiffs to have been kept in dangerous and defective condition, was property owned by county, as drainage system and ditch were "public works" and hence "public property" within statute defining such property as public street, highway, building, park, grounds, works, or property. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Property" and "Public Works".

21. Drains ⇨63

The Government Code section waiving immunity of local agency defined therein as including city, county, or school district, from suit for injuries resulting from dangerous or defective condition of public property, applies to county storm drain maintenance district, which is not a governmental agency separate and distinct from county and is not given power to sue and be sued by act creating it. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051; Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, §§ 1, 5, 7, West's Ann. Water Code, Appendix.

22. Drains ⇨63

A county storm drain maintenance district was improperly joined as party defendant in action against county and board of supervisors thereof for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by waters from defendants' storm drain ditch, as neither legislative intention, nor stated purpose of Storm Drain Maintenance District Act requires districts created pursuant thereto to enjoy legal personality separate from county. Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, § 1 et seq., West's Ann. Water Code, Appendix.

23. Counties ⇨59

In action for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by waters from defendants' storm drain ditch, complaint failing to allege that defendant members of defendant county board of supervisors individually had authority, duty and ability to remedy defective condition of ditch at defendant county's expense, had available funds for such purpose, and failed to give adequate warning of condition or exercise due care to avoid damage to plaintiffs' property, stated no cause of action against such members, though action was for injury arising out of construction and maintenance of public improvement under board's direct supervision. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1953 (a-e).

24. Pleading Ⓒ225(1)

In action against storm drain maintenance district, county board of supervisors and individual members thereof for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by waters from defendants' storm drain ditch, trial court properly sustained board members' demurrer to complaint for failure to allege that they individually had authority and duty to remedy defective condition of ditch at county's expense, without leave to amend, as plaintiffs could not allege such fact because no board member, acting individually, has such duty or authority. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1953(c); Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, § 1 et seq., West's Ann. Water Code, Appendix.

25. Pleading Ⓒ18

The essence of requirement that complaint be certain, unambiguous and intelligible is fairness in pleading to give defendant such notice by complaint that he may prepare his case.

26. Pleading Ⓒ192(2)

In action for damages from inundation of plaintiffs' land by waters from defendants' storm drain ditch, complaint was not demurrable as uncertain, ambiguous and unintelligible because it referred in one instance to a pipe as obstruction in ditch and in other instances to "obstructions" without precise specification.

William T. Selby, Ventura, for appellants.

Roy A. Gustafson, Dist. Atty., Bruce A. Thompson, Deputy Dist. Atty., Ventura, and Harry E. Sackett, Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal in an action to recover damages resulting from the alleged wrongful inundation of the property of the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Bauer. They own real property located in the vicinity of a watercourse and storm drainage system controlled by the defendants in Ventura County. On March 15, 1952 the waters contained in the defendants' storm drain ditch overflowed upon and damaged plaintiffs' land. Principally upon the theories of inverse condemnation and the tort liability of the defendants, the plaintiffs commenced this action to recover the resulting damages.

The trial court's judgment of dismissal was based upon its orders sustaining demurrers of each defendant to the amended complaint. General and special demurrers of the County were sustained with leave to amend within ten days. The plaintiffs having failed to amend within that time, the action was dismissed as against the County. General demurrers of the Saticoy Storm Drain Maintenance District and the individual members of the County Board of Supervisors were sustained without leave to amend.

The plaintiffs allege that in 1939 the County and District built a system of ditches and levees diverting the waters of the Franklin Barranca, a natural watercourse, away from their natural stream. In its natural course the stream flowed in a direction away from the plaintiffs' land at an approximate distance of one quarter of a mile. The plaintiffs' land and the intervening tract between it and the barranca sloped downward. Because the barranca in its natural state was lower than the plaintiffs' land, the natural overflow, if any, would flow away from and never towards the plaintiffs' land. This was also the case with the ditches. Since, from the viewpoint of the plaintiffs' tract, the far side of the ditch was lower than the level of the plaintiffs' land, any overflow from the ditch would flow downward and away. Then, from 1950 to March 15, 1952, the lower bank at the far side of the ditch was raised by the defendants who placed thereon a quantity of debris and soil which had accumulated in the bottom of the ditch. A pipe was placed across the ditch in such a way that the water flow was obstructed. With the lower bank of the ditch thus raised, its highest points were above the level of the plaintiffs' land. No bank or levee was constructed upon the bank nearest the plaintiffs which would keep the waters in the ditch or continue to permit them to overflow only in a direction away from the plaintiffs' land.

The complaint alleges that as the proximate result of this dangerous and defective condition, the negligent construction, the maintenance and condition of the ditch, the obstructions therein and the acts of the defendants in constructing the ditch, banks and levees, water overflowed onto and damaged plaintiffs' property. Plaintiffs' claim filed with the County was denied. They have received no compensation for the taking and damaging of their property for such public use. They further allege that the work described was done by and under the control of the defendants County and District, and from 1950 to 1952 the work was at all times under the direct supervision of the defendant members of the Board of Supervisors.

The plaintiffs contend that these allegations, assumed to be true for the purpose of considering the demurrers, state a cause of action.

[1-3] California Constitution Article 1, section 14 provides: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner * * *." The taking of private property by the state for a public use is universally recognized as one of the indisputable attributes of sovereignty. Moran v. Ross, 79 Cal. 159, 21 P. 547; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229. But the state must, except under special circumstances not here present, follow the constitutional procedure which requires the payment of compensation before the private owner is dispossessed of his property. When this requirement is not fully satisfied, an action will lie against the state to recover the value of the property so taken. Bacich v. Board of Control, 23 Cal.2d 343, 144 P.2d 818; Rose v. California, 19 Cal.2d 713, 123 P.2d 505. Based upon section 14, the appropriate action is sometimes designated a proceeding in inverse condemnation.

[4-7] Section 14, however, is designed not to create new causes of action but only to give the private property owner a remedy he would not otherwise have against the state for the unlawful dispossession, destruction or damage of his property. The state is therefore not liable under this provision for property damage that is damnum absque injuria. If the property owner would have no cause of action against a private citizen on the same facts, he can have no claim for compensation against the state under section 14. Clement v. State Reclamation Board, 35 Cal.2d 628, 220 P.2d 897; House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 25 Cal.2d 384, 153 P.2d 950; Archer v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 19, 119 P.2d 1; San Gabriel Valley Country Club v. County of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 392, 188 P. 554, 9 A.L.R. 1200; Lamb v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 73 Cal. 125, 14 P. 625. The effect of section 14 is to waive the immunity of the state where property is taken or damaged for public purposes. To bring his complaint within the provision, the plaintiff must show not only a taking or damaging for a public use but also that it is actionable under the general law.

[8-10] It is well established that the diversion of water from its natural course resulting in damage to adjacent property is actionable. Clement v. State Reclamation Board, supra, 35 Cal.2d 628, 220 P.2d 897; House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control District, supra, 25 Cal.2d 384, 153 P.2d 950; Pacific Seaside Home for Children v. Newport Protection District, 190 Cal. 544, 213 P. 967; Elliott v. County of Los Angeles, 183 Cal. 472, 191 P. 899; Smith v. City of Los Angeles, 66 Cal.App.2d 562, 153 P.2d 69; see Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 123, 119 P.2d 717; Massetti v. Madera Canal & Irr. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 708, 68 P.2d 260; Tormey v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 53 Cal.App. 559, 200 P. 814. Mere improvement within an existing watercourse which accelerates rather than diverts the flow does not give rise to a cause of action when damage results from an overflow. Straightening, widening or deepening the channel of a stream to improve the drainage or the collection of surface waters for discharge into their natural stream entails no diversion in the event of a resulting overflow. But to escape liability the improvements thus described must follow the natural drainage of the country or the natural stream. Archer v. City of Los Angeles, supra; San Gabriel Valley Country Club v. County of Los Angeles, supra. In the present case, the plaintiffs' allegations show that the waters of the barranca were diverted away from their natural stream into a ditch running close to the plaintiffs' land, and then permitted to overflow and back up in a direction exactly opposite from their natural flow.

The defendants contend that the damage resulting from negligent maintenance rather than the original construction of a public improvement is beyond the scope of protection offered by section 14. They point to the plaintiffs' allegations that the County and District negligently and carelessly permitted the bank of the ditch to be raised on the far side, permitted obstructions to be placed in the ditch, and allowed debris and stumps to collect and be placed therein. This, it is argued, is negligent maintenance and a consequential property loss is not an express taking or damaging for a public use.

[11-13] "Public use" within the meaning of section 14 is defined as a use which concerns the whole community or promotes the general interest in its relation to any legitimate object of government. Gilmer v. Lime Point, supra, 18 Cal. 229. To make a use public in character, a duty must fall on the person or corporation holding the property appropriated by eminent domain to furnish the public with the use intended and the public must be entitled to use or enjoy the property taken. Gravelly Ford Canal Co. v. Pope & Talbot Land Co., 36 Cal.App. 556, 178 P. 150; see Thayer v. California Development Co., 164 Cal. 117, 128 P. 21. Hence it is clear that the ordinary taking of private property for the purpose of constructing storm drainage systems is a taking for a public use. The reasons for such a taking are obviously to provide adequate normal drainage, to control flood waters and to provide irrigation waters. The public becomes principally entitled to the use and enjoyment of the private property taken for such purposes.

The drainage system in the present case was constructed pursuant to the Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, Stats. 1937, Ch. 265, p. 566, amended by Stats. 1949, Ch. 496, p. 854; Stats. 1953, Ch. 546, § 1, p. 1805; Water Code, Uncodified Acts, Act 2208, p. 179, which enables County Boards of Supervisors to create and govern a storm drainage maintenance district whenever the maintenance of storm drainage improvements or other watercourses or drainage channels within a territory is not otherwise provided for by law. The act provides that "* * * Such maintenance may include any or all of the following work: the cleaning, repairing, renewal, replacement, widening or straightening of existing storm drain structures, watercourses or drainage channels, and the installation of appurtenant structures when necessary for the adequate functioning of such drainage facilities. Said district may also construct additional storm drain channels or structures and maintain the same whenever necessary to provide proper and adequate drainage of the surface waters in the district." Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, supra, § 1. The proper maintenance of existing drainage systems thus became a matter of public policy and the subject of an independent statute.

[14] The consequences of faulty maintenance may assume public importance equal in some instances to the original construction. The ultimate objects of construction and maintenance are similar if not coextensive. In some instances, where the original construction artificially diverts a stream from its natural course, more risk of damage to surrounding property may be created from improper maintenance than would exist had the stream been permitted to remain in its natural state. If the original construction had as its function the expeditious drainage of surface waters, then that public purpose is served equally by the proper maintenance of the improvement once it is made. It follows that the taking or damaging of private property for the maintenance of an existing public improvement involving a deliberate act which has as its object the direct or indirect accomplishment of the purpose of the improvement as a whole constitutes a taking or damaging of property for a public use and the owner of such property is entitled to compensation.

[15] The precise purpose of the defendants' raising the bank on the far side of the ditch is not made clear in the complaint. But it falls within that category of drainage maintenance described in the statute. The rather obscure line between the concepts of "construction" and "maintenance" is disclosed by any attempt to define them in mutually exclusive terms and to characterize the raising of a bank of an existing ditch as one or the other. If the "maintenance" consists of an alteration of the ditch by raising one of the banks, then in a material sense "maintenance" becomes a specie of "construction." Had the bank been raised during the original construction it would have been part of the overall project and hence within the rule of Clement v. State Reclamation Board, supra, 35 Cal.2d 628, 220 P.2d 897, and House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control District, supra, 25 Cal.2d 384, 153 P.2d 950. The defendants' argument that damage from maintenance is beyond the purview of section 14 invites an artificial distinction which would turn simply upon the passage of time between the original construction and the subsequent alteration and must therefore be rejected.

[16] Nor does this application of section 14 subject the state to general tort liability under the theory of eminent domain. The defendants contend that the imposition of a duty to compensate for improper maintenance of a public improvement would impose liability for the act of negligently forgetting to close a sluice gate or other negligent acts committed during the routine day to day operation of the public improvement. But the raising of a ditch bank appears on its face to be a deliberate act carrying with it the purpose of fulfilling one or another of the public objects of the project as a whole. Here the raising of the bank is not an accident or an act in itself resulting from carelessness. It is deliberate. The damage to property in this instance resulted not from immediate carelessness but from a failure to appreciate the probability that, functioning as deliberately conceived, the public improvement as altered and maintained would result in some damage to private property. Damage resulting from negligence in the routine operation having no relation to the function of the project as conceived is not within the scope of the rule applied in the present case. See Miller v. City of Palo Alto, 208 Cal. 74, 280 P. 108; McNeil v. City of Montague, 124 Cal.App.2d 326, 268 P.2d 497; Western Assurance Co. v. Sacramento & S. J. Drainage District, 72 Cal. App. 68, 237 P. 59; Annotation, 2 A.L.R.2d 677.

[17, 18] The plaintiffs, as stated, also allege that the collection of debris and stumps in the ditch raised an obstruction which caused the water to back up on their land. If this was due to the mere negligent operation of the ditch system, it is not within the scope of liability as a taking or damaging for a public use under section 14. If, on the other hand, the obstruction of the ditch was in some way part of the plan of maintenance or construction, then liability would attach because the means of carrying out the plan of construction and maintenance are immaterial. See Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 123, 119 P.2d 717; Commonwealth v. Kelley, 314 Ky. 581, 236 S.W.2d 695; Letcher County v. Hogg, 209 Ky. 182, 272 S.W. 423; Stith v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 109 Ky. 168, 58 S.W. 600. The allegations in the complaint in the present case make the plaintiffs' theory clear. They allege that the collection of debris and stumps was part of the construction and that the taking was for a public use. The presence of debris and stumps was therefore properly characterized to bring it within the scope of section 14. This analysis would also apply to plaintiffs' allegation that a pipe placed across the ditch similarly obstructed the flow of water. It follows that the demur-rers should not have been sustained on the ground that the complaint fails to state a cause of action under section 14.

[19] Plaintiffs next contend that the complaint states a cause of action in tort, independent of the eminent domain theory, as against the defendant County. Section 53051 of the Government Code waives the immunity of the County from suit in the following terms: "A local agency is liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public property if the legislative body, board, or person authorized to remedy the condition: (a) Had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition. (b) For a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge or receiving notice, failed to remedy the condition or to take action reasonably necessary to protect the public against the condition." Complying with these requirements, the complaint alleges, as indicated, that on March 15, 1952 the ditch was constructed and maintained in a dangerous and defective condition; that as the proximate result thereof plaintiffs' property was damaged; that each of the defendants had knowledge thereof and failed to remedy said condition within a reasonable time after such knowledge. These are sufficient allegations to state a cause of action under Government Code, § 53051. See Silva v. Fresno County, 63 Cal.App.2d 253, 146 P.2d 520.

[20] The defendant County asserts that the complaint is defective for not alleging that the property claimed to be kept in a dangerous and defective condition is property owned by the County. There is no merit in this contention for it ignores the definition of the language of section 53051 found in the Code itself. Section 53050 defines "public property" as meaning "* * * public street, highway, building, park, grounds, works, or property." The drainage system and ditch involved in this case are clearly "public works" and therefore "public property" within the meaning of the Code. Young v. County of Ventura, 39 Cal.App.2d 732, 104 P.2d 102. Hence the complaint states a cause of action against the county under Government Code, § 53051.

[21] The defendant District contends that the trial court's order sustaining its demurrer was proper because the District's immunity from suit as a state instrumentality has not been waived under section 53051. The District argues that that section waives immunity only with respect to "local agencies" which are defined in section 53050 to include "* * * city, county, or school district", and the Storm Drain Maintenance District is not such a local agency. This argument, however, rests upon the incorrect assumption that the District is a governmental agency separate and distinct from the County.

A reading of the Storm Drain Maintenance District Act supports the conclusion that the District is a unit created for purposes of taxes and administration. The operational powers of the District are vested in the County Board of Supervisors and other county officers. The Board creates and governs the District, § 1, and has power to enter into contracts for the District, make rules and regulations and do all things necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act, § 5. The Board of Supervisors is given power to acquire and dispose of property for the District but only in the name of the County, § 5. Taxes are levied by the Board of Supervisors but they must be levied and collected at the same time and manner as general county taxes; and when collected are paid into the county treasury to the credit of the District and may be used only for District purposes, § 7. Storm Drain Maintenance Districts created pursuant to the Act are not given the power to sue and be sued; nor are they created as independent public corporations.

[22] In other acts dealing with water control problems, the Legislature made clear provision for the creation of state instrumentalities with separate legal personalities. (See Acts collected in 1 Water Code, Uncodified Acts.) The Ventura County Flood Control Act, 1 Water Code, Uncodified Acts, No. 8955, p. 899 et seq., for example, provides that the "Ventura County Flood Control District is hereby declared to be a body corporate and politic", and the District's powers include: perpetual succession, the power to sue and be sued, to take title to real and personal property, to incur indebtedness and issue bonds, to levy taxes, to make contracts and to employ labor, § 7. The Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, on the other hand, vests the defendant District's much less extensive powers in the County Board of Supervisors rather than in the District itself. Neither the legislative intention nor the stated purposes of the Storm Drain Maintenance District Act requires the Districts created pursuant thereto to enjoy a legal personality separate from the County. See Anaheim Sugar Co. v. County of Orange, 181 Cal. 212, 183 P. 809; Mortimer v. Acquisition & Imp. Dist. No. 36, 105 Cal.App.2d 298, 233 P.2d 113; Mortimer v. Acquisition & Imp. Dist. No. 36, 79 Cal. App.2d 404, 180 P.2d 355. It therefore seems clear that the Saticoy Storm Drain Maintenance District was improperly joined as a party defendant.

[23] As against the individual members of the Board of Supervisors, it appears from the allegations of the complaint that in 1939 the system of ditches and levees designed to divert the waters of the Franklin Barranca in a southwesterly direction was wholly under the control of the County of Ventura and the Saticoy Storm Drain Maintenance District; that in "the doing of said work the direction and control thereof was at all times in the years 1950, 1951, and 1952 under the direct supervision of the defendants," the individual members of the Board of Supervisors, naming them; that in March, 1952 the drainage ditch "was constructed and maintained in a dangerous and defective condition. That the Board of Supervisors of the County of Ventura and each of the members thereof and each and all of the defendants failed and neglected to remedy said condition within a reasonable time after such notice or knowledge."

The plaintiffs concede that there is no liability as against the individual members of the Board under the law of eminent domain. Nor is there any allegation that the individual members of the Board exceeded their authority under the Storm Drain Maintenance District Act. Hence the only appropriate theory under which the plaintiffs could proceed against the board members personally was in accordance with the provisions of Government Code, § 1953. That section provides: "No officer of the State or of any district, county, or city is liable for any damage or injury to any person or property resulting from the defective or dangerous condition of any public property, unless all of the following first appear: (a) The injury sustained was the direct and proximate result of such defective or dangerous condition. (b) The officer had notice of such defective or dangerous condition or such defective or dangerous condition was directly attributable to work done by him, or under his direction, in a negligent, careless or unworkmanlike manner. (c) He had authority and it was his duty to remedy such condition at the expense of the State or of a political subdivision thereof and that funds for that purpose were immediately available to him. (d) Within a reasonable time after receiving such notice and being able to remedy such condition, he failed so to do, or failed to take reasonable steps to give adequate warning of such condition. (e) The damage or injury was sustained while such public property was being carefully used, and due care was being exercised to avoid the danger due to such condition."

It may be assumed that the complaint alleges facts which are sufficient to put in issue the requirements enumerated in subdivisions (a) and (b). But it is not alleged in accordance with subdivision (c) that the supervisors individually had the authority and the duty to remedy the condition at the expense of the county and that funds for that purpose were immediately available to them individually. All that the plaintiffs allege in accordance with subdivision (d) is that the defendants "failed and neglected to remedy said condition within a reasonable time after such notice or knowledge." It is not alleged in accordance with that subdivision that the defendants were able to remedy the defective or dangerous condition or that they failed, as an alternative to remedying the condition, to take reasonable steps to give adequate warning of such condition. Nor is it alleged in accordance with subdivision (e) that the plaintiffs were exercising due care to avoid the damage to their property resulting from the defective or dangerous condition. The plaintiffs contend that allegations in accordance with subdivisions (c), (d) and (e) are unnecessary because the present case involves an injury arising out of construction and maintenance of the public improvement under the direct supervision of the Board. They argue that the requirements of those subdivisions must be alleged only where the injury arises out of a defective or dangerous condition due to the negligence of persons not under the defendants' supervision or from accidental or natural causes existing subsequent to the original construction or maintenance, citing Moore v. Burton, 75 Cal.App. 395, 242 P. 902. But there is no language in the statute which supports that construction. Section 1953 provides that no liability shall attach unless "all" of the enumerated conditions are shown to exist. The requirements of the individual defendant officers' authority and duty under the law to remedy the defective or dangerous condition, the availability of funds in their hands individually for that purpose, their ability to remedy the condition and failure to do so within a reasonable time or to give adequate warning, and the plaintiffs' exercise of due care in the premises are all material allegations. Anything inferred to the contrary from Moore v. Burton, 75 Cal.App. 395, 242 P. 902, is disapproved. Having failed to allege fully the matters contained in subdivisions (c), (d) and (e), the plaintiffs have not stated a cause of action against the individual members of the Board.

[24] Nor have the plaintiffs shown that the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining the individual board members' demurrer without leave to amend. It does not appear that the plaintiffs could allege the substance of subdivision (c) of section 1953 even if they were given another opportunity to amend their complaint, because no board member, acting individually, has the duty and authority to remedy a defective or dangerous condition at the County's expense. The Storm Drain Maintenance District Act, which authorized the County to undertake the improvement work involved in the present case, empowers only the County Board of Supervisors acting as a body to carry out the improvement and maintenance purposes of the act and to order payment therefor from available public funds. An individual member of the Board of Supervisors has authority neither to undertake improvement work nor to order warrants to be drawn against the District's funds which are paid into the county treasury for the purposes set forth in the act. Hence the trial court properly sustained the board members' demurrer without leave to amend.

[25, 26] Finally, the plaintiffs correctly contend that the trial court should not have sustained the County's special demurrer on the ground that the complaint was uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible. The County argues that the complaint was defective because in one instance it refers to a "pipe" as an obstruction in the ditch and in other instances to "obstructions" without precise specification. In this respect the County is insisting upon undue refinement in pleading. This court stated in Leet v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, at page 619, 155 P.2d 42, 49, 158 A.L.R. 1008, that "* * * The essence of the matter is fairness in pleading to give the defendant such notice by the complaint that he may prepare his case." Thus considered, the allegations of the complaint are neither uncertain, ambiguous nor unintelligible.

The judgment in favor of the County of Ventura is reversed with directions to overrule its demurrers. As to the Saticoy Storm Drain Maintenance District and the individual members of the Ventura County Board of Supervisors, the judgment is affirmed, the County of Ventura to bear the costs of appeal.

McCOMB, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner is seeking the issuance of a writ of mandate to respondents directing them to increase the assessed valuation of all taxable property on the local rolls of Tulare County in compliance with an order of the State Board of Equalization dated August 15, 1955.

The order in question was issued by the State Board of Equalization upon findings made by said board following a hearing held by it on July 25, 1955, entitled "In the Matter of the Equalization of the Local Roll of Tulare County for the Fiscal Year 1955-1956" and conducted pursuant to the provisions of Article XIII, Section 9, Constitution of the State of California and sections 1831-1834 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

The board found that the "average ratio of assessed value to market value of the taxable property within the County of Tulare is such that the addition of twenty-three (23) per centum to the valuation of said county is required to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said

local assessment roll with the assessment of property in the several counties of the State" and ordered that "the assessed value of all taxable property in the local assessment roll for the fiscal year 1955-56 of the County of Tulare, except such property as is not subject to the laws generally applicable to the assessment and equalization of property by reason of specific constitutional provisions relating thereto, be increased by twenty-three (23) per centum."

Also on August 15, 1955, the State Board of Equalization notified the County Auditor and the Board of Supervisors of the County of Tulare, and the City Council of each city in that county, of its order and directed the County Auditor to increase the assessment of all property affected by its order by making the corresponding changes in the assessment roll.

On August 30, 1955, a proceeding was commenced in the Superior Court of Tulare County by the County of Tulare, as plaintiff, against the State Board of Equalization, the members thereof, and the County Auditor of said county. In said action the County of Tulare challenges the regularity of the proceedings before the State Board of Equalization, the findings of the board and the validity of its order. On the same date an alternative writ of mandate was issued in that action by the superior court, directing the board and its members to set aside their order of August 15, 1955, or show cause as to why they had not done so, directing the County Auditor to omit from the county assessment roll the 23 per cent increase as ordered by said board, commanding the board to show cause why its proceedings, insofar as they related to the County of Tulare, should not be reviewed according to the provisions of section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and ordering that pending the determination of said action the order of the board be stayed.

On September 1, 1955, the Board of Supervisors of Tulare County fixed the 1955 tax rate for said county, pursuant to section 2151 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, computing such rates without the 23 per cent increase ordered by the State Board of Equalization. Similarly, on August 31, 1955, the City Council of the City of Woodlake in Tulare County, which city collects its taxes on the county roll under the consolidated system of taxation, fixed its tax rate without including in its computation the 23 per cent increase ordered by the board. Each of these levies was made on the last day on which these entities could levy tax rates for 1955, and was in compliance with the mandate of the superior court.

This court issued an alternative writ of mandate returnable September 30, 1955.

[1] The Legislature, in section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, has provided an appropriate method of reviewing acts of a statewide administrative and quasi-judicial agency such as the State Board of Equalization. (Temescal Water Co. v. Department of Public Works, 44 Cal. 2d 90, 280 P.2d 1.) The action of the State Board of Equalization is reviewable in the superior court pursuant to the provisions of section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (Temescal Water Co. v. Department of Public Works, supra; Eastern-Columbia, Inc., v. County of Los Angeles, 61 Cal.App.2d 734, 745, 43 P.2d 992.)

[2] Also Rule 56(a) (1), Rules on Original Proceedings in Reviewing Courts, 36 Cal.2d 41, provides: "If the petition might lawfully have been made to a lower court in the first instance, it shall set forth the circumstances which, in the opinion of the petitioner, render it proper that the writ should issue originally from the reviewing court." In the instant case, application has in fact been made by respondent to the superior court having jurisdiction and that court having assumed jurisdiction, no valid reason appears why this court should take original jurisdiction in the matter. (Cf. Roma Macaroni Factory v. Giambastiani, 219 Cal. 435, 436 [1], 27 P.2d 371; Brougher v. Board of Public Works, 205 Cal. 426, 440 [6], 271 P. 487.)

[3] Where, as in the instant case, it appears that there is pending another action in the superior court seeking the same result, involving the same parties and the same issues, this court will generally not assume jurisdiction. (Irvine v. Gibson, 19

Cal.2d 14, 16 [3], 118 P.2d 812.) When another court with concurrent jurisdiction has assumed the same in an action seeking the same relief between the same parties, this court ordinarily will not assume jurisdiction. (W. R. Grace & Co. v. California Emp. Comm., 24 Cal.2d 720, 727 [2], 151 P. 2d 215; McMullen v. Glenn-Colusa Irr. Dist., 17 Cal.App.2d 696, 701 [6], 62 P.2d 1083.)

The exceptional facts presented in Perry v. Jordan, 34 Cal.2d 87, 207 P.2d 47, are not here present. The cited case involved a statewide election, callable at the governor's discretion, for a special or general election, under conditions as to which he could not act while litigation was pending, and in such case the parties were not the same. Therefore, a plea in abatement would not lie. Such is not the situation in this case. In the present case none of the special factors warranting the original writ in the Perry case exist. The dispute involved is solely between the State Board of Equalization and the County of Tulare. No question is involved as to the other 13 counties which have been the subject of similar proceedings before the state board because (a) the hearings were conducted separately and (b) the order in question was limited solely to the single county.

For the foregoing reasons the alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged and the petition denied.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

I would issue the peremptory writ forthwith for the following reasons:

(1) The State Board of Equalization not only had jurisdiction but had the duty under the California Constitution to equalize the valuation of taxable property in the several counties, Const. Art. XIII, § 9; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 1831; People v. Dunn, 59 Cal. 328, 330-331; Baldwin v. Ellis, 68 Cal. 495, 499-500, 9 P. 652, despite the suspension of Chapter 1466, Statutes of 1949. (Stats.1951, ch. 1554; Stats.1953, ch. 362; Stats.1955, ch. 256; see, 18 Ops. Cal.Atty.Gen. 66.)

(2) There is a compelling necessity for such equalization: (a) State assessed property (largely public utility property) and locally assessed property are taxed at the same rate. Const. Art. XIII, § 14. To prevent discrimination against either class of property in violation of Article XIII, § 1 of the Constitution, both must be assessed at the same level. Since it is implicit in the Board's order that it assesses utility property in Tulare County at a higher level than the County Assessor assesses property in the county, a prima facie case of discrimination against utility property exists if the assessments are not equalized. (b) The amount of school equalization aid (see, Education Code, §§ 7031-7038; Report of the Senate Committee on State and Local Taxation, Part Six, March 1953, pp. 15-17) distributed by the state to school districts depends in part on the assessed value of property in the district. In the current fiscal year more than $84,000,000 will be distributed by the state to school districts. To prevent discrimination among school districts in the distribution of this aid, intercounty assessments must be at the same level. (c) Equitable assignment of priorities in the advancement of state funds for school construction and uniformity as to repayment of such advances, Ed. Code, §§ 5044.5, 5053 et seq., 7705, 7725 et seq., uniform application of tax rate and bonded indebtedness limitations (e. g. Ed. Code, §§ 6357, 7431), equitable distribution of taxes of districts embracing areas in more than one county (e. g. Ed. Code, § 6381; Health & Safety Code, §§ 14600-14760), and uniform application of householders' and veterans' exemptions, Const. Art. XIII, §§ 1¼, 10½ and real property ownership qualifications of recipients of welfare aid, Welfare & Institutions Code, §§ 1520, 2164, 3047, require intercounty assessments at the same level. Thus, if the Board's order in this case is valid and is not enforced, Tulare County will enjoy a discriminatory advantage with respect to the matters described under (b) and (c) over the thirteen other counties that have complied with the Board's orders to increase their assessment rolls. (d) Should a state ad valorem tax be levied (see, Const. Art. IV, § 34(a); Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 28001-28011), intercounty equalization is essential to insure the same level of assessment throughout the state.

(3) Following equalization by the State Board of Equalization the county officials had no discretion to exercise with respect to the board's order but were under a ministerial duty to obey it. People's Water Co. v. Boromeo, 31 Cal.App. 270, 272-273, 160 P. 574. Mandamus is the traditional remedy to enforce that duty. People v. Dunn, 59 Cal. 328; Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 480-481, 50 P. 644.

(4) Since the time schedule established by statute for the delivery of the roll, fixing the tax rate, and the execution of affidavits is directory and not jurisdictional, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 24;¹ Universal Consolidated Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 362-363, 153 P.2d 746; Ryan v. Byram, 4 Cal.2d 596, 603-607, 51 P.2d 872; Whiting Finance Co. v. Hopkins, 199 Cal. 428, 436, 249 P. 853; Buswell v. Board of Supervisors, etc., 116 Cal. 351, 353-354, 48 P. 226; see, Steele v. County of San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 785, 786-788, 93 P. 1020, an order of this court to the county officials to do now what they should have done will not invalidate the tax levy. Refusal of county officials to perform their ministerial duties within the time prescribed cannot frustrate the equalization demanded by the Constitution or render this court impotent to enforce it. Moreover, the contention that it would be an idle act for this court to issue a writ in this case applies with greater force to an order of the Superior Court under section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure in view of the delay necessarily involved in getting a final determination of this court following an appeal from such an order. If section 1094.5 affords the appropriate remedy in cases of this kind, and if court orders would be futile if not made within the statutory time schedule for completing the taxing process, county officials need only to proceed under that section in the Superior Court to prevent the constitutional provisions for equalization from ever being carried out, for a final determination could not be reached in such proceeding within the time schedule.²

(5) The fact that proceeding No. 47478 is now pending in the Superior Court in Tulare County does not bar the present proceeding. Compelling reasons for an immediate final determination by this court

1. "No act in all the proceedings for raising revenue by taxation is illegal on account of informality or because not completed within the required time."

In San Diego & A. Ry. Co. v. California State Board of Equalization, 164 Cal. 41, 43, 127 P. 153, 154, relied on by respondents, the assessment roll had been delivered "in accordance with law." In the present case the assessment roll has not been delivered in accordance with law. The auditor did not enter the changes ordered by the Board, nor did he certify that he had "corrected it as required by the State Board of Equalization." Rev. & Tax. Code, § 2601.

2. The equalization of the local roll by the Board of Supervisors is not completed until the third Monday in July, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 1603, and no action can be taken by the State Board of Equalization on that roll until after that time. Koch v. Board of Supervisors, 138 Cal.App. 343, 348, 32 P.2d 163. The State Board of Equalization sits from the third Monday in July to and including the third Monday in August, and it is during that time that it is required to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the several counties of the state. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 1831; Admin. Code, Title 18, Rule 2700. On or before September 1st of each year the County Board of Supervisors fixes the rates of county and district taxes. Government Code, § 29120. The auditor must deliver the secured roll "corrected * * * as required by the State Board of Equalization" on or before October 1st. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 2601. One half the real property taxes on the secured roll and all of the personal property taxes are due November 1st, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 2605, and, if unpaid, are delinquent December 10th. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 2617. The second half of the real property taxes is due January 20th, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 2606, and, if unpaid, is delinquent April 20th. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 2618.

are present here as they were in Perry v. Jordan, 34 Cal.2d 87, 90-91, 207 P.2d 47, in which a prior proceeding in mandamus was also pending in the Superior Court. Although completion of the taxing process within the statutory time schedule is not jurisdictional, it is of vital public importance that it be completed as soon as possible to avoid complete disruption of the taxing process.

The entire record is now before this court, and only confusion can result from the refusal to make a final determination now as to the validity of the Board's order, the identical question that would have to be determined by this court following an appeal from an order of the Superior Court. Since the jurisdiction of the State Board of Equalization to equalize the valuation of property in the several counties is derived directly from the Constitution, Const. Art. XIII, § 9, the court does not exercise an independent judgment on the evidence, and the Board's determinations of fact are therefore not subject to re-examination in a trial de novo in the Superior Court. Only questions of law are presented, namely: Did the Board proceed without or in excess of its jurisdiction? Did it commit any prejudicial errors of law or abuse of discretion? Is its order supported by substantial evidence? Covert v. State Board of Equalization, 29 Cal.2d 125, 131-132, 173 P.2d 545.

(6) The record discloses that the County of Tulare, after full opportunity afforded by the Board to show cause why the valuations on the local roll of the county should not be increased, not only failed to show that the action of the Board was arbitrary or capricious, but failed to carry its burden of proof or even produce any substantial evidence of the ratio of the assessed value on the local roll to market value, see, Admin. Code, Title 18, Rule 2704; Howard County v. State Board of Equalization, 158 Neb. 339, 63 N.W.2d 441, 448, that the State Board of Equalization did not act without or in excess of its jurisdiction, or commit errors of law or abuse its discretion, and that there is ample evidence to support its order. This case was tried before a most able and conscientious judge who heard the testimony of the witnesses and observed their demeanor and arrived at the conclusion that the will here involved was the result of the undue influence of the proponent. To my mind there can be no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the trial court in this case, and the reversal of the judgment denying the admission of the will to probate amounts to nothing less than a redetermination of the factual issues by the District Court of Appeal and a majority of this Court—passing upon the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses.

I cannot refrain from again repeating that which I have so often stated in recent years that in certain types of cases a majority of this Court has seen fit to usurp the function of the jury and trial judge in determining issues of fact. Rodabaugh v. Tekus, 39 Cal.2d 290, 246 P.2d 663; Better Food Markets v. American Dist. Teleg. Co., 40 Cal.2d 179, 253 P.2d 10, 42 A.L.R.2d 580; *Atkinson v. The types of cases in which this Court has seen fit to pass upon factual issues are those relating to will contests and cases in which damages for personal injuries are sought. In criminal cases, however, a majority of this Court has seen fit to hold that a mere suspicion is sufficient to support a conviction of crime. Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 281 P.2d 250.

In my dissenting opinions in In re Estate of Lingenfelter, 38 Cal.2d 571, at page 588, 241 P.2d 990 and In re Estate of Welch, 43 Cal.2d 173, at page 181, 272 P.2d 512, I endeavored to express my views with respect to the ruthless disregard by a majority of this Court of the constitutional and statutory provisions relating to will contests. What I said there is equally applicable here and I commend the reading of those opinions by those who may be involved in this type of litigation.

I would grant respondents' petition for a hearing and affirm the judgment of the trial court.

GUARDIANSHIP of the Person and Estate of De Witt Clinton COOKINGHAM, an Incompetent Person.

Ella Marie ORMSBY, as guardian, etc., Appellant,

v.

De Witt Clinton COOKINGHAM, Respondent.
L.A. 23447.

Supreme Court of California.
Oct. 28, 1955.

Proceeding brought for judicial approval of the final account of a guardian wherein she took credit for fees of an attorney and a psychiatrist for services rendered in connection with opposition to ward's petition for judicial determination of his restoration to capacity. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, John Gee Clark, J., disallowed credits taken by guardian, and she appealed. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that the lower court had erred in refusing to hear evidence bearing upon propriety of guardian's hiring of attorney and psychiatrist.

Reversed.

Opinion, 284 P.2d 51, vacated.

1. Mental Health §231

In passing upon propriety of expenditures by guardian for mentally incompetent person, court is governed by equitable consideration relating to law of trusts. Probate Code, §§ 1400, 1556.

2. Mental Health §169

One who in good faith incurs expenses reasonably necessary to support a petition for restoration to capacity may recover those charges from incompetent's estate.

3. Mental Health §168

Mere fact that ward has been released from detention does not establish his restoration to capacity.

4. Mental Health §233

Expenses of an unsuccessful opposition to petition to establish ward's restoration to capacity may constitute reasonable expenses incurred in execution of guardian's duties. Probate Code, § 1502.

5. Mental Health ☞233

That guardian did not obtain court's approval before retaining attorney and psychiatrist in opposing ward's petition for restoration to capacity did not preclude allowance of guardian's claim for attorney's fees and psychiatrist's fees.

6. Guardian and Ward ☞48

Guardian is without power to bind his ward's estate to a contract unless he is authorized to do so by statute or order of court, and without such authorization liability of guardian is personal with right to be reimbursed from ward's estate for expenditure, if it is proper. Probate Code, §§ 1509, 1556.

7. Guardian and Ward ☞157

Burden is upon guardian to justify items in his account.

8. Trial ☞45(1)

In proceeding on guardian's petition for judicial approval of account in which she took credit for fees of an attorney and psychiatrist for services in connection with her opposition to ward's petition for restoration to capacity, court's announced conclusion that guardian should have obtained order of court authorizing employment of attorney and expert witness dispensed with necessity of offer of proof as to worth of the services.

Bailie, Turner, Lake & Sprague and Richard W. Sprague, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Carl O. Kowol, Montrose, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

In her seventh and final account, Ella Marie Ormsby, the guardian of the person and estate of De Witt Clinton Cookingham, took credit for the fees of an attorney and a psychiatrist. Her appeal is from the order disallowing the amounts claimed.

Cookingham was committed to Patton State Hospital in 1942, and Mrs. Ormsby, his daughter, was appointed guardian of his person and estate. He remained in Patton until October, 1953, when he received temporary leave. He was then 79 years old. Through his guardian ad litem and present attorney, he petitioned for a judicial determination of his restoration to capacity. Mrs. Ormsby contested the petition and through attorneys retained by her employed a psychiatrist to examine Cookingham. Without prior authorization from the court, she paid the psychiatrist a fee of $250 and agreed to pay her attorneys $750, principally for representing her in that proceeding.

Testimony tending to support the petition was presented by two experts produced by Cookingham and two others appointed by the court. The psychiatrist employed by Mrs. Ormsby gave testimony denying the alleged restoration to capacity. The court granted the petition and approved payment from the ward's estate of fees to the experts who testified in support of the incompetent.

In her final account, the guardian claimed the amounts of the fees of the psychiatrist and the attorneys employed by her. After a hearing, the trial court sustained the exceptions filed by the ward and surcharged the guardian for the psychiatrist's fee and $625 of the amount paid to her attorneys.

It was found that the "guardian secured no prior approval of the Probate Court authorizing her to employ a psychiatrist to examine said ward, or to employ attorneys to oppose said petition [for restoration]; that petitioner as guardian owed no duty to the ward, or to the Court, to investigate the competency of the ward, or to oppose or take any other action in connection with such proceedings for restoration to capacity and for termination of guardianship; that the acts of employing a psychiatrist and attorneys were unauthorized and not a justifiable charge against the guardianship estate."

Mrs. Ormsby's position is that the trial judge erred in rejecting evidence that the expenses incurred were for the ward's best interest, that he ruled instead, as a matter of law, that compensation could not be allowed because the opposition to the petition for restoration was unsuccessful and undertaken without prior authorization by the court. Those grounds of themselves, the respondent replies, are a sufficient basis for the order disallowing the expenses, but in any event the record includes substantial evidence justifying a finding that the expenses were not incurred in the ward's best interests.

[1] Section 1556 of the Probate Code provides that a guardian "shall be allowed the amount of his reasonable expenses incurred in the execution of his trust." The statutes do not specify the duties of the guardian, except that he must manage the estate "frugally and without waste, and apply the income, as far as may be necessary, to the comfortable and suitable support, maintenance and education of the ward and his family." Prob.Code, § 1502. In passing upon the propriety of expenditures, the court is governed by equitable considerations relating to the law of trusts. Prob.Code, § 1400; In re Estate of Clanton, 171 Cal. 381, 387, 153 P. 459.

[2] It is generally held that one who in good faith incurs expenses reasonably necessary to the support of a petition for restoration to capacity may recover those charges from the incompetent's estate. See cases cited in annotation 121 A.L.R. 1501, and California follows this rule. Stone v. Conkle, 31 Cal.App.2d 348, 351, 88 P.2d 197; In re Estate of Doyle, 126 Cal.App. 646, 648, 14 P.2d 920. The Stone and Doyle cases treat such services as "necessaries" sufficient to support an implied in law promise on the part of the incompetent to pay for them.

[3,4] In no California case has the question of whether the expenses of an unsuccessful opposition to a petition for restoration may constitute "reasonable expenses incurred in the execution of" the guardian's duties been decided. McClenahan v. Howard, 50 Cal.App. 309, 195 P. 68, relied upon by Cookingham, decides only that the testimony of a psychiatrist concerning his observations of the asserted incompetent was not among the "necessaries" and "benefits" to such person which would imply a contract to pay for them. Other cases relied upon by Cookingham are not in point.

In other states, the few decisions discussing this question follow the leading case of Palmer v. Palmer, 38 N.H. 418, where the guardian was allowed his reasonable expenses incurred in a good faith opposition to an application for a termination of the guardianship. The court said: "The revocation of the guardianship in such cases is not to be made until the cause for which it is granted is removed. If this is a matter so obvious that no reasonable doubt can be entertained on the subject, it is the duty of the guardian to promote instead of resisting the revocation. But it is equally his duty, when the case is such as to admit of question, to present the facts fully to the judge. The interests of the ward, as well as sound reasons of public policy, require that the investigation should not be an ex parte one. The ward is not required or expected to produce evidence tending to show that the cause of guardianship is not removed. If the guardian should refrain from opposition for the reason that he apprehends the result may possibly show that the cause is removed, and he thereby be exposed to loss of the expenses incurred, the consequence will be that in many cases the revocation will be made upon unsatisfactory evidence, and when possibly the interests of the ward require that the guardianship should continue unrevoked. When the guardian * * * proceeds in good faith, and in the exercise of a sound discretion, to try a doubtful question, the recovery of his reasonable expenses incurred in trying it should not be made to depend upon the result." at page 420; American Nat. Bank v. Bradford, 28 Tenn. App. 239, 188 S.W.2d 971, 980; cf. In re Larner, 39 Misc. 377, 79 N.Y.S. 836, 838.

The reasoning of the Palmer case is persuasive. The guardian could not assume merely from his ward's discharge and subsequent petition for restoration that he was capable of taking care of himself. In re Estate of Kay, 30 Cal.2d 215, 225, 181 P.2d 1. To discourage the guardian's inquiry as to the ward's status, in effect, would allow the petition for restoration to be considered without the presentation of all of the facts. But the purpose of the law is to protect a ward from being "deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons", Prob.Code, § 1460, and courts must scrupulously protect the rights of persons whose competency is in question.

[5] It is contended, however, that even if the guardian in the exercise of his duties may make unsuccessful opposition to a petition for restoration to capacity, he may not be compensated from the ward's estate for expenditures in connection with such opposition without prior authorization by the court. A variation of this contention is that the guardian may protect himself from the possibility of being made personally liable for such expenditures by a petition for instructions under section 1516 of the Probate Code, but failing to do so he opposes the petition for restoration at the peril of being personally liable if the opposition is unsuccessful.

In states other than California, it appears to be the rule that, except for necessities furnished a ward, the guardian may not be compensated from the ward's estate for expenditures made without authorization of the court. See cases collected in O'Mealey v. Grum, 186 Okl. 697, 100 P.2d 265, 130 A.L.R. 113. In Re Estate of Clanton, 171 Cal. 381, 153 P. 459, it was said: "Under our liberal system, if the expenditures of the guardian have been just and equitable, they will be allowed, regardless of the obtaining or failure to secure orders of the court authorizing them. 'The criterion for determining whether a past maintenance should be allowed is whether a chancery court would have authorized it in advance.' (Citation.) We are bound to hold that the expenditures for which the guardian was given credit were equitable and just charges against the estate of the incompetent because the findings of the court were in favor of the account, and there is no contention that the findings are not supported by the evidence. The court did not err in making allowance for expenditures made without previous authority." 171 Cal. at page 387, 153 P. at page 462.

Cookingham seeks to distinguish the Clanton case and decisions following it, upon the ground that they concerned expenditures which generally are held to be necessities. In re Estate of Schluter, 209 Cal. 286, 289-290, 286 P. 1008 [support and maintenance of ward]; Guardianship of Ewing, 42 Cal.App.2d 629, 630, 109 P.2d 748 [personal needs of the incompetent]. He relies upon In re Guardianship of Stallings, 85 Cal.App.2d 443, 193 P.2d 114, in which the court considered the charge for an expenditure not made for a necessity. There it was said: "Some of the items which were disallowed might possibly have been authorized by the court if application therefor had been made preceding the expenditure. An order authorizing expenditures for reasonable amounts and for justifiable purposes would have protected the guardian. Since he did not procure the orders he must be responsible for those the court has disallowed. He is in the position of any other fiduciary who acts without the previous authorization of the court—his obligations are not chargeable to the estate of the beneficiary." 85 Cal.App.2d at pages 447-448, 193 P.2d at pages 116-117.

There is no compelling reason for requiring a guardian personally to bear the cost of an unsuccessful opposition to his ward's application for restoration, conducted in good faith, merely because he failed to obtain prior authorization. Indeed, it may be extremely difficult for the guardian to determine the position he should take without professional advice at the commencement of the proceeding. If it is conducted in good faith, the guardian should be allowed the reasonable expenses incurred in the opposition. If not in good faith, the expense, of course, should not be allowed. But there is ample opportunity to determine that question when the guardian's account is presented for approval. To the extent that it indicates a holding contrary to these conclusions, In re

Guardianship of Stallings, supra, is disapproved.

Cookingham contends that the Clanton line of decisions no longer is controlling. He relies upon the 1951 amendment to section 1556 of the Probate Code, as construed by this court in Clark v. State Bar, 39 Cal.2d 161, 246 P.2d 1, in which it was pointed out that, "[a]s amended section 1556 is substantially similar to Probate Code, section 904, providing for allowance of commissions to executors and administrators. Under section 904 an executor or administrator is not entitled to his commissions until after court approval." 39 Cal. 2d at page 171, 246 P.2d at page 6, footnote 6.

The point of inquiry of the Clark case was whether an attorney who, as guardian, had withdrawn from his ward's estate funds for his own compensation, without authorization, was guilty of unethical practice. The sections referred to by the court require that the court authorize the compensation claimed by the guardian or personal representative, but they do not state that prior authorization of the services or expenditures for which compensation is claimed is necessary for it to be allowed. On the contrary, both sections contemplate that the services and expenditures be completed before the claim for compensation. § 904 ("services rendered up to that time"); § 1556 ("reasonable expenses incurred in the execution of his trust"). And section 1556 specifies that the compensation shall be such as "the court in which his accounts are settled deems just and reasonable."

Sections 1500-1540 of the Probate Code, in chapters dealing with "Powers and Duties" of guardians, Ch. 7, Div. 4, and "Sales, Mortgages, Leases and Conveyances" by guardians, Ch. 8, Div. 4, include provisions specifically requiring authorization by the court of certain activities by the guardian. (Cf. §§ 1500, 1501, 1506, 1509, 1515, 1530a, 1532, 1533, 1534, 1534a, 1537, 1538, 1538.5.) Section 1509, relied upon by Cookingham, provides that "[a] contract for attorney's fees for services in litigation, made by or on behalf of a minor, is void unless the contract is approved by the court in which the litigation is pending or the court having jurisdiction of the estate of the minor, upon petition of any person in interest. When no such contract is approved, and a judgment is recovered by or on behalf of a minor, the attorney's fees chargeable against the minor shall be fixed by the court rendering the judgment." It is urged by Cookingham that because of this section lack of authorization by the court of the contract between Mrs. Ormsby and her attorney barred her right to an allowance for the attorney's fee.

[6] Section 1509, however, deals with an entirely different problem. It is generally true that a guardian is without power to bind his ward's estate to a contract unless he is authorized to do so by statute or order of the court. Without such authorization, the liability of the guardian is personal with the right to be reimbursed from the ward's estate for the expenditure, if it is proper. (25 Am.Jur. 64, Guardian and Ward, § 98.) For that reason, in California a contract by the guardian for the services of an attorney is not enforceable against the ward's estate unless compliance is had with this section. Hunt v. Maldonado, 89 Cal. 636, 637, 27 P. 56; Morse v. Hinckley, 124 Cal. 154, 158, 56 P. 896; McKee v. Hunt, 142 Cal. 526, 527-528, 77 P. 1103. On the other hand, section 1556 expressly allows the guardian, at any time after the filing of the inventory and appraisal, to "petition the court for an order fixing and allowing his compensation for services rendered to that time and for an order fixing and allowing compensation to his attorney for services rendered to the guardian." The allowance is charged against the estate of the ward.

[7] The burden is upon the guardian to justify the items in his account. In re Guardianship and Estate of Vucinich, 3 Cal.2d 235, 241, 44 P.2d 567; cf. In re Estate of McLaughlin, 43 Cal.2d 462, 465, 274 P.2d 868. Mrs. Ormsby asserts that she is entitled to the presumption that in opposing her ward's restoration she acted in good faith, and, furthermore, the trial judge refused to consider evidence offered by her upon that issue. Cookingham takes the position that there is a sufficient factual basis in the record for a finding that the opposition was not made in good faith.

[8] The record fully supports the position of Mrs. Ormsby that the trial judge declined to consider the question of her good faith in opposing the petition for restoration. The proceedings in the hearing on the guardian's account were conducted with extreme informality in the matter of taking evidence, the positions of counsel being presented almost exclusively by their opening statements and argument to the court. Although counsel for Mrs. Ormsby offered to prove the worth of his services, the offer at most only indirectly touched upon the matter of good faith. However, the remarks of the trial judge plainly indicated his belief that good faith was immaterial in the absence of a prior order expressly authorizing the guardian to oppose restoration. Such litigation, said Judge Clarke, the guardian "engages in at his peril. If he had been successful, I think there is no question in this case that he would have been allowed the costs of his attorney and the costs of the psychiatrist. He was unsuccessful. He did not ask the court prior to this litigation if he might employ and pay doctors, if he might employ and pay an attorney, but he proceeded to do so without giving the court the opportunity to determine whether he wanted or needed such assistance." And, the ruling rejecting the offer of proof was made with this statement: "I am still of the opinion that I should refuse compensation for the reasons I have indicated." Upon this record, an offer of proof would have been superfluous. Cf. In re Estate of Kearns, 36 Cal.2d 531, 537, 225 P.2d 218; Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.2d 746, 757,

Cookingham maintains, however, that any refusal to receive evidence upon the question of good faith was not prejudicial. There is a sufficient factual basis in the record, he asserts, for a finding that the opposition was not made in good faith. The facts to which he refers are included in the reports of a probation officer made upon his investigation of the circumstances in connection with Cookingham's release from the state hospital. Cookingham argues that it must be presumed that the trial judge considered such evidence. Cf. Ward Mfg. Co. v. Miley, 131 Cal.App.2d 603, 608-609, 281 P.2d 343.

Even if it be assumed that the trial judge considered the probation officer's reports, there is no finding which reasonably may be construed as stating his determination of that issue. The court declared that the fees of the psychiatrist and attorneys incurred by the guardian were "not a justifiable charge against the guardianship estate." But this finding is preceded by others which state that the "guardian secured no prior approval of the Probate Court authorizing her" to do so and that she "as guardian owed no duty to the ward, or to the Court, to investigate the competency of the ward." Rather than presenting a determination of the issue of good faith, these findings follow the views of the trial judge, as stated by him throughout the hearing on the account, that the element of good faith is immaterial.

The order is reversed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 2, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 22, 1955.

Rehearing Granted Dec. 28, 1955.

Application by wife for issuance of a subpoena to take depositions of witnesses for use in her divorce action pending in Idaho. Husband moved to quash and set aside such subpoena and obtained an order to show cause why wife should not be restrained from taking depositions and from taking any further proceedings in Idaho divorce action. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Elmer D. Doyle, J., entered a restraining order and injunction, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that since husband had already obtained a valid interlocutory decree of divorce from wife in California court having personal jurisdiction over wife, California court properly issued injunction restraining wife from proceeding with her divorce action in Idaho.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨419(1)

Notice of appeal from order entered on the "23rd day of June, 1954, and from the whole thereof," was insufficient to take an appeal from, or bring up for review any alleged error in, restraining order entered on June 22, 1954, and file on June 23rd. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 1(a).

2. Appeal and Error ⇨419(1)

Notice of appeal must point out the particular judgment or order or the specific part thereof from which the appeal is taken. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 1(a).

of Superior Court. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 1(a).

4. Equity ⇨36

A state can exercise through its courts jurisdiction to forbid a party, subject to its jurisdiction, from doing an act in another state.

5. Divorce ⇨65

Superior court had personal jurisdiction over wife in action by husband for a divorce by virtue of her residence in the state and her appearance in divorce action, though at the time wife was in another state where she was personally served with copy of summons and complaint.

6. Injunction ⇨33

Where husband had obtained valid interlocutory decree of divorce from wife in California court having personal jurisdiction over wife and wife thereafter applied to California court for issuance of subpoena to take depositions of witnesses for use in her divorce action then pending in another state, California court properly issued injunction restraining wife from proceeding with her divorce action in another state, though as an ancillary matter, wife sought in such action to obtain custody of minor children contrary to California divorce decree. McCOMB, Justice.

On June 11, 1954, plaintiff applied to the Los Angeles Superior Court for the issuance of a subpoena to take the depositions of certain witnesses residing in Los Angeles County for use in a divorce action then pending in Idaho. Pursuant to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 2037, a subpoena was issued by the trial court. Thereafter defendant moved to quash and set aside such subpoena and obtained an order to show cause why plaintiff should not be restrained from taking the depositions or from taking any further proceedings in her Idaho divorce action, other than to dismiss it with prejudice. The motion and order to show cause were based on the fact that the evidence was immaterial since defendant, on September 28, 1953, had obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from plaintiff in Los Angeles County Superior Court, which decree was valid and binding in all particulars, and was a complete and final determination of all the issues.

Plaintiff filed affidavits in opposition to the motion to quash and the order to show cause, and after a full hearing the trial court granted the motion to quash and enjoined plaintiff from proceeding with her Idaho action. The minute order of June 18, 1954, entered on June 22, 1954, reads thus: "The motion of defendant to quash subpoenae and subpoenae duces tecum is granted and plaintiff is restrained from taking depositions in this county to be used in the Idaho proceedings."

On June 22, 1954, the court signed a restraining order and injunction, which was filed on June 23, 1954, reading (omitting the title of the court and cause) as follows:

"The order to show cause re restraining order and injunction came on regularly for hearing on Friday, June 18, 1954, in Department 8 of the above entitled court before the Honorable Elmer D. Doyle, Judge presiding, Messrs. Ernest W. Pitney and William H. Brawner appearing as counsel for plaintiff and Theodore A. Chester, Esq. appearing as counsel for defendant.

"It appearing, among other things, that on September 28, 1953 the above entitled court made and entered an interlocutory decree of divorce between the parties hereto in that certain action entitled 'Robert M. Newell, plaintiff v. Gertrude B. Newell, defendant,' Los Angeles County Superior Court case No. Pasadena D-11260; and it further appearing that the above named plaintiff made a general appearance in said California action and further that she was a resident of the State of California on August 17, 1953, the date on which said California action was filed, and on August 24, 1953, the date on which she was personally served with process in said California action, and that said California judgment is a complete and final determination of all of the issues before the Court in that certain action filed by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Idaho in and for the County of Gooding, entitled 'Gertrude B. Newell, plaintiff v. Robert M. Newell, defendant,' being case No. 6462, and that said California judgment is binding on said Gertrude B. Newell in all particulars;

"It Is Ordered, Adjudged And Decreed:

"That Gertrude B. Newell, the above named plaintiff, and Ernest W. Pitney and William H. Brawner, her attorneys, and any other attorney or attorneys now employed or hereafter employed by her, are hereby restrained and enjoined from:

"(1) Taking the depositions of Mrs. Luis Odriozola, Mrs. Warren Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Jay B. Latham, Mr. and Mrs. Grace P. Douglas, Mrs. Sarah Fletcher, Esther M. Sheets, the California Bank, a banking corporation, D. T. Hubbard, Personal Loan Supervisor of said bank, and Forrest Denning, Vice President of said bank, for use by said plaintiff in that certain action entitled 'Gertrude B. Newell, plaintiff v. Robert M. Newell, defendant,' heretofore filed by her in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Idaho in and for the County of Gooding, being case No. 6462.

"(2) Taking the depositions of any other witnesses for use in said Idaho action.

"(3) Taking any further action or proceedings whatsoever in said Idaho action.

"(4) Taking any steps whatsoever for divorce in any court in any state, or country, leading to the entry of a divorce between the parties hereto or a determination of the rights of custody of the minor children of the parties hereto, other than in the above entitled court, except to enter a dismissal with prejudice of said Idaho action.

"Dated: June 22, 1954."

On July 8, 1954, plaintiff appealed from the order of June 22, 1954, which was filed

June 23, 1954. So far as material here, the notice of appeal reads:

"You Will Please Take Notice that the plaintiff in the above entitled action is appealing to the Supreme Court of the State of California from that certain order made and entered in the above entitled action on the 23rd day of June, 1954, and from the whole thereof, and plaintiff hereby requests that a Clerk's Transcript and a Reporter's Transcript be prepared of the testimony offered or taken, evidence offered or received, and all rulings, acts or statements of the Court, all objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which the same relate, and hereby designates and specifies such of the pleadings, papers, records, files and exhibits in said cause, as she desires to have incorporated in the record on appeal:

Questions: First: Did the trial court err in making its order on June 18, 1954, (entered June 22, 1954), granting defendant's motion to quash the subpoena and subpoena duces tecum, theretofore issued and restraining plaintiff from taking depositions in this state to be used in the Idaho divorce action?

[1] This question will not be considered by us for the reason that plaintiff has not appealed from this order of the trial court. It will be noted from reading the notice of appeal that the appeal is only "from that certain order made and entered in the above entitled action on the 23rd day of June, 1954, and from the whole thereof." The only thing done in the case on June 23, 1954 was to file the restraining order and injunction. No notice of appeal was filed from the order of June 18, 1954.

[2] The notice of appeal must point out the particular judgment or order, or the specific part thereof, from which the appeal is taken (Rules on Appeal, 1(a), 36 Cal.2d 1; In re Estate of Roberson, 114 Cal.App. 2d 267, 269 [4], 250 P.2d 179.) Nor is there any merit in the contention that the words "from the whole thereof" appearing in the notice of appeal, are sufficient to bring up for review the order from which an appeal was not taken. The words "from the whole thereof" in the notice of appeal relate to the order previously mentioned, to wit, the order dated the 23rd day of June, 1954, and from the whole thereof, and not to any other order or judgment. (In re Estate of Bearn, 77 Cal.App.2d 221, 223 [2], 175 P.2d 283.)

[3] In the absence of a proper notice of appeal being filed, this court is without jurisdiction to consider any alleged error in the order entered June 22, 1954. (People v. Brown, 148 Cal. 743, 744 et seq., 84 P. 204; cf. Robins v. Weis, 97 Cal.App.2d 144, 145, 217 P.2d 156.)

Second: Did the trial court err in restraining plaintiff from proceeding with her divorce action in the State of Idaho?

[4] No. A state can exercise through its courts jurisdiction to forbid a party, subject to its jurisdiction, from doing an act in another state. (Restatement of Conflict of Laws, (1934) section 96, p. 146; Smith v. Davis, 90 Cal. 25, 32, 27 P. 26; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 199 et seq., 152 P. 542.)

The record discloses that plaintiff and defendant were married in Pasadena, California in 1942, and resided in Los Angeles County all of their married life except for the times that defendant was stationed elsewhere during World War II or completing his education. On June 30, 1953, plaintiff, accompanied by the three children of the parties, her father and the family housekeeper left to visit relatives of plaintiff in Montana. She stated it was her intention to remain in Montana for a few weeks and then with the children return to California in the middle of August, 1953. On July 16, 1953, in a telephone conversation with defendant she advised him that she had been unable to find satisfactory accommodations in Montana, but had found a place at McCall, Idaho. On August 13, 1953, she told defendant that she intended to get a divorce while in Idaho and he would not be permitted to visit with the children under any circumstances unless and until he settled their domestic difficulties on terms to be dictated by her.

Upon being so advised, defendant filed shortly thereafter an action for divorce against plaintiff in the Los Angeles Superior Court, being known as Pasadena D-11260.

On August 15, 1953, plaintiff filed an action for divorce in the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of Gooding, Idaho, against defendant herein. On September 25, 1953, the superior court of Los Angeles County enjoined plaintiff from proceeding with her Idaho divorce action. On September 28, 1953, the Los Angeles Superior Court granted defendant herein an interlocutory decree of divorce in the Pasadena action D-11260, in which it was found, among other things, that defendant (plaintiff herein) "has been a resident of the State of California, County of Los Angeles, for at least six years continuously prior to the filing of this action and was a resident of the State of California, County of Los Angeles, on August 17, 1953, the date this action was filed, and on August 24, 1953, the date defendant was personally served with a copy of the summons and complaint in the State of Idaho."

[5] It is therefore evident that the trial court had personal jurisdiction over plaintiff by virtue of her appearance in the divorce action and her residence in the State of California. Having personal jurisdiction over her, the California court made a complete disposition of the community property of the parties, awarded custody of the minor children to defendant and restrained plaintiff herein from proceeding with her divorce action in Idaho. Having determined the California interlocutory decree to be valid and binding upon plaintiff, the court, acting within its discretion, entered the injunction and restraining order now under consideration.

[6] In view of the fact that plaintiff was continuing an action which would render the California divorce judgment ineffectual; would create a multiplicity of actions relating to the same subject matter; would cause defendant unnecessary expense and inconvenience, and in addition was threatening to perpetrate fraud upon the courts of the State of Idaho in representing to them that she was a bona fide resident of that state, the trial court acted properly in issuing the injunction.

Stout v. Pate, 120 Cal.App.2d 699, 261 P.2d 788, 790, is not here in point. In such case the court held in an action for the support of a child that " * * * When a child is within California the courts are independent of all judgments of sister states to investigate and determine what are the best interests of the child. (Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 726 (68 P.2d 719).) And such order of a California court cannot be challenged upon the ground that a prior decree of another jurisdiction providing for the custody and support of the child was res judicata. There is no permanent finality to a custodial award."

The situation in the instant case is not analogous. In the case at bar plaintiff was not seeking a judgment for support of the children in Idaho. She was seeking a divorce, and as an ancillary matter sought to obtain custody of the children contrary to the terms of the California decree which she had flagrantly violated.

The order from which the appeal is taken is affirmed.

Petition by foreign corporation for a writ of prohibition to restrain municipal court from proceeding in an action against petitioner for injuries allegedly resulting from negligence of petitioner in manufacture of a pistol. The Superior Court, Orange County, Raymond Thompson, J., entered order and judgment denying a writ of prohibition, and petitioner appealed and the appeals were consolidated. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that the evidence was insufficient to establish that petitioner was doing business within the state such as to render it amenable to service of process therein under West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 6501, 6502.

Order and judgment reversed with direction to issue writ of prohibition.

In order to establish that a foreign corporation is amenable to service of process in the state, it must first be shown by competent evidence that corporation is doing business within the state, as contemplated by law, and balance of conveniences and justice is not the ultimate question. 2. Corporations Ⓒ673

Where allegations of complaint in action against a foreign corporation that such corporation was doing business within the state and affidavit in support of such allegations were contradicted by motion to quash service of summons and complaint and af-

GRIFFIN, Justice.

An action was commenced in the Municipal Court of Orange County by respondents here, Robert B. Palmer and Mary D. Palmer, against appellant Smith & Wesson, Inc., a corporation, et al., for claimed injuries to Mary D. Palmer by the discharge of a loaded pistol claimed to be the result of certain alleged negligence and carelessness of appellant in reference to the manufacture by it and its failure to properly test a certain S & W 38-caliber gun which plaintiffs in that action purchased from a sporting goods shop in Orange County on September 28, 1953.

It was alleged that appellant Smith & Wesson was a Massachusetts corporation and was at all times mentioned and had been doing intrastate business in California but had not complied with the requirements of section 6403 of the Corporations Code; that Walter Lookabaugh, whose place of business was in San Francisco, California, and who is a resident of California, is the sole distributor of firearms furnished by appellant corporation for the State of California, and that goods manufactured by it arrived in the hands of retailers in this state through him as appellant's distributor. The only evidence supporting these allegations is an affidavit of an investigator, employed by plaintiffs in which he stated that on February 18, 1954, he personally contacted Lookabaugh at his residence in Los Angeles and that he stated to affiant that the firm of Smith & Wesson was a foreign corporation with its principal place of business in Springfield, Massachusetts; that the corporation had no corporate officers in California and no one of authority therein; that there was no appointed agent in this state designated for the service of process; and that Lookabaugh told him "he is the sales representative of said corporation and that he has an office situate at 420 Market Street, San Francisco, California."

The Municipal Court made a finding in conformance with the allegations of the complaint and signed an order that service of process be made upon the corporation under the provisions of sections 6501 and 6502 of the Corporations Code.

Appellant corporation specially appeared in the Municipal Court and objected to its jurisdiction to entertain said action by moving to quash the service of summons and complaint, and filed an affidavit of Carl Hellstrom, president of the corporation, reciting that it is and was a Massachusetts corporation with its principal place of business in Springfield; that it has not qualified under the law to do business in the State of California; that it has had no place of business there; that it has no employees or salesmen in that state, and that the only business it does in California is the filling of orders which are sent to it in Massachusetts, from which point all orders are filled, and that it has no property and maintains no inventory in that state. Upon the showing made the Municipal Court denied the motion.

Petitioner and appellant sought a writ of prohibition in the Superior Court directed against the Municipal Court restraining it from proceeding in that action against appellant, claiming lack of jurisdiction, inconvenience of witnesses, and that there was no speedy and adequate remedy by appeal. An alternative writ was issued by the Superior Court. Respondent Municipal Court and the interested parties answered and submitted the verified complaint and affidavit of the investigator used in the Municipal Court and denied generally the allegations of appellant's petition, and further alleged that qualified experts in the manufacture of firearms were residing in California as well as in Massachusetts and no inconvenience of witnesses was shown. Upon the showing there made, as indicated, the Superior Court denied the writ and petitioners appealed from that order. Subsequently, findings were signed and a similar judgment was entered from which petitioners also appealed. By stipulation the two appeals were consolidated and one record presented.

The trial court found generally that it was not true that petitioner was not engaged in intra-state business in this state; and not true that it has no place of business here; that it is true its place of business in California is in San Francisco, and that it markets all of its firearms in California through Lookabaugh, he being the sole distributor in California for such corporation; that all arms manufactured by it that arrive in the hands of retailers in this state are sold through that agency; that he is a sales representative of petitioner in California; that it is true that he "is an independent contractor and handles all of the firearms manufactured by petitioner and sold in the State of California, in his capacity as an independent contractor and as sales representative of petitioner", and that it is true that both plaintiffs in the action and all other witnesses reside in Orange County. It was then concluded that service of summons upon the petitioner corporation was duly and regularly ef-fectured by service upon the Secretary of State, as indicated.

It is appellant's contention upon this appeal that respondents here failed to meet the burden cast upon them to show, either as a matter of law or fact, that at the time of the purported service of summons the appellant corporation was doing business within the State of California, citing Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 2 Cal.App. 582, 586, 84 P. 289; West Publishing Co. v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 720, 128 P.2d 777; and Martin Bros. Electric Co. v. Superior Court, 121 Cal.App.2d 790, 264 P. 2d 183.

It is further contended that since all of the evidence that was produced was that here indicated, only a question of law arose and accordingly the findings of fact, based upon that showing, were but erroneous conclusions of law, citing Wheeler v. Board of Medical Examiners, 98 Cal.App. 267, 276 P. 1119; and San Diego Trust & Savings Bank v. County of San Diego, 16 Cal. 2d 142, 105 P.2d 94, 133 A.L.R. 416. It is further argued that if findings were in order such findings were not supported by the evidence.

We are, in general, in accord with these contentions. The historical background of this subject is related in West Publishing Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 20 Cal.2d at page 727, 128 P.2d at page 780, where it is pointed out that formerly the theory upon which the courts of a state assumed jurisdiction of a foreign corporation carrying on business within its borders was that of implied consent to such jurisdiction. And quoting from Mr. Justice Brandeis, it is said:

"A foreign corporation is amenable to process to enforce a personal liability, in the absence of consent, only if it is doing business within the state in such manner and to such extent as to warrant the inference that it is present there. And even if it is doing business within the state, the process will be valid only if served upon some authorized agent."

It then said that "The determination of this jurisdictional question 'is often a matter of great difficulty and extreme nicety. No all-embracing rule as to what is doing business has been laid down"; that whatever the form of a particular statute authorizing service of process upon the agent of a foreign corporation which has not complied with the qualifying laws of a state, it is a fundamental requisite under the federal Constitution that the corporation shall be "doing business" in the jurisdiction where the service is made to sustain its validity. (Citing cases.)

The case of Fielding v. Superior Court, 111 Cal.App.2d 490, 244 P.2d 968, relied upon by respondents, involved two foreign corporations which manufactured and distributed pharmaceutical goods. Plaintiff in that action claimed to have been injured by such goods after purchase of them at a retail store in California. They were distributed through a California distributor and wholesaler with whom the corporations had a contract. There, title to the goods was to remain in the corporations until the goods were sold, and the distributor was to warehouse the goods and carry insurance on them in his own name. The corporations set the price and required a report of stock on hand each month. The corporations agreed to insure the distributing agent against any action on behalf of the federal Government under the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C.A. § 301 et seq. Their contract provided that the distributor was considered by the parties to be an independent contractor. Considerable other evidence was produced at the hearing and the appellate court held that there was sufficient evidence to show that the corporations were doing business in the State of California within the meaning of the Corporations Code. Some additional consideration was given to the fact that it was a tort action and it would be a burden for the plaintiff to go to New York to sue the corporations.

[1,2] Subsequently, a similar question was considered in Martin Bros. Electric Co. v. Superior Court, 121 Cal.App.2d 790, 264 P.2d 183. It involved a claimed injury by an electric hair-dryer manufactured by an Ohio Corporation. The complaint in that action, as here, alleged that at all times mentioned, the defendant corporation was doing business within the State of California; that the distributor corporation was a dealer and distributor of beauty shop equipment including electric drying machines manufactured by petitioner corporation. Plaintiff in the action relied upon her verified complaint and the deposition of the president and salesman of the distributing corporation, which showed that it sold dryers manufactured by petitioner as alleged; that other groups in the state also sold them; that its only place of business was in San Francisco; that it had no written contract with petitioner and purchased the dryers from petitioner in Ohio when it wanted them; that it did not control the price for retail sales; that no dryers were shipped on consignment; that petitioner had no salesman in California; and that if repairs were needed on the machines they were made by any independent dealer available; that petitioner maintained no office, warehouse or stock of material in California; that all persons in California handling petitioner's products were independent of and had no financial interest in petitioner and petitioner had no control over them; that no goods were shipped to any of them on consignment or other basis whereby ownership would remain in the petitioner; that all shipments to California from the factory were made at the factory to agents or carriers specified by the buyers and petitioner had no bank account, and no real or personal property in California. It was there held, under these facts, notwithstanding an order of the Superior Court in effect finding that the corporation was doing business in California, that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding and ordered the trial court to desist from further proceedings and vacate the order denying petitioner's motion to quash. In so doing it analyzed the several cases here relied upon, including the Fielding case, supra, and held that while a foreign corporation may be doing business within the state where products manufactured by it are distributed and sold in the state, even though the distributors are independent, these facts alone are insufficient to make the corporation amenable to process in this state. It analyzed the holding in the Fielding case, supra, and distinguished it in this, that there the corporations had agreed to insure the distributor against action on behalf of the federal Government. The corporations set the retail sales prices and required from the distributor a report of stock on hand each month, and it may be added that in that case title to the goods was to remain in the corporations until the goods were sold, and the goods were stored in a warehouse in California. The Martin case specifically held that the allegations of the complaint that petitioner was doing business in this state through the independent dealer, was a conclusion of law and that there was not sufficient evidence of any single activity or combination of activities to indicate that petitioner enjoyed the advantages there indicated. As indicated in that case the question of balance of conveniences and justice is not the ultimate question to determine but it must be first supported by competent evidence that the corporation is doing business within the state, as contemplated by law. When the allegations of the complaint and affidavit in support of them are contradicted, as they were in the instant case, the burden of proof was upon the plaintiffs. Jameson v. Simonds Saw Company, supra.

[3] The main fact relied upon by respondents to show the agency of Lookabaugh is one of his claimed statements to the investigator that he was the sales representative of the corporation and he had an office in San Francisco. It is a rule of long standing in California that the declarations of an agent, not made under oath or in the presence of the principal, and not communicated to, nor acquiesced in, by him, are not admissible to prove the fact of his agency. 1 Cal.Jur., p. 698, sec. 8; see also Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., supra, 2 Cal. App. at page 588, 84 P. 289.

[4] While it might have been shown by additional evidence that petitioner corporation, at the time, may have been doing business in this state within the meaning of the statute, we must conclude that respondents have not met the burden of proof. The facts adduced at the hearing of the motion in this case are not sufficient to make petitioner amenable to the process of the courts of this state.

Order and judgment reversed and the trial court is directed to grant the petition and let the writ issue as prayed.

Action by tavern customer, who had sat at one of tables with clear view of floor and walls of aisle being scrubbed, but who allegedly did not see or know of wet condition of floor, for injuries sustained when she left table to go to restroom and fell on wet floor. From a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued for damages for injuries incurred when she fell upon a wet floor in the defendants' place of business. The cause was tried to the court without a jury and resulted in findings and a judgment for plaintiff. The appeal rests on the inquiry whether respondent was a licensee or an invitee at the time of her fall, and whether she was guilty of contributory negligence.

[1] One who during business hours lawfully enters a store to purchase goods does so as an invitee of the proprietor. Locke v. Red River Lumber Co., 65 Cal. App.2d 322, 326, 150 P.2d 506; Louie v. Hagstrom's Food Stores, 81 Cal.App.2d 601, 606, 184 P.2d 708. The evidence here clearly brings this case within this rule.

The pertinent argument of appellants is that respondent had knowledge of the condition of the floor before she started to walk upon the wet portion and hence was guilty of contributory negligence.

[2] The plaintiff entered the tavern operated by defendants at about 11:00 a. m. She purchased a bottle of beer and sat at a table to consume it. When she left the table to go to the rest room she walked over a portion of the aisle which had recently been watered and scrubbed. Disregarding the warning of one of the proprietors to avoid the wet portion of the floor, she continued over that portion until she fell and suffered injuries to her knee. Typical of cases of this character the plaintiff was persuaded to testify that she did not know that the portion of the floor was wet before she walked on it, but after she fell she "saw the man watering the walls and floor with a hose." She was manifestly well coached in this part of her testimony as her counsel had her repeat it over and over until the trial judge must have concluded that there was some truth in it. The uncontradicted testimony that she sat at one of the tables with a clear view of the floor and the walls, but did not see the janitor hosing the floor, or the walls would have supported a finding that she was guilty of contributory negligence in knowingly walking upon the wet floor after one of the defendants warned her to take the dry side of the aisle.

There is an old doctrine that he who looks and does not see the obvious is just as negligent as one who does not look at all. But this is a doctrine which is seldom applied in modern decisions. The prevalent doctrine is more favorable to a recovery by the injured party without too meticulous care for the truth of his testimony.

[3] However since there is this evidence that the respondent did not see or know of the wet condition of the floor the finding of the trial court finds some support, and that ends the case on appeal, Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183.

Judgment affirmed.

DOOLING, Justice.

I concur in the judgment, but not in that part of the opinion which reweighs the evidence and implies that the plaintiff was coached into giving false testimony and the trial judge deceived into believing it. The plaintiff testified that she entered the tavern which was not well lighted, bought a bottle of beer and consumed a part of it, went to a table to speak to a friend and then started for the dressing room. She did not notice that the floor was wet until after she slipped on it and heard no warning not to walk on it. She was contradicted by defendants' evidence in several particulars, but not impeached or shaken on cross-examination. The trial judge believed the plaintiff. It is his function to weigh the testimony. It is not ours. I can find nothing in the record to justify any criticism of the plaintiff, her counsel or the trial judge.

GRIFALL TRUCKING COMPANY, Ralph Sween, et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5036.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Nov. 1, 1955.

Action for injuries sustained by steel plant worker whose leg was hit by rock when tire exploded while defendants' loaded semi-trailer was being spotted in plant. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, R. Bruce Findlay, J., rendered judgment on verdict for plaintiff and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence raised questions for jury as to whether defendants were negligent in that they knew or should have known that tire was worn to fabric and was overinflated and was driven over large jagged rocks on hard pavement so that it might blow out.

Affirmed.

I. Appeal and Error §930(1)

Where evidence was in conflict as to conditions of tire that blew out and threw rock upon plaintiff and injured him, upon appeal it was presumed that jury resolved the conflict favorably to plaintiff who obtained verdict and judgment.

2. Automobiles ⇨245(38)

In action for injuries sustained by steel plant worker whose leg was hit by rock when tire exploded while defendants' loaded semi-trailer was being spotted in plant, evidence raised questions for jury as to whether defendants were negligent in that they knew or should have known that tire was worn to fabric and was over-inflated and was driven over large jagged rocks on hard pavement so that it might blow out.

3. Negligence ⇨10

The mere fact that a particular kind of accident has not happened before does not, under all circumstances, show that such accident is one which might not reasonably have been anticipated.

4. Damages ⇨163(1)

Loss of earning power is an element of general damages which can be inferred from nature of injury, without proof of actual earnings or income either before or after injury and even though there is no evidence that plaintiff was ever gainfully employed, and damages in this respect are awarded for loss of ability thereafter to earn money.

5. Damages ⇨186

Evidence of actual earnings before or after injury merely assists the jury as persons of ordinary intelligence and experience in arriving at the amount of the award which it is in their power to determine from the nature of the injury.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨1094(3)

Conclusion of trial court who considered question of excessive damages in denying new trial was persuasive in determining whether verdict was based on passion or prejudice.

7. Damages ⇨134(3)

Award of $20,000 was not excessive where plaintiff, who was 53 years of age at time of return to work and who then had 20 year life expectancy, suffered comminuted fracture of right leg, spent over three months in full cast from armpit to right foot during hot weather, required three years' physical therapy, was able to walk no more than one half block at time of return to work, was occupationally disabled, and had wages which grossed $84 per week at time of injury.

William W. Shaw, Riverside, for appellants.

Margolis, McTernan & Branton, Richard M. Anderson, San Bernardino, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

In this action plaintiff and respondent, a workman at the Kaiser Steel plant, brought this action against defendants and appellants Grifall Trucking Company and Ralph Sween, the driver of a large tractor-semi-trailer, to which was attached a big four-wheel trailer. It was owned by defendant company. On June 20, 1950, defendant driver left Salinas with the truck and trailers loaded to capacity with dolomite. The gross weight was 76,000 pounds. About 19,000 pounds were on the semi-trailer and it was estimated that there was about 9,000 pounds on each wheel of it. On each of the dual wheels of the semi-trailer were two pneumatic tires, size 11-00x22. The loaded truck was driven into the hearth department of the mill where 30 to 40 employees, including plaintiff, were working. In the course of spotting the load of dolomite it became necessary for the driver to detach the full trailer on the open hearth floor and then to maneuver the truck out on the high line in order to turn it around. That area was "littered with rocks". While the truck was being maneuvered in the rocky area and moving slowly, a rear tire on the semi-trailer blew out with an enormous blast sounding like a charge of dynamite or TNT. It shook the entire building. Dust was raised by the explosion and a jagged rock larger than one's fist was thrown through the air and struck plaintiff's leg, resulting in considerable damage and loss of wages and earning capacity. He was about fifty feet distant to the rear of the semi-trailer at the time. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict of $20,000 for the plaintiff.

Plaintiff's theory of negligence on the part of defendants is: (1) The defective condition of the tire caused by its having been worn through to the fabric; (2) Driving the truck over rocks large enough to cause blowouts; and (3) Maintaining and operating the tire with excessive air pressure, all under the circumstances related. Defendants' claim on appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support these claims or the verdict, and that the judgment is excessive.

[1] As to the defective condition of the tire, there was testimony of plaintiff's witnesses that they inspected the tire after the explosion and it was "thread-bare * * * mostly all canvas showing the whole surface of the tire, the road surface"; that the side walls were "cracked", "scuffed" and "gouged"; and that the blowout occurred on the road surface of the tire. This testimony, to some extent, was contradicted by defendants. The tire was removed at an oil station near-by and was discarded by defendants. Accordingly, it was not available as evidence at the trial. Upon the appeal it will be presumed that the jury resolved the conflict favorably to the plaintiff in respect to the condition of the tire. Juchert v. California Water Service Co., 16 Cal.2d 500, 106 P.2d 886.

As to the driving of such a tire over rocks, under the conditions indicated, plaintiff's witnesses testified that the area over which the driver drove this truck was paved and littered with rocks and some were quite "jagged", and that although it was at night time, the place was illuminated. The driver admitted that he saw rocks in that area and that he ran over a rock with the back axle of the semi-trailer and it blew out the left outside tire on the semi-trailer. He stated that he had been driving similar trucks for nine years and knew that blowouts were "caused with some frequency" as a result of driving equipment over rocks of that size and shape, and that the customary precaution was to see that no rocks were in the way. He said he tried to drive where the least of these rocks were but made no request of anyone at the plant to have them removed.

Defendant Grifall testified that any tire may blow out if it hits a rock even when brand new; that if a tire has been recapped it is more likely to blow out; that his practice was to recap them as much as four or five times depending on the advice of the recapper; and that the more times a tire is recapped the greater the chances are that it will blow out. He said he could not say from the company record, or his recollection, whether the tire in question was recapped, and that he gave specific instructions to his drivers to avoid "driving over a rocky place" and that if they "can't watch it, to have somebody watch for" them. As to maintaining and operating a tire with excessive air pressure the evidence is that 11.00x22 truck tires are rated by the manufacturer for a maximum load of 4,750 pounds and a maximum pressure of 70 pounds; that the tire was inflated to 80 pounds at the start of the trip but defendants claimed that it was recommended more economical to inflate them to 80 pounds. There was evidence that the effect of the travel on such a tire for the distance here indicated, with the load weight shown, would be to build up the air pressure from five to eight pounds.

Considerable evidence was taken in reference to the explosive force of a truck tire of the size here involved under an air pressure of 70 pounds. The cubic capacity of such a tire was computed at 7400 cubic inches and it was stated that 70 pounds of air pressure in a tire means 70 pounds of pressure per square inch of the internal surface of the tire, and this pressure approximates that released by the explosion of $\frac{2}{3}$ of a pound of TNT, a very high explosive.

It is defendants' claim that even in view of this testimony there was no proof that the driver of the truck could or did foresee, from the facts related, that an injury of some sort might be anticipated or that the probability of such an injury was reasonably foreseeable; that the fact that the tire was inflated to 80 pounds was not unusual or negligence in itself because the testimony shows that an operator of a truck can run it over or below that pressure and no blowout would result; that the tire did not blow out from over-inflation but because it came in contact with a rock; that although the driver did drive into an area where rocks were strewn on the pavement, this would not necessarily charge him with knowledge that a blowout might occur and that the injury indicated would result; that neither defendant ever heard of a blowout throwing a rock and causing such an injury; that neither had any knowledge of physics and did not know the foot pounds of energy in that size tire; and that since Grifall inspected the tires before they left on the trip and found no tread showing, ordinary care was used in the management of defendants' property, citing such authority as Johnson v. Union Furniture Co., 31 Cal.App.2d 234, 87 P.2d 917; 19 Cal.Jur. p. 562, sec. 13; and Prosser on Torts, chap. VI, p. 220, which states:

"The idea of risk necessarily involves a recognizable danger, based upon some knowledge of the existing facts, and some reasonable belief that harm may follow. A risk is a danger which is apparent, or should be apparent, to one in the position of the actor. The culpability of the actor's conduct must be judged in the light of the possibilities apparent to him at the time, and not by looking backward 'with the wisdom born of the event.' The standard must be one of conduct, rather than of consequences."

[2,3] From the evidence produced the jury might well have believed that all three of the claimed acts of negligence were established and that defendants knew, or as reasonable men should have known, that the faulty condition of the tire, operated with excessive air pressure and being driven over large jagged rocks on a hard pavement, loaded as it was, might, under these conditions, blow out. While a blowout on the road under these conditions might not be dangerous to others, yet when one drives such a truck, under the conditions described, in and about a mill where workmen are employed, a different result may obtain. The element of danger and possibility of injury to others should become more apparent to such driver. Full instructions on the question of foreseeability of an injury were given to the jury by both plaintiff and defendants. Osborn v. City of Whittier, 103 Cal.App.2d 609, 230 P.2d 132. The mere fact that a particular kind of an accident has not happened before does not, under all circumstances, show that such accident is one which might not reasonably have been anticipated. Cox v. Central California Traction Co., 85 Cal.App. 596, 259 P. 987; Sander v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 38 Cal. App. 222, 175 P. 901.

The only other question is the claim that the judgment was excessive and not supported by the evidence. The medical testimony shows (1) Comminuted fracture of the right femur; (2) Surgery and plating to reduce the fracture and secure the required alignment of the bone; (3) Encasement in a full spica cast from armpits to the right foot and left knee with his legs held apart by a bar fixed into the cast. Plaintiff spent over three months in this cast during the "terribly hot" season at Fontana, plagued by hives, hair cuttings and perspiration, all inside the cast. This confinement produced "melancholy" by day and nightmares by night. He required frequent and regular sedation for his nerves. (4) Following release from his cast plaintiff underwent a course of physical therapy lasting from October, 1950, to about the middle of 1953. From the time the cast was removed he had constant pain in his leg which required the use of analgesics until about six months before trial in December, 1953. (5) Defendant was able to get around only on crutches for a period of over three months after the cast was removed and thereafter he required a walking stick for some time. As late as January 9, 1951, when he returned to work, he was able to walk no more than one half a block, and this left him "all petered out"; (6) His permanent injuries are stated to be shortening of the right leg by two centimeters; weakening of the right leg to approximately half the strength of the left; fifty per cent loss of flexion in the right knee; complete loss of dorsiflexion in the right ankle; claudication of the soft tissue of the right leg; incurable pain in the right calf, thigh and the low back whenever he stands or walks for as much as half a block; and (7) Loss of earnings of \$1,885. In addition, one doctor testified he was not fitted to stand or walk for substantial periods of time without having disabling pain, and that he was between 25 per cent and 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent occupationally disabled. He was 53 years old when he returned to work and had a life expectancy of 20 years. He grossed about \$84 per week.

It is defendants' contention that on plaintiff's return to work he suffered no actual loss of earnings at the plant and accordingly suffered no loss of earning power. They rely upon the testimony of the same doctor who testified for plaintiff when, on cross-examination, he said that in his opinion, as to the extent of plaintiff's occupational disability, he was "wrong" if Ridley "did some type of work for a year and no allowances were made for him". It appears that plaintiff went to work at the same rate of pay and received general wage increases thereafter, but when he was hurt he was classified as an "ingot stocker", which required considerable walking in connection with his work. On his return the management allowed him to keep his same classification but confined his services to weighing at the scales where he did not have to walk or lift anything as before. Other duties previously performed by him were assigned to other employees, and the data required by him was brought to him by them. It is apparent that he was unable to do the same type of work that he had been doing prior to the injury.

He held the same job mainly because his inability to perform the required job operations was tolerated by his employer. Apparently, his occupational disability otherwise remains unaffected. Defendants offered no contrary medical testimony.

[4, 5] Loss of earning power is an element of general damages which can be inferred from the nature of the injury, without proof of actual earnings or income either before or after the injury. Damages in this respect are awarded for the loss of ability thereafter to earn money. Storrs v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 134 Cal. 91, 93, 66 P. 72. This principle applies where there is no evidence at all that the plaintiff was ever gainfully employed. Lang v. Barry, 71 Cal.App.2d 121, 126, 161 P.2d 949. Evidence of actual earnings before or after injury merely assists the jury, as persons of ordinary intelligence and experience, in arriving at the amount of the award which it is in their power to determine from the nature of the injury. Lang v. Barry, supra; Ostertag v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 65 Cal.App.2d 795, 805, 151 P.2d 647.

[6] In addition to the finding of the jury in this respect the trial court also considered this question on a motion for new trial and denied it. Its conclusion in this regard is persuasive in determining whether the verdict was based on passion or prejudice. Roedder v. Lindsley, 28 Cal.2d 820, 823, 172 P.2d 353; Hellman v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 135 Cal.App. 627, 643, 27 P.2d 946, 28 P.2d 384.

[7] We conclude that the damages awarded are within reasonable and permissible limits.

Action by mother for death of daughter who was guest in automobile involved in collision that occurred when defendant-driver who was driving automobile in which daughter was riding, attempted to pass eastbound truck on middle lane of three lane highway and met westbound truck on middle lane and then to avoid westbound truck swerved off highway into tree. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., for defendants, the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to show that defendant-driver was not negligent.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇨242(2)

In automobile case, assuming that doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the facts of the action, where the record contains evidence regarding the cause of the accident and the acts of the defendant as well as the reasons for those acts the inference of negligence arising from the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is merely additional conflicting evidence.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1, 5), 989

The appellate court does not reweigh the evidence or resolve its conflicts but rather the court must assume that the trial court has considered all the evidence before it, determined which witnesses are to be believed, explained all discrepancies and inaccuracies to its own satisfaction, and that the findings express the facts.

3. Automobiles ⇨244(20)

In mother's action for death of daughter that occurred when defendant who was driving automobile in which daughter was riding, and who while attempting to pass eastbound truck on middle lane of three lane highway, met westbound truck on middle lane and swerved off highway into tree to avoid truck, evidence was sufficient to support finding that defendant was not negligent in attempting to pass truck or in turning off highway.

4. Trial ⇨397(5)

Failure of trial court to make finding as to decedent's status as guest or passenger in automobile at time of collision was not error where defendant was not negligent and plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment for defendants in her action seeking damages because of the death of her daughter while riding in an automobile driven by the defendant Charlotte and owned by Charlotte's father, the defendant Melvin Phelps.

The first ground for reversal stated by appellant in her opening brief is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of fact that defendant Charlotte Phelps was not negligent. Appellant's objections to that finding and findings contrary thereto proposed by her were filed in the trial court before the judgment had been rendered.

Appellant contends that the judgment must be reversed because the evidence establishes negligence on the part of Charlotte as a matter of law. She relies upon the decision in Gray v. Brinkerhoff, 41 Cal. 2d 180, 183, 258 P.2d 834. In the cited case, the defendant driver ran down a careful pedestrian who was more than half way across a marked crosswalk. There was no conflict in the evidence and the judgment for defendant based upon the finding that the driver was not negligent was reversed on appeal. Gray v. Brinkerhoff, supra, is not authority for reversal of a judgment for defendant where there is conflicting evidence regarding the circumstances of the collision.

In the instant action, the only testimony of an eyewitness was that of Charlotte. She lived in Puente, was 18 years and one month old, had a valid drivers license, and had been driving an automobile for about a year. She traveled the same road every week day. On November 14, 1950, she was driving her father's 1940 De Soto. It was in good mechanical condition. On the front seat beside her was the decedent, her cousin Geraldine Waterous, who was living in the home of the Phelps in Puente. Both girls attended Junior College in Pomona, about nine miles east of their home. On the day of the accident they left home about 7:30, proceeded to and turned east on Valley Boulevard. Decedent was studying for her German test. It was "raining slightly, just drizzling". The windshield wiper was running. They were due at school at 8 o'clock. Valley Boulevard between Puente and Pomona was then a three lane highway. The accident occurred about 7:45, approximately $\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of the village of Walnut.

Mrs. Prentiss testified that she was a Supervisor in the Health and Safety Education of the Los Angeles County Schools. She drove east on Valley Boulevard on the morning of November 14, 1950. It was "raining pretty hard". She remembers seeing Charlotte and the decedent pass her. She was a little late for school and was going around 40 miles per hour, or maybe a little more. The place where they passed her was probably more than half a mile from the place of the accident, maybe a mile. She did not see the accident but she heard a crash which she presumes was it. She remembers no one else passing her except one large truck which she believes passed her after the girls did. A man and a boy were at the scene of the accident when she stopped there. Also a truck headed east was stopped in the south lane of Valley Boulevard opposite the spot where defendant's car had struck a tree on the north side of the boulevard. She does not recall seeing any westbound truck that morning until after she had arrived at the scene of the accident.

Dan Flemming, an apparatus engineer for the County Fire Department then stationed at Walnut, also drove east along Valley Boulevard on the morning of the accident. He passed Charlotte and decedent. He was then driving about 45 miles per hour and passed without changing his speed. Charlotte was then driving about 35 miles per hour. Soon after that, Flemming passed an oil tanker going east at approximately 25 to 30 miles per hour. It was then going slower than Charlotte had been, and just as he passed it he heard its gears being shifted for the slight grade. When he got to Walnut, he started to make a lefthand turn and had to wait for a big new Diesel oil tanker to pass. It was westbound, traveling 45 to 55 miles per hour. At that time the Diesel was in the North lane of Valley Boulevard. Flemming traveled that route often and he believed there was about 200 yard visibility from curb to curb from all points in the vicinity for one approaching and passing the site of the accident from the West. According to Flemming, as well as other witnesses, there were pepper trees along both sides of the boulevard, their branches almost met over it, and on the rainy day of the accident they hung lower than the tops of trucks traveling in the north or south lanes. The trees were trimmed about twice a year.

The photographs in evidence show a clear view of the site of the accident from 634 feet in each direction. The photographer who took the pictures and paced the distances testified that the minimum visibility from curb to curb was approximately 600 feet, for considerable distance when approaching the site of the accident from east or west.

By the collision on November 14, 1950, Charlotte had both her legs broken, received a blow and cut on her head, was rendered totally unconscious for seventeen days, hospitalized for nine weeks, and kept in bed for five and one-half months. At the time of the trial in August, 1954, she testified that she had no actual memory of the accident and that her reading of the deposition the night before had not refreshed her recollection; that she did not know whether her testimony given in the deposition in January, 1952, was based upon her then actual memory or upon what she believed had happened from what her family and friends had told her.

The following testimony quoted from her deposition is the basis of appellant's contention that as a matter of law Charlotte was not free from negligence as found by the trial court.

"Q. Now, I wonder if you would just describe to us what happened in this accident? A. Well, I can't remember very clearly what happened, because it was so long ago, but I believe it was like this: I pulled out to pass a semi truck, therefore, I would be pulling out into the middle lane. While I was passing this truck, I saw another truck, another big truck, semi, coming down on me. I had either one choice or the other, to hit the truck or try and get out of its way since it didn't move for me, therefore, I pulled off the road. * * * I pulled off on my left. * * * or to the northerly side of Valley Boulevard. * * *

"Q. What do mean by a 'semi'? A. A two section truck. It was like a gasoline truck.

"Q. Can you give us an estimate as to how long this semi was to which you referred, which you were passing? A. I couldn't judge the length of it.

"Q. Well, perhaps we could state it in car lengths or some term with which you would be more familiar than just feet. Is there any medium of expression of that distance that would make it easier for you to estimate the length of that vehicle? A. I would judge it close to two and a half to three car lengths.

* * * * *

"Q. Do you remember looking ahead of you at the time you started to pass it? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. And in what lane were you traveling at that time? A. I was in my own lane, the outer lane. * * * The southernmost lane of Valley Boulevard. * * *

"Q. And for how far ahead of you could you see the road, that is, Valley Boulevard, at that time? A. I thought that I had clear vision, before I passed the truck, about two hundred to two hundred and twenty-five feet.

"Q. And at that time, how fast, approximately, were you traveling? A. I was traveling approximately thirty miles an hour.

"Q. Do you remember the approximate speed of this semi that you set out to pass? A. About my speed, about thirty miles.

"Q. Did you speed up at all to pass it? A. Slightly, yes * * * maybe up to 35 miles an hour.

* * * * *

"Q. Did you get entirely past the semi that you set out to pass, the one going in the same direction you were? A. No, I did not.

"Q. Then how far along its length, if you can estimate, did you get at the time you swerved off the road? A. I was approximately in the middle.

"Q. Now, I believe you said when you looked two hundred and twenty feet down the road, that you had clear vision for that length? A. When I was passing the semi, my vision was cut down since I was moving over, further over into the middle lane.

"Q. At that time that you were actually abreast of this semi you were passing, how far did you have clear vision down Valley Boulevard at that time? A. Approximately I would judge about one hundred fifty feet.

"Q. And it was the fact that the road curved slightly that limited your vision further than that? A. Yes, also the fact that I was pushed further over and didn't have the breadth to look over from the end lane to the middle lane.

"Q. You swung to your left, then, into the middle lane to pass this semi, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. And did you, all during the time you were in the act of attempting to pass that semi, remain in that middle lane? A. I did.

"Q. Where were you, that is, where was your car with relation to the semi you were attempting to pass, at the time you first noticed the vehicle moving in the opposite direction? A. I was approximately in the middle, about the middle of the length of the semi I was passing.

"Q. And that was the first time you recall seeing the semi coming at you in the opposite direction? A. That is correct.

"Q. And approximately how far was that semi coming at you in the opposite direction, about how far away was it from you at the time you were midway of the semi you were passing? A. At the beginning of my vision, which would be about one hundred fifty feet away. * * *

"Q. At that time, do you recall formulating an estimate of its speed? A. The only thing that I recall is that I noticed it was coming awfully fast on me.

"Q. Well, 'awfully fast' is a rather relative term. If you didn't formulate an estimate of its speed, you can say so, but if you did, we would like your best estimate. A. Well, I would say it was going at least the extent of the speed limit, if not over it, fifty-five or sixty.

"Q. And in what lane was it traveling when you first saw it, this semi moving in the direction opposite to that which you were going? A. It was also coming down the middle lane.

"Q. Did you notice at that time any other cars on the highway at all besides your car and the two semis? A. No, I did not.

* * * * *

"Q. I believe you testified that you swung your car to your left or to the northerly side of Valley Boulevard, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. Could you tell us approximately how far away the oncoming truck was from your car when you did that? A. I could not judge except that it was practically on top of me.

"Q. Well, would it be ten feet away from you? A. Possibly.

"Q. Would it be as far as twenty feet away from you? A. I don't believe so.

"Q. In other words, would it be fair to say it was between ten and twenty feet away from you when you swerved your car to your left or to the northerly side of Valley Boulevard? A. Yes.

* * * * *

"Q. From the time you first saw the oncoming truck, did it get over into the northernmost lane or did it continue in the middle lane? A. It stayed in the middle lane.

* * * * *

"Q. Is this correct, that the highest speed that you estimate you attained while attempting to pass the semi moving in the same direction you were, was approximately thirty-five miles an hour? A. That is right, approximately, that speed.

"Q. It could have been a few miles per hour either way? A. That is right.

"Q. Would you have attained a speed during that time as high as, say, forty miles an hour? A. It is conceivable.

"Q. Could you have attained a speed during that time you were attempting to pass the vehicle, of, say, forty-five miles an hour? A. I don't know. It is possible.

"Q. Is it possible that you attained a speed while you were attempting to pass that vehicle of as high as fifty miles an hour? A. I don't believe so."

Based upon Charlotte's testimony hereinabove quoted from her deposition, appellant, in her opening brief, argues as follows:

"Since the truck was 38 to 45 feet long, it would take Charlotte 6 seconds just to reach the front of the truck. In 6 seconds, traveling at the speed of 35 miles per hour, or approximately 52 feet per second, the De Soto would cover a distance of over 300 feet. Yet, by her own testimony, Charlotte could see only 200 to 225 feet ahead of her when she first pulled out to pass the truck, and only 150 feet ahead of her when she was half-way alongside the truck she was attempting to pass.

"She stated that her vision was limited by the curve in the road and by her position in the middle lane as she was attempting to pass the truck.

"By this conduct, which was the proximate cause of the death of deceased, defendant Charlotte Phelps showed a lack of reasonable care in attempting to pass a long trailer truck on a curve when her vision ahead of her was obscured. Her account of the accident is not only contradicted, but the only evidence of how the accident happened.

"Therefore, plaintiff submits that reasonable men can draw but one conclusion—that defendant Charlotte Phelps was negligent in operating the De Soto, which negligence was the proximate cause of the accident and the death of deceased."

Appellant has taken the position that the trial court was required to find that all of the estimates of speeds and distances given by Charlotte in her deposition were accurate. Appellant ignores the testimony of Mrs. Prentiss that Charlotte passed her when she was traveling about 40 miles an hour, and Dan Flemming's testimony that when he passed Charlotte she was driving about 35 miles an hour. Appellant, in her mathematical calculations by which she attempts to prove Charlotte's negligence, also ignores all the other and more convincing evidence that Charlotte had clear vision for over 600 feet instead of 200 to 225 as estimated by her. Appellant dismisses the photographs of the site of the accident by saying they were taken on a brighter day.

While Charlotte herself was the only eye witness to the accident who testified at the trial, there was other and highly conflicting evidence as to the character of the curve in the road at the site of the accident, and the speeds of the other automobiles, as well as the one Charlotte was driving.

Appellant also urges that "When an automobile goes off the highway and collides with a stationary object, a tree in this case, such an accident does not ordinarily occur in the absence of someone's negligence. Druzanich v. Criley, 1942, 19 Cal.2d 439, 122 P.2d 53; Goss v. Pacific Motor Co., 1927, 85 Cal.App. 455, 259 P. 455. * * *

"Accordingly, plaintiff submits that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in this case, and that plaintiff was entitled to an inference of negligence."

[1] Assuming, but not deciding, that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does apply to the facts of this action, where the record contains evidence regarding the cause of the accident and the acts of the defendant Charlotte, as well as the reasons for those acts, the inference of negligence arising from the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is merely additional conflicting evidence. Pellegrino v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 79 Cal.App.2d 40, 43, 179 P.2d 39; Druzanich v. Criley, supra, 19 Cal.2d at page 444, 122 P.2d 53.

[2] It is not the province of an appellate court to reweigh the evidence or to resolve its conflicts. We must assume that the trial court has considered all the evidence before it, determined which witnesses are to be believed, explained all discrepancies and inaccuracies to its own satisfaction, and that the findings express the facts.

[3] In the instant action, there is substantial evidence in the record supporting the challenged finding that Charlotte was not negligent.

[4] There being no negligence on the part of the defendant, plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages. Therefore, the question as to decedent's status as a guest or a passenger in the automobile at the time of the collision need not be considered, and the trial court's failure to find thereon was not error.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Anthony R. SANCHEZ and Dolores Sanchez, Defendants and Appellants.

Adele White, San Jose Abstract and Title Insurance Company, Jack L. Woolf, Olympia Woolf, et al., Defendants.

No. 16443.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 2, 1955.

Action involving establishment of easement by prescription. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Leonard R. Avilla, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and two of the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that evidence supported the award of an easement in a strip 15 feet wide.

Affirmed.

1. Easements ⇨61(9½)

In action involving prescriptive easement in 15 foot strip adjacent to 20 foot strip as to which plaintiffs had acquired easement by grant, finding that if defendants obstruct the 35 foot easement "plaintiffs would have no means of ingress and egress" was not a finding that 15 foot strip was way of necessity and as such, a finding that was inconsistent with finding that easement in 15 foot strip was acquired by prescription.

2. Easements ⇨10(1)

No length of user by way of necessity can ripen into an easement by prescription, at least while the necessity continues.

3. Easements ⇨18(2)

A way of necessity arises by operation of law when a grantor conveys land shut off from access to road by grantor's remaining land, and such a way is vested in grantee as an appurtenance to the estate granted.

4. Easements ⇨18(1)

A way of necessity cannot be established except in a case of strict necessity.

5. Easements ⇨36(1), 61(8, 9½)

That plaintiff's use has been uninterrupted and that plaintiff's claim of right has been communicated to defendant are elements of proof in establishing title by prescription, and such elements are covered by a plea or a finding of ownership of right of way in real property.

6. Easements ⇨61(8)

Title by prescription may be established under an allegation of ownership.

7. Easements ⇨61(8, 9½)

Plaintiffs' allegation that they "have an easement" and finding that they "have acquired an easement by prescription across the said real property" and conclusion that they had an "easement and right of way for ingress and egress" and that it was "appurtenant" to plaintiffs' lands were sufficient, notwithstanding failure to expressly find that plaintiffs' use was "uninterrupted" and that plaintiffs' claim of right was "communicated" to defendants.

8. Easements ⇨36(3)

In action involving easement in 15 foot strip by prescription, evidence disclosed uninterrupted use during prescriptive period, use under claim of right based upon belief in right to use road, communication of right, and that user was of a roadway 18 feet wide, three feet of which were on a 20 foot easement that had been created by grant.

9. Easements ⇨9(1)

As to "claim of right" relied upon in establishing easement by prescription, it is not necessary in order that a use be adverse that it be made either in the belief or under a claim that it is legally justified; the essential quality is that it be not made in subordination to those against whom it is claimed to be adverse; and one who uses under a claim of right in himself is denying a use by the permission of another.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Defendants Anthony and Dolores Sanchez own a parcel of land which fronts upon a highway. Plaintiffs acquired by grant an easement 20 feet wide across the Sanchez parcel as a means of access to their adjoining and nearby lands but they use a roadway which embraces only 3 feet of that easement and includes an adjoining strip 15 feet wide.

The court found that the plaintiffs acquired an easement in the 20 foot strip by grant and in the 15 foot strip by prescription; concluded that plaintiffs have an easement for ingress and egress across said 35 foot right of way; and quieted their title thereto.

Defendants Sanchez have appealed, challenging the easement by prescription, not the easement by grant. They question the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment and the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

[1-4] A finding that if defendants obstruct this 35 foot easement "plaintiffs would have no means of ingress and egress to their respective parcels of real property" is not, as claimed by defendants, a finding that the 15 foot strip is a way of necessity and as such a finding that is inconsistent with the finding that the easement in the 15 foot strip was acquired by prescription.* The 20 foot easement by grant was and is available, though less convenient because of trees, shrubs and other obstructions upon it. Obstruction of both easements (the entire 35 feet of right of way) would be a quite different thing from obstruction of the 15 foot or the 20 foot strip only, leaving the other available for use.

* " * * * no length of user by way of necessity can ripen into an easement by prescription, at least while the necessity continues * * *." Martinelli v. Luis, 213 Cal. 183, 184-185, 1 P.2d 980.

A way of necessity arises by operation of law when a grantor conveys land shut off from access to a road by the grantor's remaining land. It is vested in the [5-7] Defendants claim the findings are fatally defective because of a failure expressly to find that plaintiffs' use was "uninterrupted" and that plaintiffs' claim of right was "communicated" to the defendants. Those, of course, are elements of proof in establishing a title by prescription. They are covered by a plea or a finding of "ownership" of a right of way in real property. Corea v. Higuera, 153 Cal. 451, 454-455, 95 P. 882, 17 L.R.A., N.S., 1018; Richert v. City of San Diego, 109 Cal.App. 548, 552-553, 293 P. 673. Title by prescription may be established under an allegation of ownership. Glatts v. Henson, 31 Cal.2d 368, 372, 188 P.2d 745. Accordingly in our case, plaintiffs' allegation that they "have an easement" and the finding that they "have acquired an easement by prescription across the said real property," and the conclusion that they have an "easement and right of way for ingress and egress" and that it is "appurtenant" to the lands owned by plaintiffs are deemed sufficient.

[8,9] Defendants claim there was a failure to prove that plaintiffs' use was "uninterrupted" during the prescriptive period. The "interruptions" to which they refer were mere oral protests now and then made by various of defendants' predecessors in interest and in one instance the parking of some cars across the roadway, which cars were removed when plaintiff Lord objected, and none thereof availed to stop or suspend plaintiffs' use, which went right on. This was far short of the physical obstructions which prevented use of the roadway in Lapique v. Morrison, 29 Cal.App. 136, 154 P. 881. As held in Cox v. Clough, 70 Cal. 345, 347, 11 P. 732, 733, "the mere disputing their right" would not prevent the bar of the statute. See also Crossett v. Souza, 3 Cal.2d 721, 723-724, 45 P.2d 970.

grantee as an appurtenance to the estate granted. Mesmer v. Uharriet, 174 Cal. 110, 112, 162 P. 104; see also 17 Cal.Jur. 2d 112-115, § 16.

A way of necessity "cannot be established except in a case of strict necessity." Orr v. Kirk, 100 Cal.App.2d 678, 684-685, 224 P.2d 71, 75.

The evidence is sufficient to show that the use was made under a claim of right. Plaintiffs Lord, Rapley and Nakatsu testified they felt they had a right to use the road. There is evidence that the plaintiffs and their predecessors openly used the road and never asked or received permission to use it. That would support an inference of a claim of right. O'Banion v. Borba, 32 Cal.2d 145, 147-148, 195 P.2d 10; Pratt v. Hodgson, 91 Cal.App.2d 401, 404-405, 204 P.2d 934.

As to "claim of right," it is "not necessary in order that a use be adverse that it be made either in the belief or under a claim that it is legally justified. The essential quality is that it be not made in subordination to those against whom it is claimed to be adverse. Yet he who claims a right in himself is impliedly asserting an absence of any right in another inconsistent with the right claimed. Hence one who uses under a claim of right in himself is denying a use by the permission of another." Restatement of the Law of Property, § 458, Comment d. See also Humphreys v. Blasingame, 104 Cal. 40, 42-43, 37 P. 804; Wood v. Davidson, 62 Cal.App.2d 885, 888, 145 P.2d 659; Shonafelt v. Busath, 66 Cal. App.2d 5, 13, 151 P.2d 873.

There is evidence that plaintiffs' claim of right was communicated to the defendants Sanchez. Plaintiff Lord expressly communicated his claim of right to Anthony Sanchez and to at least three prior owners. In so doing he used the plural ("we"), from which it could be inferred he was giving notice of a right claimed by all the plaintiffs. Also the character of the use (continuous, open, notorious) would warrant an inference that the owner of the servient land was aware of the fact that plaintiffs were acting under a claim of right. Crossett v. Souza, supra, 3 Cal.2d 721, 724, 45 P.2d 970; Dooling v. Dabel, 82 Cal.App.2d 417, 421-422, 186 P.2d 183.

Defendants claim the evidence fails to support the finding that plaintiffs Keaveny and Rapley acquired prescriptive rights. As to the Keavenys, defendants rely upon an alleged conversation between them and Anthony Sanchez in February, 1952. The Keavenys had an easement by prescription across the road by November of 1950 because they trace their title to their property back to the Lords whose adverse use started not later than November of 1945. Therefore, nothing that Sanchez said in February of 1952 could wipe out their right to use the motel road. As to the Rapleys, defendants base this contention on the fact that Mr. Rapley at first thought that this was a public road. It is true that for a while he did think it was a public road. In other words, his use of the road was not in recognition of any authority on the part of the owners of the "Sanchez" property to prevent or permit such use. In Humphreys v. Blasingame, supra, 104 Cal. 40, 37 P. 804, the plaintiff mistakenly "supposed" he had a right of way. In the present case, Mr. Rapley "just figured that there was a road there and we could use it." And in O'Banion v. Borba, supra, 32 Cal.2d 145, 151, 195 P.2d 10, 14, the plaintiff "figured we had a right to go there." In each of these cases the claim of right is based upon the belief in the right to use the road, and this is sufficient to support the finding of a claim of right.

Defendants claim that the evidence does not support the award of the full 15 foot easement by prescription. They rely heavily upon testimony by Lord that at one time cars were parked parallel in front of the motel and encroached upon this roadway. But that was only a temporary encroachment. Lord further testified that he requested removal of those cars and that they were removed. Our review of the other evidence bearing upon this issue convinces us that it furnished an adequate basis for the inference that the user was of a roadway 18 feet wide, three feet only of which were on the 20 foot easement that had been created by grant. There is, for example, evidence that this roadway was used continuously for ingress and egress, and that plaintiffs many times repaired and maintained the entire length and width of the 18 foot roadway. In Stevens v. Mostachetti, 73 Cal.App.2d 910, 912, 167 P.2d 809, evidence that the average width of a road was 20 feet although the entire 20 feet was not constantly traveled, was held to be sufficient to support an award of a 20 foot right of way. See also Crossett v. Souza, supra, 3 Cal.2d 721, 724-725, 45 P.2d 970.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of The State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Niles Robert BOUD and George Edmond O'Hara, Defendants,

Niles Robert Boud, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5400.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Oct. 27, 1955.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., of sodomy in violation of Penal Code, § 286, probation was granted and proceedings were suspended, and defendant appealed from order granting probation. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence was sufficient to prove that penetration occurred, that defendant was not unconscious, and that defendant, without compulsion, intended to and did actively participate in act.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1159(2)

Test on appeal is whether there is substantial evidence to support conclusion of trier of fact, not whether guilt is established beyond reasonable doubt.

2. Sodomy ☞6

In sodomy prosecution, evidence was sufficient to prove that penetration occurred, that defendant was not unconscious, and that defendant, without compulsion, intended to and did actively participate in act. Pen.Code, § 286.

3. Sodomy ☞7

Whether defendant was unconscious when alleged act of sodomy occurred was question of fact for determination of trier of fact. Pen.Code, § 286.

4. Criminal Law ☞419(12)

In criminal prosecution wherein defendant's counsel asked him if he had letter from certain doctor, defendant replied in affirmative, counsel asked if he got letter after he had discussed with doctor operation that defendant had had, and defendant replied in affirmative, letter was hearsay and was properly excluded.

Albert C. S. Ramsey, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James D. Loeb, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant Boud and one O'Hara were charged with violation of section 286 of the Penal Code (sodomy). In an amended information, O'Hara was charged with violation of said section 286 and with violation of section 288a of the Penal Code. He pleaded guilty to the charge of violation of section 288a. In the trial of Boud, a jury was waived. He was adjudged guilty. Probation was granted and proceedings were suspended. Boud appeals from the order granting probation.

Appellant contends that the conviction is against the law and the evidence in that the corpus delicti was not established; the evidence did not, beyond a reasonable doubt, establish penetration; the evidence disclosed that the defendant was an unconscious victim of any attempted act of sodomy; and the law should be construed as making the aggressive, active participant the violator of the law.

O'Hara, called as a witness by the People, testified that he was in the Navy; on September 20, 1954, after 2 a. m., he was walking on a street in Long Beach on his way back to his ship, and the defendant, who was alone in a large automobile, asked him if he was going to the landing and if he wanted a lift to the landing; O'Hara got into the automobile, and defendant drove to a place outside a naval base and stopped the automobile. In his further testimony he related facts which, if believed, were sufficient to prove that defendant violated said section 286 as alleged. It is not necessary to state the details as related by him. On cross-examination, he said that during the night, prior to getting into defendant's automobile, he (O'Hara) had been in several bars, had several drinks of intoxicating liquor, was "pretty groggy," was in a daze of intoxication, and was drunk; that it was possible there was no penetration.

Officer Samuelson testified that on September 20, 1954, about 2:45 a. m., he and Officer Wolfe, who were in an automobile, saw defendant and O'Hara riding in a 1952 Cadillac automobile; the officers kept the automobile under observation; about 2:50 a. m. the automobile stopped near a barracks; the officers parked their automobile about 35 feet back of the Cadillac; there was another automobile between the officers' automobile and the Cadillac; he (Samuelson) approached the Cadillac on the right side thereof, and Officer Wolfe approached it on the left side; as they approached the automobile they were in a crouched position; he (Samuelson) flashed a light into the front seat and saw defendant and O'Hara lying in the front seat on their left sides, with their heads toward the left door; O'Hara's pants were down around his knees; defendant's pants were down to the thigh area; O'Hara was up against defendant; when the light flashed into the car O'Hara moved back, and the witness (Samuelson) saw the penis of O'Hara as it came out of the rectum of defendant; when the witness flashed the light he saw that defendant's right hand was spreading the right side of defendant's buttocks upward; defendant and O'Hara "had the indication that they had been drinking, but they were not under the influence of liquor; at the police station the officers asked defendant if this was the first

Officer Wolfe testified that when the other officer flashed the light into the car he (witness) saw that defendant's pants were around his knees; defendant was conscious; when the witness said that he was a police officer, the defendant said "Oh," or something like that; then defendant and O'Hara began adjusting their clothing; the witness asked defendant to get out of the car; defendant finished buckling his belt and adjusting his pants, and then got out; defendant said he lived in Garden Grove or Bell Gardens and he owned a liquor store there; defendant asked if something could be done about the arrest, and he offered the witness all the money he had; defendant then counted his money, which was $20, and he said he would write a check or they could go some place and get a check cashed; O'Hara had been drinking heavily; there was an odor of alcohol on defendant's breath, but he was not under the influence of liquor; the witness did not see defendant participating in the crime against nature; at the police station the witness asked defendant if that was the first time he had committed an act of sodomy; he replied, "Well, I guess it is."

Defendant testified that in the afternoon and night preceding the arrest he went to many bars and had many drinks of intoxicating liquor; he was feeling the drinks and he started home; he met O'Hara, but he could not tell exactly where he met him; defendant did not have any remembrance of O'Hara getting into the car; both of them were pretty drunk; he drove to the Naval Base and stopped at a gate to let O'Hara out, but O'Hara would not get out; he believed that O'Hara "was passed out or unconscious"; O'Hara was slumped down in the front seat; then defendant drove on, but he could hardly see the road; he pulled over to the side because he could not drive farther and he wanted to sleep; then he lay down in the front seat and went to sleep and passed out, and that is the last he remembered until someone said, "Police officers", his pants were up in right position when he went to sleep; he had no recollection tion of any conversation regarding money; the officers asked him whether he had done this before; he replied that this was the first time he had been arrested, let alone doing anything like this.

A bartender, called as a witness by defendant, testified that he had known defendant about 13 years; he had seen defendant at the bar between 4 and 6 p. m. on September 19; he served defendant five or six martinis; then the witness refused to serve him any more, because defendant had plenty; defendant was then under the influence of liquor.

[1,2] Appellant's argument, in support of his contention that the corpus delicti was not established, is that the evidence did not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that there was penetration. "The test on appeal is whether there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trier of fact. It is not whether guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt." People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911, 916. The testimony of O'Hara and Officer Samuelson was sufficient, if believed, to prove penetration.

[3] The question as to whether defendant was unconscious when the alleged act of sodomy occurred was a question of fact for the determination of the trial judge. There was substantial evidence that he was conscious. The court could infer from the manner in which defendant drove his automobile, and from the testimony as to the manner in which defendant was using his right hand when the light was flashed into the car, and from the statements and conduct of defendant after the arrival of the officers, that defendant had not been unconscious immediately or at all before the officers arrived. Immediately after the officers arrived defendant gave responsive answers to questions, adjusted his clothing, got out of the automobile, offered to pay money, counted his money, and talked about writing a check.

Appellant also contends in effect that section 286 is not sufficiently definite and certain to include the person who is the pathic subject or victim. In People v. Featherstone, 67 Cal.App.2d 793, 155 P.2d 685, wherein the defendant was charged with violation of section 286, a question was whether it was necessary that the testimony of the complaining witness (the alleged victim) be corroborated. Defendant therein contended that the witness was an accomplice and that there was no corroboration of his testimony. The court said, 67 Cal. App.2d at page 795, 155 P.2d 685, that the uncontradicted testimony showed that the witness was imposed upon by defendant, that there was no evidence that the witness encouraged the defendant, and that the evidence disclosed that the witness objected and refused to take part in the act. The court also said, 67 Cal.App.2d at page 796, 155 P.2d at page 687: "Undoubtedly, where the persons participating in an offense of this character do so without compulsion, each is an accomplice of the other, and is liable to prosecution as such." It was held therein that the witness was not an accomplice and that corroboration of his testimony was not necessary. In the present case, as above indicated, the evidence was legally sufficient to prove that defendant was not unconscious, and to prove that he, without compulsion, intended to and did actively participate in the act. The trial judge stated that he was convinced that the defendant was more the aggressor than was O'Hara. This contention to the effect that section 286 is too vague and uncertain is not sustained.

[4] Appellant, in arguing that penetration was impossible, states that appellant had undergone an operation. After making that statement he cites certain pages and lines of the reporter's transcript. That citation shows that: counsel for defendant asked him if he had a letter from a doctor in Pomona; defendant replied in the affirmative; counsel for defendant asked him if he got the letter after he had discussed with the doctor a rectal operation that defendant had; defendant replied in the affirmative. His counsel offered the letter in evidence. An objection to the letter, on the ground that it was hearsay, was sustained. The ruling was correct. Counsel for defendant also refers to, and quotes from, a report made by a doctor who was appointed by the court (apparently a doctor who was appointed in connection with proceedings as to sexual psychopathy). Those proceedings were not a part of the trial and were had after the defendant had been adjudged guilty of the offense charged. The report is not a part of the record on appeal.

The evidence was sufficient to support the adjudication that defendant was guilty as charged.

The order granting probation is affirmed.

Oct. 31, 1955.

Action to compel specific performance of agreement to sell certain realty. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jerold E. Weil, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where the purchasers had deposited in escrow the cash, note and trust deed required by preliminary agreement, but vendor had refused to deposit deed in escrow, finding that purchasers had performed all terms of agreement was supported by evidence, though trust deed did not contain supposed reservation of mineral rights.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Specific Performance ⇨121(11)

In action to compel specific performance of agreement to sell certain realty, where purchasers deposited in escrow the cash, note and trust deed required by agreement, but vendor refused to deposit deed in escrow, finding that purchasers had performed all terms of agreement was supported by evidence, though trust deed did not contain supposed reservation of mineral rights.

2. Specific Performance ⇨121(3)

In action to compel specific performance of agreement to sell certain realty, finding that purchasers had demanded a conveyance in accordance with terms of contract, and vendor had refused to execute and deliver such conveyance, was supported by evidence.

3. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨82, 86

Where purchasers deposited in escrow the cash, note and trust deed required by agreement to sell certain realty, but vendor refused to deposit deed in escrow, fact that purchasers had signed escrow agent's proposed amendment to escrow instructions did not constitute an abandonment of or a change in terms of original agreement.

4. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨145

Where purchasers deposited in escrow the cash, note and trust deed required by agreement to sell certain realty, but vendor refused to deposit deed in escrow, fact that escrow agent sent to vendor for signature a deed containing a reservation of mineral rights different from that contained in original instruction, did not justify vendor's failure to comply with terms of agreement.

Charles A. Thomasset, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Potter, Potter & Rouse, Walter S. Home, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment that she shall execute and deliver through a certain escrow a grant deed conveying to plaintiffs, as joint tenants, a certain 38.2 acre parcel of real property.

May 8, 1953, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into a written contract, whereby plaintiffs agreed to buy and defendant agreed to sell said real property for $4,500, to be paid $1,500 in cash through the escrow and the balance by promissory note secured by trust deed on said property. Plaintiffs deposited in the escrow the cash, note and trust deed. Defendant failed and refused to deposit any deed in said escrow.

Appellant urges as grounds for reversal that certain findings of fact are not supported by the evidence. As listed in appellant's opening brief, they are:

"Finding XII, in substance, provides that plaintiffs had performed and fulfilled each and all of the terms and conditions of the original escrow agreement.

"Finding XIII provides, in substance, that plaintiffs demanded of defendant that she perform the terms of the original escrow agreement and that defendant refused to do so.

"Finding XIV is to the effect that defendant in refusing to execute and deliver the conveyance provided in the original escrow instruction acted in bad faith.

"Finding XV is to the effect that the allegations and denials of defendant's answer are untrue except as the facts are found to be true in the findings of fact.

"Finding XVI is to the effect that the allegations of defendant's first affirmative defense (that plaintiffs had abandoned the contract) are untrue."

[1, 2] Appellant claims that Finding XII is without evidentiary support because respondents' trust deed failed to reserve the mineral rights. Where, as in the instant action, the trust deed deposited in the escrow describes the property required by the escrow instructions, and more, it amounts to substantial evidence of respondents' performance of the terms of the original escrow agreement as found by the court.

Finding XIII is that respondents have demanded a conveyance "in accordance with the terms of said written contract" and that appellant has neglected and refused to execute and deliver such conveyance.

Each of the findings cited as error is supported by the evidence.

[3, 4] Appellant's contention is that, by their approval of the escrow agent's proposed amendment to escrow instructions, respondents had abandoned the original instructions. The proposed amendment to the escrow instructions signed by respondents only could not change the terms of the written agreement. The escrow instructions signed by all parties continued to be their contract. That the escrow agent sent to appellant for signature a deed containing a reservation of mineral rights, which was not the same as in the original instructions, did not justify appellant's failure to comply with the terms of the agreement.

Since appellant's entire argument is based upon the assumption that respondents had abandoned and failed to perform their written contract, the authorities cited in her brief have no application to the facts of the instant action, as found by the trial court and supported by the record before us.

Action for personal injuries resulting from an altercation at defendants' café between plaintiff and one of defendants. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Samuel R. Blake, J., on a jury's verdict for defendants, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that an instruction to jury that proximate cause of injury is cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces injury, and efficient cause that necessarily sets in operation factors accomplishing injury, was not erroneous as confusing jury by leaving impression that if plaintiff, by his own acts, set in motion certain sequence of circumstances resulting in his injuries, he should not complain of results.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐989

It is not reviewing court's province to analyze or resolve conflicts in evidence.

2. Assault and Battery ⇐44

In action for personal injuries resulting from altercation at defendants' café between plaintiff and one of defendants, where jury was instructed on all issues to be determined by them, their verdict for defendant implied findings that plaintiff was aggressor and that defendant party to altercation used no more force than was reasonably necessary in defending himself.

3. Assault and Battery ⇐43(1)

In action for injuries resulting from altercation at defendants' café between plaintiff and one of defendants, instruction to jury that proximate cause of injury is cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces injury, and efficient cause which necessarily sets in operation factors accomplishing injury, was not erroneous as confusing jury by leaving impression that if plaintiff, by his own acts, set in motion certain sequence of circumstances resulting in injuries, he should not complain of results.

John C. Miles, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Parker, Stanbury, Reese & McGee, A. P. G. Steffes, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment for defendants, entered upon the unanimous verdict of the jury. The action is one for compensatory damages for injuries to plaintiff's person as the result of an altercation which occurred on June 19, 1951, at Grandview Gardens, a cafe in New Chinatown in Los Angeles. Plaintiff, with his wife and two friends, had been drinking Martinis at the bar of Grandview Gardens, which was owned and operated by Doc Wong and Norman Wong as partners. Plaintiff and Doc Wong knew each other, but Norman Wong and plaintiff did not. Plaintiff was leaving with his half finished drink in his hand. Norman Wong asked him to finish his drink and leave the glass at Grandview Gardens. In the altercation which followed, blows were struck by both parties.

[1] As to all further facts the evidence is in conflict. It is not the province of the reviewing court to analyze or resolve conflicts in the evidence. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689.

[2] Where, as in the instant action, the jury was instructed on all issues to be determined by them, the verdict for defendant necessarily implies their findings that plaintiff (and not defendant) was the aggressor, and that defendant Norman Wong, in defending himself, used no more force than was reasonably necessary. Appellant does not claim that the evidence is insufficient to support those implied findings.

[3] Over 60 instructions were given the jury. Only one is cited as error. It reads:

"The proximate cause of an injury is that cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have occurred. It is the efficient cause—the one that necessarily sets in operation the factors that accomplish the injury. (It may operate directly or through intermediate agencies or through conditions created by such agencies.)"

It is conceded that said instruction is a correct statement of the law. In the language of appellant in his opening brief, his "criticism made to the trial court and now presented is that it is confusing when used in connection with the assault and battery case. The cause of confusion lies in that it leaves the impression that if the plaintiff by his own act set in motion a certain sequence of circumstances resulting in his injury he should not complain of the results. It does not impress the jury with the fact that in this type of case there may be a constant change of causes of action depending upon which party to the altercation exerts more than necessary and reasonable force to protect his person or property."

Reading the instructions as a whole, it does not appear to us that the jury could have been confused. From the record in its entirety it does not appear that any injustice has been done or that a retrial would be likely to result in a different verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 21097.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 31, 1955.

Action to quiet title to alleged right of way over defendants' land. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thurmond Clarke, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence sustained finding for plaintiffs.

Judgment modified pursuant to concession of plaintiffs, and as modified, affirmed.

1. Easements ⚡61(9)

In action to quiet title to alleged right of way over defendants' land, evidence sustained findings for plaintiffs.

2. Appeal and Error ⚡930(1)

In reviewing evidence on appeal, all conflicts must be resolved in favor of respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged to uphold verdict if possible.

3. Appeal and Error ⚡989

Where verdict is attacked as unsupported by evidence, appellate court's power begins and ends with determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support conclusion reached, and this rule is as applicable in reviewing findings of judge as it is when considering jury's verdict.

4. Easements ⚡61(8)

Complaint seeking to quiet title to alleged right of way over defendants' land stated facts sufficient to constitute cause of action.

5. Easements ⚡30(1, 3)

Easements may be extinguished by non-use and abandonment, and by use of servient estate in manner adverse to exercise of easement for period required to give title to land by adverse possession.

6. Easements ⚡36(3)

In action to quiet title to alleged right of way over defendants' land, evidence sustained finding that easement was not extinguished by non-use or abandonment or by use of servient estate in manner adverse to exercise of easement for period required to give title to land by adverse possession.

7. Easements ⚡61(12)

In action to quiet title to alleged right of way over defendants' land, judgment rendered was sufficiently certain to identify easement in question.

8. Quieting Title ⚡52

Judgment quieting title cannot enlarge grant under which parties claim.

Homer L. Martin and Henry J. Bateman, Tujunga, for appellants.

Braeme E. Gigas, South Pasadena, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This action by respondents seeks to quiet title to an alleged right of way over appellants' land located in the community of Sunland about a mile north of Foothill Boulevard. The westerly boundary of Lot 2 on which appellants' land is located, and the easterly boundary of Lot 3 where respondents' parcel is situated is a common line.

Under date of August 27, 1923, S. R. Deacon and wife conveyed to Gavin W. Craig and wife, Lot 2 involved herein, and a portion of Lot 1 not here involved, "Reserving to the grantor, however, the right of way across the above described property over roads now in use to the Government land and to Lot Three (3) in Section Eleven (11). Township Two (2) North, Range Fourteen (14) West, S. B. M., provided that the right of way to the said Lot Three (3) may be changed by the Grantee if it shall still be kept so as to provide reasonably convenient access thereto".

By deed dated May 18, 1944 the Deacons conveyed Lots 1 and 3 and also "an easement for road purposes over Lot 2", to the respondents Hansen, such easement being described as "the same easement as reserved in the deed" of August 27, 1923. On July 7, 1947, a portion of Lot 2 was conveyed to the appellants Danielson.

The record discloses evidence in support of the trial court's findings that as far back as 1904 there had been a roadway across the Danielson portion of Lot 2 leading to Lot 3, and that up to 1952 this way had been used by landseekers, land commissioners, surveyors, engineers, hunters with wagons and automobiles, miners, farmers, equestrians, moving picture companies, and others. When the Danielsons built a home on Lot 2, no fence or gate was built and the Hansens continued to travel across the Danielson property without interruption. The Hansens were ordered off the Danielson property for the first time in 1952.

Before taking testimony the trial judge and all parties interested visited and inspected the property in question. During the trial some 24 witnesses testified and 20 exhibits were received in evidence. Judgment was rendered in favor of the Hansens, respondents herein.

In explanation of the original reservation of "the right of way across the above described property over roads now in use to the Government land and to Lot Three", the trial court found that "the term 'government land' referred to and meant the Angeles National Forest Lands in the San Gabriel Mountains and that the phrase 'over roads now in use to the government lands' referred to and meant a road which, in 1923, and for many years prior thereto, was located in or near the bottom of a canyon shown on maps as Ebey Canyon; ran from the point where said canyon intersected Tujunga Wash or Canyon and then traversed a portion of said Lot 2 northerly to the Angeles National Forest". The court also found that the location of such right of way reserved in the 1923 deed, "was not at any time changed".

The trial court further found that "When said defendants acquired said portion of Lot 2 they did so with actual and constructive knowledge of the existence of the West Mesa Road and the right of plaintiffs to freely use the same * * * to and from Lot 3 which plaintiffs own"; and that "the first time any of the defendants barred plaintiffs from using the West Mesa Road across their property to Lot 3 was in the early months of 1953".

[1-3] Appellants' contention that "There is no evidence to support the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment", cannot be sustained. On the contrary the record discloses abundant and substantial evidence in support thereof. The rule as stated in In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689, 690, and elsewhere is that "In reviewing the evidence * * * all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the verdict if possible. It is an elementary * * * principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached * * *. The rule quoted is as applicable in reviewing the findings of a judge as it is when considering a jury's verdict." A number of witnesses testified to use of the roadway in question over a long period of years.

[4] The contention that plaintiffs' complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, is likewise without merit. As stated in respondents' brief, "the complaint alleges with sufficient certainty that the right-of-way referred to in the 1923 deed passed over that portion of Lot 2 later owned by appellants Danielson." Moreover, as respondents point out, the record reveals that at all stages of this case prior to appellants' Opening Brief, including a pre-trial conference, the complaint was treated as sufficiently stating the issues upon which the case was tried.

[5, 6] It is true, as stated by the appellants, that "An easement may be extinguished by non-use and abandonment", and also that it may be extinguished "by the use of the servient estate in a manner adverse to the exercise of the easement for the period required to give title to land by adverse possession". However, a survey of the record indicates that there is substantial evidence to the effect that there was no such non-use or abandonment. While it is true that defendants presented evidence as to the building of a fence in 1948, there was likewise evidence that appellants freely used the roadway until 1953. The rule of appellate review in reference to conflicting evidence has been herein previously stated.

Other points raised are likewise predicated upon an interpretation of the evidence favorable to appellants' contentions, whereas, under the long established rule hereinbefore mentioned, the trial court's interpretation must be adopted where the judgment is supported by any substantial evidence. This is true in respect to appellants' contention that the claimed easement was superseded by a 1947 easement deed arrangement between respondents and other parties which under respondents' theory related to property east of the Danielson property and not involved herein.

[7] There is no merit to appellants' other contentions to the effect that the judgment is indefinite and uncertain "as to the property affected and location of the easement"; and that neither the Deacons who created the original easement, nor the parties to whom the easement was given, "intended, used or in any manner conducted themselves in such a manner as to indicate the existence of a road over the property now owned by the defendants Danielson". The judgment as rendered is sufficiently certain to identify the easement in question. The trial court's conclusion, contrary to the other point mentioned above, is supported by substantial evidence.

[8] Respondents concede that appellants are correct in the contention that the judgment is at fault in not preserving to the servient estate the privilege created in the 1923 deed "that the right of way to the said Lot 3 may be changed by the Grantee if it shall be kept so as to provide a reasonably convenient access thereto", since a judgment quieting title cannot enlarge the grant made by the parties.

The judgment is modified by adding the following sentence at the end of said judgment: "As provided in the 1923 deed creating said easement, 'the right of way to the said Lot 3 may be changed by the Grantee if it shall be kept so as to provide a reasonably convenient access thereto'", and as so modified is affirmed, the parties to bear their respective costs on appeal.

Suit for annulment on ground that defendant was married to another and not divorced, wherein defendant cross-complained seeking divorce on grounds of cruelty. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., rendered judgment denying both annulment and divorce, and plaintiff alone appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that presumption in favor of validity of second of two successive marriages, together with uncontradicted evidence of defendant that she had procured divorce from her former husband, was sufficient to support denial of annulment.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Marriage $\S$ 60(7)

In suit for annulment on ground that defendant was married to another and not divorced, burden was on plaintiff to show that former marriage had not been dissolved in legal manner pursuant to judicial practice at time and place alleged by defendant.

2. Marriage $\S$ 40(5)

When a person has entered into two separate marriages, presumption arises as to validity of second marriage.

3. Marriage $\S$ 60(7)

In suit for annulment on ground that defendant was married to another and not divorced, presumption in favor of validity of second of two successive marriages, together with uncontradicted evidence of defendant that she had procured divorce from her former husband, was sufficient to support judgment denying annulment.

4. Evidence $\S$ 362

Textbooks in English or French on Chinese family law, which were not official documents or public records within code sections, but were merely expressions of authors' opinions as to what law was, were inadmissible. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1900, 1918, 1919.

5. Evidence $\S$ 366(5)

Where Consul General of Republic of China was not officer having charge of original Civil Code of China, his certificate embodying sections of such code relating to divorce was inadmissible. West's Ann.Code, Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1901.

6. Evidence $\S$ 517

In suit for annulment on ground that defendant was married to another and not divorced, wherein defendant testified that she had procured divorce from her former husband pursuant to judicial practice of Harbin, China, in period 1935-1937, expert testimony as to applicable foreign law would have been admissible if offered.

Neil Cunningham, San Francisco, for appellant.

John C. Alaimo, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued for the annulment of the marriage of the parties on the ground that the defendant was married to another and not divorced. Defendant cross-complained seeking a divorce on the ground of plaintiff's cruelty. Judgment went for the defendant on plaintiff's complaint and on her cross-complaint a divorce was denied on the ground that her testimony concerning the acts of cruelty was not corroborated. Plaintiff alone appeals.

The trial court found that plaintiff had failed to prove that defendant's former marriage had not been legally dissolved prior to the marriage of the parties herein. Appellant first contends that this finding is contrary to the evidence. Admitted is the fact that defendant was married to Alexander Feodorovich Magnitsky on April 17, 1930, in the Saint Iversky Church of Harbin, Manchu-Di-Kuo, China. The affidavit of Magnitsky was received in evidence averring that in March, 1937, the Byzantine-Russian Church issued to him for presentation to the district court, its certificate that the parties had been ecclesiastically divorced in the year 1935 on the ground of wilful desertion by respondent, but that he did not present the certificate to the District Court at Harbin. However, the respondent testified that she presented her copy of the ecclesiastical divorce decision to the one Chinese Court in Harbin and that she was present when that Court granted a divorce.

[1] So far as appears from any evidence offered by appellant there was nothing to show that a divorce as testified to by respondent was not valid and final. If the practice under the laws of Manchu-Di-Kuo at that time was for the Court to confirm the decision of the Byzantine-Russian Church at the request of either party there can be no question that the parties were legally divorced at that time. The burden was on the plaintiff and appellant to show that the marriage had not been dissolved in a legal manner pursuant to the judicial practice in Harbin in the period 1935-1937.

[2] The case is controlled by the settled rule that when a person has entered into two separate marriages a presumption arises as to the validity of the second marriage. This rule is clearly stated in In re Estate of Smith, 33 Cal.2d 279, 281, 201 P.2d 539, 540, where the court said:

"It is well established that when a person has entered into two successive marriages, a presumption arises in favor of the validity of the second marriage, and the burden is upon the party attacking the validity of the second marriage to prove that the first marriage had not been dissolved by the death of a spouse or by divorce or had not been annulled at the time of the second marriage. (Citations.)"

[3] This presumption taken with the uncontradicted evidence of the respondent, which was admitted without objection and upon the interrogation of the appellant, that she had procured a divorce from her former husband is sufficient to support the judgment denying appellant's plea for an annulment.

Appellant further complains that he was erroneously prevented by rulings of the Court excluding evidence offered by him to prove that a divorce as testified to by appellant would not comply with the local law at the time of the alleged divorce.

[4] The objection to the introduction of certain text books in English or French on Chinese family law was correctly sustained. They were not "Books printed or published under the authority of a * * * foreign country * * *, or proved to be commonly admitted in the tribunals of such * * * country as evidence of the written law thereof," within the provision of section 1900 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They were not official documents or public records within sections 1918 and 1919 Code of Civil Procedure. They were merely expressions of the authors' opinions as to what the law was, and were not admissible over objection.

[5] The offered certificate of the Consul General of the Republic of China embodying sections of the Civil Code of China relating to divorce, was not within the purview of section 1901 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because said consul was not "the officer having charge of the original" code. It also was inadmissible over objection.

[6] Expert testimony as to the applicable foreign law would have been admissible, see In re Estate of Johnson, 100 Cal. App.2d 73, 79, 223 P.2d 105, but was not offered. We find no error.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 8697.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
 California.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Action against constable and surety on his bond. The Superior Court, Yuba County, Warren Steel, J., sustained a demurrer, and from the judgment entered thereafter, the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that if the constable in levying an attachment failed to file an inventory of the property attached and if the plaintiffs as third party claimants were thereby deprived of due and proper information and notice that their property had been attached and were thereby required to search for their property, to their damage, the constable was liable.

Judgment reversed with directions to overrule demurrer.

1. Attachment ⇨172

Under statute providing that officer levying attachment must make full inventory of property attached and return same with writ, it was duty of constable to file an inventory of attached property. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 546.

2. Sheriffs and Constables ⇨123

Property inventory which constable was bound to return with writ of attachment was part of "process" or "notice" within statute providing that any sheriff who does not return a process or notice with necessary endorsement without delay is liable to person aggrieved for all actual damages sustained. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 546; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 26663, 27823.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨917(1)

In determining whether trial court properly sustained demurrer to complaint, reviewing court would have to accept allegations of complaint as true.

4. Sheriffs and Constables ⇨123

If constable failed to file inventory of property attached and if third-party claimants were thereby deprived of due and proper information and notice that their property had been attached and were thereby required to search for their property, to their damage, constable was liable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 546, 689; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 26663, 27823.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiffs commenced an action against a number of defendants alleging in their complaint that plaintiffs were the owners of certain personal property which was in the possession of defendant Wills, as bailee; that on or about September 29, 1952, defendant Crewes, as constable, attached and took into his possession certain personal property under a writ of attachment which had been issued in an action brought against Wills; that thereafter, under writ of execution, defendant Drewes, on December 14, 1952, sold said attached property to defendant Smith and delivered same to him; and further, "That defendant Henry W. Drewes, in his official capacity as Constable, failed and neglected to file an inventory of the property attached in the action referred to in paragraph VI hereof, as required by Section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, and plaintiffs were thereby deprived of due and proper information and notice that their property had been attached. They were thereby required to and did make many trips from their home in Burlingame, California, to the vicinity of Willits, Oroville, Brownsville and Marysville, California, in search of said property, to their damage in the sum of $1,000.00."

The complaint prayed for damages against defendant Drewes and his bonding company in the sum of $1,000.00.

Defendant Drewes and St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Company demurred to the complaint and the court sustained their demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment entered after the sustaining of the demurrer.

The sole question presented upon this appeal is whether or not appellants did, or could, state a cause of action for damages against the constable, respondent Drewes, predicated upon the constable's failure to comply with section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides in part:

"The officer levying the attachment must make a full inventory of the property attached, and return the same with the writ."

Appellants contend that since the inventory is required to be returned with the writ, it is a "process" or "notice" within the meaning of section 26663 of the Government Code, which applies to constables, Government Code, § 27823, and which reads:

"Any sheriff who does not return a process or notice in his possession, with the necessary endorsement thereon, without delay is liable to the person aggrieved for all actual damages sustained by him."

Respondents argue that the inventory is not a "process" or "notice" within the purview of the last quoted section and that appellants, who were not parties to the action in which the attachment issued, are not the person "aggrieved." Respondents maintain that appellants' sole remedy was to make a third-party claim pursuant to Section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1,2] The precise question here involved appears to be one of first impression in this state and we have been cited to no applicable authorities from other jurisdictions. However, it cannot be doubted that it was the duty of the respondent constable to file an inventory of the attached property as required by said section 546, and in view of the fact that said inventory is required to be filed with the writ of attachment we believe that said inventory is a part of the "process" or "notice" within the meaning of section 26663 of the Government Code. In Harlow on the Duties of Sheriffs and Constables, a work which has long served as a guide for sheriffs and constables, it is stated at section 224:

"The sheriff's return upon process is a report of his proceedings thereunder. Where the language of the law, which requires him to do certain things in the service of process, is mandatory, he should make the wording of his return conform strictly to the requirements therein expressed. * * * Care should be taken to include the inventory of attached property."

[3,4] We are unable to agree with respondents' contention that the requirement of the filing of inventory in section 546 is only for the benefit of the attaching creditor, for it might well in certain instances be of benefit to the actual owner of personal property that had been attached while not in his possession. We are here concerned with the sufficiency of a complaint and must of course accept the allegations as being true. The complaint does allege that the inventory was not filed as provided and that by reason of such failure he has been required to expend time and money in search of said property, to his damage. We do not believe that it can be held as a matter of law that under no conceivable circumstances could appellants prove damage. We believe that they have sufficiently alleged a cause of action against respondents and that the trial court erred in sustaining their demurrer.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule respondents' demurrer.

v.

Civ. 16314.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 26, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1955.

Hearing Granted Dec. 21, 1955.

Action was brought to determine rights of plaintiffs in membership bank. The Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Herman A. van der Zee, J., entered judgment on the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend the first amended complaint, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that complaint alleging that bank had previously instituted proceedings to determine members entitled to funds accumulated by bank without notifying plaintiffs or their predecessors alleged a cause of action for declaratory relief to determine plaintiff's rights, if any, in the bank.

Judgment reversed.

1. Evidence ⇨43(4)

District Court of Appeal would take judicial notice that Supreme Court in a prior similar case held that complaint for declaratory relief stated a valid cause of action as against a general demurrer.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨863

If action was an action to vacate a judgment, District Court of Appeal on appeal from judgment entered on sustaining of demurrer without leave to amend first amended complaint, was required to pass on the merits of appellant's claim.

3. Judgment ⇨405

Equity will not overturn a judgment unless it appears that a like judgment will not follow.

4. Declaratory Judgment ⇨254

Action for declaratory relief to determine rights, if any, of plaintiffs in membership bank was an action for declaratory judgment, notwithstanding prayer that judgment obtained by bank in action under the Bank Act to determine persons entitled to membership, be set aside, since prayer to have judgment set aside was merely incidental to the cause of action. St.1862, p. 199; St.1863-1864, p. 531; St. 1945, p. 1017, § 29a.

5. Courts ⇨91(1)

If decision of Supreme Court is to be overruled, it should be overruled by the Supreme Court and not by District Court of Appeal.

6. Building and Loan Associations ⇨41(5)

The phrase "all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members" in provision of the Bank Act that corporation which has carried on banking business for 20 years, and which has no capital stock, can bring action to determine persons entitled to membership therein and who had any interest in its property or assets, naming all persons appearing and designated on books and records and "all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members" includes persons who the corporation then knew or should have known had a claim, whether or not the persons themselves asserted a claim. St.1945, p. 1017, § 29a.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Claim".

7. Building and Loan Associations ⇨6(2)

Members of membership bank were the owners of funds accumulated by the bank. St.1862, p. 199; St.1863-1864, p. 531; St. 1945, p. 1017, § 29a.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨917(1)

On appeal from judgment entered on sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend first amended complaint, District Court of Appeal was required to assume that allegations of first amended complaint were true.

9. Building and Loan Associations ⇨41(5)

When membership bank determined to ascertain ownership of fund accumulated by the bank, it owed a duty to members to discover and notify them of the proceedings to declare membership. St.1945, p. 1017, § 29a.

10. Declaratory Judgment ⇨314

In action to determine rights of plaintiffs in membership bank, complaint alleging that bank had previously instituted proceedings to determine members entitled to funds accumulated by bank without notifying plaintiffs or their predecessors, was sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to a declaration of their rights. St.1945, p. 1017, § 29a.

11. Limitation of Actions ⇨180(1)

Statute of limitations may be raised on demurrer.

12. Limitation of Actions ⇨103(4)

Generally, the beneficiary of an express trust is entitled to rely on the fidelity of the trustee, and statute of limitations does not begin to run on beneficiary's right of action against the trustee until beneficiary has knowledge or notice of repudiation of the trust or of the act constituting the breach.

13. Limitation of Actions ⇨103(4)

Where action to determine rights of plaintiffs in membership bank was filed in January of 1953, and complaint alleged that rights of plaintiffs were not discovered until 1952, and bank was allegedly in fiduciary position as to plaintiffs, complaint was not barred by three year limitations. St.1945, p. 1017, § 29a; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

14. Limitation of Actions ⇨103(4)

In case of breach of trust, actual and not constructive notice of the breach is necessary to start statute of limitations running.

1. Whether membership bank corporations could legally be organized under that act is an interesting question. In People v. Perrin, 56 Cal. 345, it was held that the state was estopped from questioning the validity of a membership corporation organized under the 1853 act by the enactment of subsequent legislation expressly

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend to their first amended complaint. This pleading alleges a cause of action for declaratory relief to determine plaintiffs' rights, if any, in the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society and the Hibernia Bank. The basic right asserted by plaintiffs dates back to 1860. The first amended complaint is a lengthy document, which sets forth the pertinent facts in great detail. In many respects, it is substantially patterned on the complaint involved in Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. So far as necessary to give point to the discussion that follows, the allegations of the first amended complaint are as follows:

In the year 1859 Hibernia was first organized. The organizers purported to act under an enabling statute of 1853 which provided for the organization of stock corporations, and not for what we call "mutual" or "membership" corporations, and did not specifically refer to banks, providing expressly only for the incorporation of manufacturing, mining, mechanical or chemical enterprises, or one engaging in any species of trade or commerce.¹

The charter of Hibernia of 1859 provided for 6,000 shares of capital stock with a $100 par value, and thus for a total capitalization of $600,000. The certificate of incorporation recites that the incorporators "have associated ourselves together for the purpose of forming a Society * * * the object for which it is formed is, that by means of it the members thereof may permitting the organization of membership corporations. If membership banks were illegally organized under the 1853 act, the legal effect of such illegality presents some debatable questions. Was a corporation so illegally organized a de facto corporation whose legality only the state could attack? Did it become an be enabled to find a secure and profitable investment for small savings, and may have an opportunity of obtaining from it the use of a moderate capital." By-laws were adopted in the form of a contract between the members. One by-law provided: "Those who shall sign these By-Laws * * * and pay the entrance fee of two dollars, shall be styled and considered members of this Corporation. Those, who, in addition to the above, shall hold one or more shares of its Stock, shall further be styled and considered Stockholders."

The membership fee of two dollars was non-refundable. Other by-laws provided that a member was entitled to one share of stock for each \$100 deposited to his credit up to 20 shares; that deposits of over \$2,000 were to be simple deposits, but the depositor was to share equally in all dividends and losses. It was also provided that the trustees of the society were to be elected by the shareholders and that the president was to be elected by the society. These by-laws could be amended only by a $\frac{3}{4}$ vote of the "shares" represented at a meeting.

It is alleged that after incorporation the "members" of the corporation alone exercised the right to vote and to elect the trustees and to amend the by-laws; that no dividends were ever declared or paid on the outstanding stock; that all dividends were paid to the members based on their deposits; that Hibernia of 1859 issued shares from June 14, 1859, to November 29, 1861, but that between that date and June 27, 1863, all shares were voluntarily surrendered and cancelled with the exception of 4 shares which could not be found. Thereafter, so it is averred, the corporation had no stockholders and the "members" were the sole owners of the corporation, and were recognized as such.

The appellants claim an interest in the corporation descending from one Callaghan Curtin, who on October 27, 1860, signed the by-laws, paid his two dollar membership fee, deposited $3,500 in the bank, and so became a "member" of Hibernia of 1859. From 1860 until April 3, 1914, Curtin maintained an account in Hibernia which at no time fell below $100. On April 3, 1914, he assigned this account to Mary Curtin, who thereupon withdrew the funds. On the death of Callaghan Curtin in 1914 his estate, including "any other property not known or discovered," was distributed to Mary Curtin. The appellants are the heirs of Mary Curtin who died January 18, 1951.

Going back to the history of Hibernia, it appears that in 1862 the Legislature provided for the incorporation of savings banks with or without capital stock. (Stats. of 1862, p. 199.) The directors of such corporations having no capital stock were required to retain at least 5 per cent of the net profits to constitute a reserve fund. Members were apparently subject to personal liability. In 1864 (Stats. of 1863-1864, p. 531) the Legislature amended the 1862 act to permit savings banks "claiming in good faith to be incorporated under the laws of this State" to incorporate under the 1862 act by filing a required certificate. Thereafter, the trustees passed a resolution to incorporate under the 1862 act as a no capital stock corporation, and on August 29, 1864, the required certificate was filed by the president and secretary.

The next pertinent date appearing in the first amended complaint is September 29, 1864. On that date the board of directors purported to adopt new by-laws. One provision was to the effect that all persons who were members of the society on August 29, 1864 "shall be deemed and considered members of this corporation, and the signatures of such persons to an agreement on their part to become members of this corporation, and ratifying and confirming the incorporation of said The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, * * * shall be procured as speedily as may be.

unincorporated association between the members imposing upon them individual liability? Was the incorporation void so as to render the agreement between the members unenforceable? These are interesting questions, but for reasons later to be discussed, they need not now be decided.

"Other persons may be allowed to become members of this corporation by a vote of the Board of Directors, and not otherwise. Membership shall not pass with the ownership of moneys deposited with or under control of the corporation." On information and belief appellants aver that Callaghan Curtin signed said agreement and thereby became a member of Hibernia of 1864.

The by-laws of 1864 did not provide any method by which they could be amended. The board of directors on several occasions purported to exercise this power. One by-law was thus adopted in 1868. This by-law provided that membership was restricted to those who were members on August 29, 1864, and who had at that time not less than $100 to their credit. This by-law also provided that "No one shall be deemed a member whose account is once closed."

[1] At this point, for the sake of clarity, a fact should be mentioned of which we can and do take judicial notice. In February of 1944 the California Supreme Court decided the case of Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, and companion cases. It was there held that a complaint for declaratory relief that was admittedly used as the model for the present pleadings, and which was based upon facts substantially similar to those here averred, stated a valid cause of action as against a general demurrer. In those cases the Supreme Court, without deciding the merits as to the nature of the plaintiffs' rights in Hibernia, if any, held that a complaint for declaratory relief stated a cause of action if it alleges an actual case or controversy and requests an adjudication of plaintiff's rights; that such a complaint need not necessarily show that the plaintiff is entitled to a favorable declaration, and that the trial court should render a judgment embodying its determination, favorable or unfavorable, and should not dismiss the action.

It is next averred that in 1945, at the instigation of Hibernia, the Legislature enacted section 29a of the Bank Act.

Stats. of 1945, Chap. 512, p. 1017. By that amendment it was provided that any corporation created under the laws of this state which had been carrying on a banking business for 20 years and which had no capital stock, could bring an action to determine the persons entitled to membership therein and who had any interest in its property or assets, naming as defendants "all persons appearing and designated upon the books and records of the corporation as members therein, and all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members therein, or to claim any right or interest in the property or assets of the corporation, and other persons unknown claiming any such right of membership in the plaintiff corporation, or any right, title or interest in the property or assets of the plaintiff corporation." The statute provides for personal service on all known defendants residing in the state, whose address is known, service on defendants outside the state whose address is known, and service upon defendants whose address was unknown and upon all unknown defendants by publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the county of plaintiff corporation's principal place of business once a week for four consecutive weeks, and the mailing of a copy of the summons and complaint where personal service was lacking to each defendant whose names and addresses are known, but if their addresses were unknown, addressed to them at the county seat of the county in which the action is commenced. The act also provided for the posting of notice on the bank's premises and at the courthouse, and for the recording of a notice of the pendency of the action. The act then provides: "The judgment after it has become final shall be conclusive against all of the persons named in the summons and complaint who have been served, and against all unknown persons, as stated in the complaint and summons, who have been served by publication, and said judgment shall have the effect of a judgment in rem."

It is next averred that pursuant to this statute, Hibernia, on October 11, 1945, filed such an action against certain named defendants and averring that Hibernia did not know of any others who claimed to be members. In this complaint Hibernia did not name Callaghan or Mary Curtin as members. Plaintiffs in the present action aver that when this complaint was filed the books and records of Hibernia disclosed that Callaghan Curtin, or his successors, were, or claimed to be, members of the society, and that Hibernia knew of the address of Callaghan Curtin during his lifetime and the address of Mary Curtin after his death. The first amended complaint here involved then avers that in the 1945 bank action personal service was made on certain of the named defendants, and service was made upon others including "persons unknown" by posting and publication. Thereafter, in that action, fifteen of those who are named defendants in the instant case, filed their answer admitting the allegations of the complaint and alleging that they were the only persons entitled to membership in Hibernia and the sole persons entitled to its assets. Default of all other defendants was duly entered. On January 7, 1946, a judgment was entered in that action naming the individual defendants in the present action as the sole members and owners of Hibernia.

In the instant case it is next alleged that in 1947 Hibernia was reorganized as a stock corporation, the reserve fund of some seven million dollars was capitalized, and stock representing this capitalization was issued to those fifteen defendants in lieu of their present and existing interests in the corporation as members thereof; that neither Callaghan nor Mary Curtin was served with a copy of the summons or complaint in the bank action, nor were they mentioned in that complaint, although the records of the bank would have disclosed that Callaghan Curtin was a member of the society and had a right in the property and assets of Hibernia from 1860 until his death in 1914, and that such rights were inherited by Mary Curtin upon Callaghan's death. It is further averred that plaintiffs, who are the successors of Mary Curtin who died on January 18, 1951, had no knowledge of their rights or of the facts alleged in their complaint until 1952. In this connection it is alleged that in October of 1951 a friend of Olive Bennett called that plaintiff's attention to a newspaper article referring to the settlement of claims by early depositors; that Olive Bennett knew that her grandfather had been an early depositor in Hibernia; that upon investigation by her attorneys this plaintiff then discovered that her grandfather had signed the by-laws of 1860 and paid the two dollar membership fee, and thus had become a "member" of the society; that in July of 1952 she first learned of the action brought by Hibernia under section 29a of the Bank Act and of the entry of judgment entered in that action. This was the first date upon which plaintiffs secured knowledge of their rights, if any. This action was filed on January 15, 1953. The first amended complaint alleges an actual controversy and seeks a declaration of plaintiffs' rights and to set aside the default judgment.

The demurrer of defendants not only charged that the first amended complaint did not state a cause of action, but pleaded the statute of limitations and laches, and particularly urged that the cause of action pleaded, if any, was barred by the judgment under section 29a of the Bank Act. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, judgment was entered, and this appeal taken.

[2, 3] At the inception of this appeal we are met with a controversy over the nature of the cause of action attempted to be pleaded. The respondents urge that the primary cause of action pleaded is an action to set aside the 1946 judgment, and not one for declaratory relief. Appellants argue that the main gist of the action is to secure a determination of their right to membership in the society, and that the prayer to set aside the 1946 judgment is only incidental to that; that the setting aside of the judgment would avail them nothing without a determination of their rights to membership. The distinction between the two types of action is important. If this is an action to vacate a judgment then we would have to pass on the merits of appellants' claim to membership. The rule seems to be well settled that "Equity will not overturn a judgment unless it appears that a like judgment would not follow. It is incumbent upon the complainant to plead and prove that the result in the main action would have been different had the fraud or mistake not occurred." Wilson v. Wilson, 55 Cal.App.2d 421, 427, 130 P.2d 782, 785. But if the action is one for declaratory relief a different rule applies. The Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, held that in such an action the complaint is good against a general demurrer if it pleads a controversy over membership, and that it is immaterial, on demurrer, whether, as a matter of law or fact, the complaint avers facts showing that the asserted claim is valid or invalid. In either event a controversy has been pleaded and the plaintiff is entitled to a determination of that claim, favorable or unfavorable.

[4] We agree with appellants that this action is primarily one for a declaratory judgment, and that the prayer to set aside the 1946 judgment is merely incidental to that cause of action. If the 1946 judgment is set aside as to appellants, that relief would avail them nothing without an ultimate determination of their interests in Hibernia. Obviously, the main action is for declaratory relief, and, according to the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, all that need be pleaded in such an action is a controversy over membership. The fact that the court here should, if a proper case is made out, set aside the 1946 judgment as to appellants, does not necessarily make the action one to set aside the judgment, thus requiring a decision on the merits. An examination of the pleading demonstrates that this is a single action for declaratory relief to determine the interest, if any, appellants have in Hibernia, and that the prayer for setting aside the judgment is merely incidental to the main relief and cause of action pleaded. The situation here presented is not different in principle from one where in a quiet title action it is also sought to vacate a judgment or to void an instrument under which the adverse parties claim. In such situations it is well settled that the incidental relief prayed for does not convert the action into one to set aside the judgment or instrument. The proper rule is stated in Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 414, 77 P. 1007, 1009, as follows: "The complaint states only a single cause of action, viz., to quiet the plaintiff's title; as against the defendant, to the land therein described, and, as incidental thereto, for the purpose of making the judgment more effective, to have the instrument under which the defendant asserts title declared void." See also Thompson v. Moore, 8 Cal.2d 367, 65 P.2d 800, 109 A.L.R. 1027; California Trust Co. v. Cohn, 214 Cal. 619, 7 P.2d 297; Wood v. Roach, 125 Cal.App. 631, 14 P.2d 170.

The case of Vincent v. Security-First Nat. Bk., 67 Cal.App.2d 602, 155 P.2d 63, cited by respondents does not hold to the contrary. That case merely held that where there was no controversy over a probate decree as entered, and no ground pleaded for setting aside that decree, there was no controversy. That case is in point only if it be held that no ground is pleaded for setting the judgment aside. In that event the judgment would be a bar. But if any ground is pleaded for setting the judgment aside, then we are right back to the Maguire case. 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. That case holds that a complaint, substantially the same as the one here involved, stated a cause of action for declaratory relief good as against a general demurrer. Thus, the only questions that this court should decide at the present time is whether any ground for setting aside the 1946 judgment has been pleaded, and whether the statute of limitations has run on the judgment so as to make it binding.

Respondents attack this approach to the problem, contending that this court must do the very thing the Supreme Court expressly refused to do in the Maguire case, 23 Cal. 2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, namely, determine the validity or invalidity of appellants' claim to membership. They must concede, of course, that such was not done in the Maguire case, supra, but they urge that that case has, in effect, been overruled by the later case of Essick v. City of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 614, 213 P.2d 492. There the plaintiffs filed an action against the city and others for declaratory relief, seeking to have declared void certain ordinances and a resolution of the city council. Defendants moved in the trial court to dismiss the action on the grounds that the court had no jurisdiction of the controversy because the complaint presented no justiciable controversy, and because, under the facts alleged, it was not necessary or proper to make a declaration of rights of the parties. The motion was granted, and plaintiffs appealed. The court then considered the allegations of the complaint and found that they did not state a justiciable controversy on the merits. Then, citing the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, and another case, the court held that it was error for the trial court to have entered a judgment of dismissal but it should have "entered its judgment decreeing expressly (as is implied by the judgment of dismissal) that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the declarations in their favor * * *." 34 Cal.2d at page 624, 213 P.2d at page 499. The Supreme Court then modified the judgment by striking the judgment of dismissal, by declaring the application for a conditional use permit was not void and did not violate the city charter, and by holding that the resolution issuing it was valid "as against all contentions of plaintiffs at issue in this suit." 34 Cal.2d at page 625, 213 P.2d at page 499. The judgment so modified was affirmed.

[5] It will be noted that in that case the court did pass on the merits of the cause of action pleaded. But the court, far from overruling or qualifying the rule of the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, purported to be following it, and cited it with approval. It is a fair interpretation of the case that what it actually holds is that where the complaint does not allege facts showing a real controversy, but discloses in fact that no controversy exists, the trial court should decide the case on a demurrer or motion to dismiss by holding that, as a matter of law, no justiciable controversy has been presented. But that is fundamentally different from the situation here involved. Here there certainly is a real dispute as to whether these plaintiffs have any interest in Hibernia. The reasons why this is so have been pointed out at length in the Maguire case. 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. It certainly would reflect on the orderly and fair administration of justice for the Supreme Court to hold, as it did in the Maguire case, supra, as to one set of litigants, that it was improper for the trial court to determine on demurrer whether the plaintiffs there involved were entitled to a favorable or unfavorable determination of their rights, and then for a District Court of Appeal to hold, as to another set of litigants, that the Supreme Court, in effect, was wrong in that case, that it should have passed on the membership issue, and that the appellate court will pass on that issue. It must be remembered that, in both the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, and this case, so far as membership is concerned, the pleadings on this issue are substantially the same and the same legal issue is presented. Both sets of litigants are entitled to the same treatment. If the Maguire case is to be overruled this should be done by the Supreme Court and not by an intermediate appellate court.

Thus, the only basic question for this court to determine is the legal effect of the 1946 judgment. This, of course, was not involved in the Maguire case, supra. In considering this point we must assume that the facts alleged prior to 1946 present a justiciable controversy over the issue of membership in the corporation. If the 1946 judgment, as a matter of law, bars any action by plaintiffs to have their claim of membership decided, if that judgment as a matter of law cannot be set aside, then there would be no justiciable controversy and the rule of the Essick case, 34 Cal.2d 614, 213 P.2d 492, would be applicable. See also Vincent v. Security-First Nat. Bk., 67 Cal.App.2d 602, 155 P.2d 63. Equally true it is that if the statute of limitations has run on an action to set aside the judgment, such point can and should be decided on demurrer, and no case or controversy is presented. Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R.

1062. But if that judgment, or the statute of limitations, is not a bar, then plaintiffs have alleged a case or controversy for declaratory relief, the merits of which should not be passed on by demurrer. Maguire case, supra. We pass to a consideration of those questions.

First, what is the effect, if any, of the 1946 judgment on the rights asserted by appellants? Does it validly determine that appellants have no rights in Hibernia? Is it res judicata of the entire proceedings?

Section 29a of the Bank Act provides:

"Said action shall be commenced by the filing of a verified complaint, and there shall be included as defendants in such action all persons appearing and designated upon the books and records of the corporation as members therein, and all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members therein, or to claim any right or interest in the property or assets of the corporation, and other persons unknown claiming any such right of membership in the plaintiff corporation * * *.

"Each of the defendants residing in the state of California whose place of residence is known to the plaintiff shall be served personally with said summons * * *."

The act also provides that as to defendants whose addresses are unknown that a copy of the complaint and summons shall be mailed to them addressed to the county seat of the county in which the action is commenced. This statute was modeled on the McEnerney Act passed after the 1906 fire and earthquake in San Francisco.

The first amended complaint alleges that the books and records of Hibernia disclosed that Callaghan Curtin up to the time of his death in 1914 was, or claimed to be, a member of the bank, or claimed a right or interest in the property or assets of the corporation, and that such claim or right passed to his successors, but that neither Callaghan, nor Mary, nor her successors were named in the complaint, nor was a copy of the summons and complaint served upon them although the address of Mary Curtin, who resided in this state, was known to Hibernia, nor was a copy mailed to Callaghan or Mary at the county seat of the county in which the action was commenced.

Appellants argue that under section 29a either Callaghan or Mary Curtin should have been named in the complaint as "persons appearing and designated upon the books and records of the corporation as members therein, and all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members therein, or to claim any right or interest in the property or assets of the corporation."

The pertinent provisions of the first amended complaint read as follows:

"The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society knew, as disclosed by its books and records, that said Callaghan Curtin, up to the time of his death, was, or claimed to be, a member of The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, and had or claimed rights of membership in said corporation and rights and interests in its property and assets; that said membership, rights of membership, and rights and interests in the property and assets of said corporation, passed to the successors of said Callaghan Curtin upon his death."

"* * * said defendants knew that Callaghan Curtin, during his lifetime, was a member of said corporation, and that, upon his death, his successors became entitled to membership in said corporation and had a right or interest in its property or assets."

"* * * said right of membership therein and said right in the property and assets thereof * * * was distributed to Mary G. Curtin as sole devisee * * * had vested in said Mary G. Curtin; all of which was then, and ever since has been, known to defendants herein, or could have been ascertained by inspection of the records of The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society and the records of said Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Santa Clara."

"Said Mary G. Curtin (Travers), up to the time of her death, although knowing that Callaghan Curtin was one of the early depositors of The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, had no knowledge of the fact that he was a member thereof, or was possessed of any of the rights of a member thereof, and plaintiffs herein had no such knowledge until about the month of June, 1952."

Do these allegations aver that plaintiffs are in any of the groups named in section 29a? There is no clear direct allegation that at the time of filing the action by Hibernia that Callaghan Curtin appeared on the books as a member. In fact, the pleading of the by-laws would seem to indicate that upon the closing of the account rightly or wrongly he no longer appeared upon the books of the bank as a member. Thus, the question is really whether the first amended complaint sets forth facts sufficient to show that either Callaghan or Mary Curtin were in the class of "all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members therein, or to claim any right or interest in the property or assets of the corporation."

[6] The parties differ as to how this provision should be interpreted, both arguing at some length as to the proper meaning of the word "claim" as used in the section. The main argument of respondents is that since it is alleged that Mary had no knowledge of the fact that Callaghan was a member, or was possessed of the rights of a member, and appellants had no such knowledge until June of 1952, that this shows that appellants did not know that they had a "claim." This, it is urged, is equivalent to alleging that at no time until June of 1952 did Mary or appellants "claim" membership. Therefore, say respondents, when the suit was filed Mary and appellants were not persons "claiming" to be members, and, since Callaghan was then dead, he was certainly not then "claiming" to be a member. Appellants in effect argue that the phrase "all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members" necessarily must include persons who the bank then knew or should have known had a claim, whether or not the persons themselves asserted a claim. It is argued that any other construction would allow the bank to destroy, without notice, property interests of persons whom they knew or should have known had an interest, and that this could not have been the intent of the Legislature.

There is merit in appellants' argument. The construction contended for is substantially the interpretation given to similar language appearing in the McEnerney Act of 1906, St.1906, Ex.Sess., p. 78, which statute was admittedly the model for the one here involved. That statute required summons to be served on persons who are known to the plaintiff "to claim" any interest in the property adverse to the plaintiff. In Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, at page 317, 88 P. 356, 363, 8 L.R.A.,N.S., 682, the court stated: "* * * so far as substituted service upon a class of unknown claimants is permitted at all, in proceedings which are merely quasi in rem, it rests upon the ground of necessity, and that this necessity will not justify the omission of personal service upon all who could with reasonable diligence be ascertained and found. * * *

We have no doubt that, where the statute is thus careful to secure actual notice to known claimants, it should not be construed as intended to permit a plaintiff to willfully or negligently close his eyes to the means of knowledge and thus secure a decree by publication and posting alone, as against persons whose identity he might have learned by the use of due effort. For the purposes of this statute the adverse claimants whom plaintiff 'knows or of whom he has been informed' include all as to whom he would by reasonable inquiry have had knowledge or information. * * * 'the means of knowledge is equivalent to knowledge.'"

[7-9] In the instant case the allegations are to the effect that the bank knew or should have known of the claim of Mary Curtin, even though she herself did not know of the claim. In other words, it is argued that Mary is a person whose claim was or should have been known to the bank, but who did not claim an interest at the time suit was filed because of ignorance of her rights. Although this is somewhat broader than the interpretation of the statute made by the court in the Kerrigan case, supra, because in that case the person involved knew of her rights while here she did not, and the statute was there extended to include persons whom the plaintiff should have known claimed such rights, we think such interpretation a proper one. If the statute here involved had expressly provided that the bank could serve constructively persons whom it knew or should have known had rights in Hibernia but were ignorant of such rights because the bank in violation of its fiduciary duty to members had kept such members in ignorance of their rights, the unreasonable nature of the statute would be obvious. If it be assumed that the appellants were in fact members of Hibernia, a point we do not decide for reasons already stated, but a point we must assume in discussing the point now involved, then the bank and its trustees were, of course, in a fiduciary relationship with all its members. Based on such assumption, the bank and its trustees owed the members a positive duty of disclosure. Had this duty been performed at the time the 1946 action was filed, of course, Mary would have claimed her interest and thereby would have fallen directly into the class protected by the statute. Yet respondents are asking that the statute be interpreted to mean that even if the bank knew or should have known that Mary had an interest but was ignorant of it because the bank or its trustees violated its fiduciary duties toward her by keeping her in ignorance of her rights, that the bank was under no duty to serve her. So interpreted, the statute would be unreasonable and probably unconstitutional. See, generally, Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 P. 356, 8 L.R.A.,N.S., 682; Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 94 L.Ed. 865; People v. One 1941 Chrysler 6 Touring Sedan, 81 Cal.App.2d 18, 183 P.2d 368. It must be remembered that there is here involved a fund of over seven million dollars accumulated by a membership bank. In such a bank the members are the owners. If the allegations of the first amended complaint are true, which we must here assume, and if plaintiffs are members, a point we do not pass on but assume, then the 1946 action was an apparent attempt by the few then in control of the bank to destroy, for the benefit of those few, the rights of the many. It must be the law that when the bank determined to ascertain the ownership of this fund, since it and its trustees were in a fiduciary position to all its members, it owed a duty to these members to discover and notify these owners of the proceedings to declare membership. The records of those persons who had paid a membership fee and signed the by-laws were in the possession of Hibernia. It knew that the persons involved in the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, claimed to be members. It knew that there were other persons such as appellants who, if they knew of their rights, would claim to be members. Yet, according to the allegations of the first amended complaint, the bank made no attempt to locate these persons or to notify them of their rights, but attempted to cancel their rights, if any, by the 1946 action, in violation of the bank's fiduciary duty.

For these reasons it must be held that, if there is merit in appellants' claim to a proprietary interest in the bank, there was noncompliance with the statute so far as service is concerned.

[10] Of course, this ruling is predicated on the assumption that Mary Curtin in 1945 had a proprietary interest in Hibernia. Of course, if she had no such interest, then the bank and its trustees owed her no fiduciary duty and did not know she claimed an interest, and the 1946 judgment would be binding on her and her successors. Respondents argue, therefore, that on this appeal we should determine whether she has such an interest. But to do this would be in direct violation of the rule of the Maguire case. 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. Although the allegations in the first amended complaint here involved differ in several respects from those in the Maguire case, except for the 1946 judgment and the statute of limitations as to such judgment, the problems involved as to membership are substantially the same in the two cases. As already pointed out, if the plaintiffs in the Maguire case were entitled to a declaration of their rights, if any, in Hibernia, so are the appellants here entitled to such a determination. The fact that appellants pleaded the facts as to the 1946 judgment does not change the legal situation. If they were members, that judgment, for reasons already stated, does not constitute a bar to this action. That brings us right back to the question of membership—right back to the rule of the Maguire case, supra. The question of membership should not be passed on by demurrer in a declaratory relief action. The appellants are entitled to a declaration, favorable or unfavorable, of their legal position. This they have not had. We should not attempt to make such declaration on this appeal.

[11] Of course, and as the Maguire case held, the statute of limitations may be raised on demurrer. The questions here presented are whether the statute of limitations ever runs on a judgment which is void for lack of jurisdiction but where the invalidity does not appear on the face of the judgment, and, if so, what statute of limitations is here involved? In the instant case the judgment was entered in January of 1946. This action was filed in January of 1953. Discovery of their rights was made by plaintiffs in 1952.

[12, 13] The parties dispute, at some length, the question as to whether any statute of limitations is applicable to a void judgment, even where the invalidity does not appear on the face of the judgment. Cases can be and are cited that apparently hold both ways on the subject. We do not find it necessary to decide this question. We will assume, for the purposes of this opinion, that, as respondents contend, some statute of limitations does run on such a judgment. The basic questions are what statute, and when does it begin to run? It is a general rule that the beneficiary of an express trust "is entitled to rely on the trustee's fidelity and the statute does not begin to run until he has knowledge or notice of repudiation of the trust or of the act constituting the breach." 1 Witkin, California Procedure, p. 660; see also Cortelyou v. Imperial Land Co., 166 Cal. 14, 134 P. 981; England v. Winslow, 196 Cal. 260, 237 P. 542; Kornbau v. Evans, 66 Cal.App. 2d 677, 152 P.2d 651; Martin v. Bank of America N. T. & S. Ass'n, 4 Cal.App.2d 431, 41 P.2d 200; San Leandro Canning Co., Inc., v. Perillo, 211 Cal. 482, 295 P. 1026. Thus, the proper statute is the three-year provision of section 338, subd. 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that "the cause of action in such case [is] not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." Such discovery is alleged to have been made in 1952. Therefore, it would appear that, for pleading purposes, the complaint filed in 1953 was filed well within the three year-period.

As already pointed out in discussing the res judicata point, the trustees, and later the board of directors of Hibernia, were in a fiduciary position to its members. This was necessarily impied, if not directly held, in the Maguire case. 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. That case held that the statute of limitations had not there run on analogy to the cases that hold that no statute runs against a stockholder until he has knowledge that his rights have been denied.

Respondents attempt to argue many points as to why Callaghan or Mary Curtin should have acquired knowledge of their rights long prior to 1946. But the Maguire case held that the statute had not, as a matter of law, then run. Most of the arguments now made on this point were or could have been made in the Maguire case, and the Supreme Court held them unsound. We, too, find them unconvincing. Once it is assumed that the appellants have a proprietary interest, then the fiduciary relationship existing prevented the statute from running.

The respondents make a lengthy argument that the complaint in the instant case differs from that in the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, in alleging, on information and belief, that Callaghan signed the by-laws of 1864. One of those by-laws provided that "Membership shall not pass with the ownership of moneys deposited with or under the control of the corporation." In the Maguire case, supra, the plaintiffs were relying on membership in Hibernia of 1859. Respondents argue that if Callaghan signed the by-laws of 1864 then he and Mary in 1914, as a matter of law, upon the assignment of the account and Callaghan's death, had notice of the repudiation. There may or may not be merit in these arguments. But they, basically, are merely another attempt to get this court on this appeal to pass on the merits of the question of membership, a point not now involved. Certainly the arguments do not establish, without question, that appellants or their predecessors had knowledge in 1914, or earlier. The questioned by-law is capable of being interpreted as separating the ownership rights from the mere rights of a depositor, that is, of accomplishing a separation of the proprietary interest created upon the signing of the by-laws and payment of the membership fee, from the debtor-creditor relationship created by a mere deposit. It can be reasonably inferred that membership may have been retained on the closing of the account and may have been inherited by Mary. Thus, a repudiation, under this view, would not have been brought to her attention. Moreover, even if membership terminated in 1914, a point we do not now decide, Callaghan, as a member until that time, may have had some right in the then accumulated reserve fund, but since there was no liquidation of the corporation at that time, there was no legal necessity of asserting this right in 1914. Under this view, Callaghan's ownership in the proportionate share of the surplus continued to exist until knowledge of its conversion was brought home to him or to his successors in 1952.

The parties also argue as to whether the allegation on information and belief that Callaghan signed the by-laws of 1864, the records being in possession of respondents, is binding on a general demurrer. In view of the discussion above, it is not necessary to decide that point.

[14] Thus, the only question as to the statute of limitations is when the statute started to run, if it did start to run, on the 1946 judgment. As already pointed out, the action, in cases of violation of an express trust, do not run until discovery of the repudiation. Discovery is alleged to have occurred in 1952. But, say respondents, appellants were put on notice in 1945 when the action was filed because it was a matter of great notoriety. Assuming breach of the trust, actual and not constructive notice was required. MacDermot v. Hayes, 175 Cal. 95, 170 P. 616.

Respondents next bring forth the novel argument that since Mary is dead there is no way of proving the allegation that she did not have actual knowledge prior to 1952, and that without that proof the statute of limitations is a bar. The point requires scant consideration. On a demurrer, we must accept the allegations of the first amended complaint as true. We must assume that appellants can prove these allegations by direct or indirect evidence. See, generally, Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 159 P.2d 958.

The other points on the statute of limitations were either disposed of in the Maguire case, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, or are answered by the holding that it must be assumed on this appeal that a fiduciary relationship existed.

We conclude that the trial court erred in sustaining the general demurrer and in dismissing the action. We do not decide that in some respects the complaint is not subject to special demurrer, but are sending the action back to the trial court which, in its discretion, may require clarification of any uncertainties and ambiguities that may exist.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Proceeding on motion to set aside information charging defendant with driving an automobile in a grossly negligent manner and thereby feloniously and without malice killing a passenger in the automobile. The Superior Court, Nevada County, James Snell, J., entered an order dismissing the information and the State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient at the preliminary examination to support an order holding defendant to answer the information.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

An information was filed charging the defendant above named with a violation of section 192(3) of the Penal Code in that "on or about the 4th day of May, 1955, in the said County of Nevada, State of California, he did feloniously and without malice, while engaged in the driving of a vehicle in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, with gross negligence, and while in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, with gross negligence, kill Andrew Patrick Monahan, a human being, and that the death of said decedent was the proximate result of the driving of said vehicle by the said defendant at the time, place and in the manner as aforesaid."

Upon defendant's arraignment in the Superior Court counsel was appointed to defend him, and thereafter his counsel moved to dismiss the information on the ground that defendant had been held to answer without reasonable or probable cause. After argument on said motion the court granted the motion and remanded the defendant to the custody of the sheriff for further preliminary hearing.

The People have appealed from the order dismissing the information and contend most earnestly that the order was erroneous. Before discussing these contentions we think it well to set forth certain well settled principles applicable to the instant appeal, which are well stated

[1,2] "The evidence necessary to justify an order holding a defendant to answer to the superior court is not subject to the same test as that before a trial jury in a criminal action, and reasonable or probable cause may be found for holding to answer although the evidence does not establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. All that is required is a reasonable probability of the defendant's guilt. Davis v. Superior Court, 78 Cal.App.2d 25, 27, 177 P.2d 314. 'Reasonable or probable cause', required to uphold the commitment of a defendant, Pen.Code, § 995, exists if there is sufficient proof to make it reasonable to believe that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged. People v. George, 95 Cal.App.2d 425, 429, 213 P.2d 33; People v. Thomas, 90 Cal.App.2d 491, 494, 203 P.2d 567.

[3-5] "On a motion to set aside an information, the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant is not before the court, nor does the issue concern the quantum of evidence necessary to sustain a judgment of conviction. The court is only to determine whether the magistrate, acting as a man of ordinary caution or prudence could conscientiously entertain a reasonable suspicion that a public offense had been committed in which the defendant had participated. Weber v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 68, 69, 216 P.2d 871. A court may not substitute its judgment as to the weight of the evidence for that of the magistrate. If there is some evidence to support the information, the courts will not inquire into its sufficiency. Under section 995 of the Penal Code, the information will be set aside only where there is no evidence that a crime has been committed or there is no evidence to connect the defendant with a crime shown to have been committed. Lorenson v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 49, 55-57, 216 P.2d 859."

11 a. m. on May 4, 1955, and drove to Reno on Highway 40. During that day and evening the defendant had several drinks. Defendant and Pettipas left Reno for Auburn around 9 p. m., stopped in Truckee for a glass of beer and again at Cisco Grove. Prior to the time they reached Truckee and when they were stopped at the inspection station, the inspector suggested that Pettipas should drive, and not defendant. However, defendant allowed Pettipas to drive only a few miles and then defendant insisted that he again be allowed to drive as it was his brother's car. At Cisco Grove defendant and Pettipas while in the bar picked up the decedent who desired a ride to Auburn with them as his car had broken down. The decedent sat in the back seat and defendant and Pettipas in the front. Approximately one mile west of Cisco Grove where Highway 40 curved sharply in an S curve to the right and while defendant was driving at a speed of 55 to 60 miles per hour, he failed to make the turn to the right and the car went off the left side of the road. The vehicle made a complete somersault and the decedent was thrown from the car and killed.

The highway patrol officer who arrived at the scene at about 12:45 a. m., testified that the accident occurred one mile west of Cisco Grove in Nevada County. The highway for many miles on both sides of the scene of the accident followed a mountainous terrain. The highway east of the scene was a level road with some curves but at the location of the accident there was a sharp S curve. Driving west and approaching this curve, you would turn to the left and sharply to the right. Adjacent to the highway at this point was the South Fork of the Yuba River which ran along the highway approximately 30 to 40 feet south of the edge of the pavement and about 20 feet below the level of the highway. The embankment between the river bed and the highway was quite rocky.

From the tire friction marks on the highway it appeared that on the south shoulder of the highway which was quite wide between the county line and where the vehicle went over the bank, there were tire marks 70 feet long. From where the tire marks left the highway to where the body of decedent was found on the rocks, it was a distance of 25 feet, and a distance of 40 feet to where the automobile stopped. From the evidence on the rocks and boulders it appeared that the vehicle turned over end upon end, coming to a rest upon its wheels. The physical evidence also showed that the vehicle had negotiated a left-hand turn and continued straight across the highway instead of turning sharply to the right.

When the highway patrol officer saw the defendant at the scene, defendant was bleeding from the face and confused or dazed. The officer noticed an odor of liquor but could not tell whether defendant's actions were the result of drinking or shock. Defendant, however, in reply to a question by the officer as to whether he had been drinking, denied that he had. He also stated to the officer that he evidently lost control and did not see the turn while talking to his passengers.

In replying to appellant's contention that there was reasonable or probable cause for holding defendant to answer, defendant quotes from People v. Nagle, 25 Cal.2d 216, at page 222, 153 P.2d 344, at page 347, as follows: "'Reasonable or probable cause' means such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused." Defendant also quotes the following from Bentley v. Superior Court, 122 Cal.App.2d 262, at page 263, 264 P.2d 990, at page 991: "It is well settled that reasonable or probable cause required to uphold the commitment of an accused under section 995, Penal Code, exists if there is sufficient proof to make it reasonable to believe that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged."

Defendant then argues that the charge in the instant case requires a showing of "gross negligence" and quotes the definition of gross negligence given in People v. Costa, 40 Cal.2d 160, at page 166, 252 P.2d 1, at page 5: "'Gross negligence has been repeatedly defined in the California cases as "the want of slight diligence," "an entire failure to exercise care, or the exercise of so slight a degree of care as to justify the belief that there was an indifference to the things and welfare of others," and "that want of care which would raise a presumption of the conscious indifference to consequences."'"

[6] Applying the well-settled rules heretofore set forth to the facts shown by the record in the instant case, we are satisfied that the evidence at the preliminary examination was sufficient to support the order holding the defendant to answer. Here the evidence disclosed that the defendant, after having consumed several alcoholic drinks, and notwithstanding the admonition of the checking-station inspector, nevertheless insisted on driving his brother's car on a mountain road, Highway 40, about one mile west of Cisco Grove, at a speed of 55 to 60 miles per hour. He failed to negotiate a sharp S curve in the road but instead drove his car off the opposite side of the road after skidding some 70 feet on the wide shoulder. The car somersaulted down the bank on the opposite side of the road from which defendant had been driving and the victim, who had been riding in the back seat, was thrown some 40 feet from where the car finally came to rest. The victim died from the injuries he received prior to the time the officers arrived at the scene of the accident. Subsequent to the accident, the defendant had the odor of alcohol on him and admitted to the police officer that he had been driving the car at the time of the accident, that he evidently lost control and did not see the turn while talking to his passengers.

[7] The record shows that defendant drove from Auburn to Reno in the daytime and therefore was fully aware that Highway 40 was a mountainous highway with many curves. To drive back over said highway in the nighttime at a speed of 55 to 60 miles per hour in the manner that defendant was driving at the time of the accident would comply with the requirements of probable cause as above defined, that is, such conduct would warrant a man of ordinary caution or prudence in believing and conscientiously entertaining a strong suspicion that the accused was guilty of gross negligence.

[8] The evidence shows also that defendant failed to comply with the provisions of section 597 of the Vehicle Code which requires a driver of a motor vehicle when driving upon mountain highways to hold the motor vehicle under control at all times and as near the right-hand side of the road as possible. Here the defendant clearly failed to drive the vehicle in the manner required, but, on the contrary, endeavored to either cut the curve or was traveling too fast to negotiate a sharp curve in the road. There is also some evidence that defendant failed to comply with the provisions of section 525 of the Vehicle Code, which requires a vehicle to be driven on the right half of the highway (with certain exceptions which are not here pertinent). The accident occurred after defendant's car had driven off the opposite side of the road from that on which he was traveling and went off the embankment. Section 510 of the Vehicle Code provides that no person shall drive a vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than is reasonable or prudent, having due regard for the traffic and condition of the highway, etc. It is therefore a reasonable inference from the evidence that defendant at the time of the accident was violating at least three sections of the Vehicle Act.

None of the cases cited by defendant involve similar factual situations and no useful purpose would be served by discussing them. Each case must depend upon its own facts.

It may well be that when the conduct of defendant is fully explained to a court or jury trying the facts, he will not be convicted, but the question of his guilt or innocence is not now before this court. The present issue does not concern the quantum of evidence necessary to sustain a judgment of conviction but only the question of whether the magistrate at the preliminary examination, "acting as a man of ordinary caution or prudence, could conscientiously entertain a reasonable suspicion that a public offense had been committed in which defendant participated."

In view of the foregoing we conclude that the court erred in dismissing the information.

The order appealed from is reversed.

FINLEY, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is from a portion of a judgment of the Superior Court in favor of plaintiff and respondent Matson Navigation Company, a corporation, and against the State Board of Equalization of the State of California, defendant and appellant. The action was brought to recover taxes alleged to have been improperly assessed under the Sales and Use Tax Law. Section 6001 et seq., Revenue and Taxation Code.

The principal question for decision is whether the sale by plaintiff, a California corporation, of the S.S. Matsonia, an ocean-going passenger vessel docked in a California port, to a foreign purchaser was a transaction exempt from sales tax by virtue of the import-export clause contained in Article I, Section 10, Clause 2, of the Constitution of the United States. Plaintiff also contends that the sale of the S.S. Matsonia was an "occasional sale" exempt under the provisions of sections 6006.5 and 6367 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

Plaintiff has been for many years a carrier of freight and passengers, principally between California and Hawaii, and in 1948 owned a large fleet of freighters and two passenger liners, the Lurline and Matsonia. The sale in 1948 of the Matsonia is the source of this dispute. At that time the vessel was about 21 years old, had been used by the government for five years during the war, and, when returned, was badly deteriorated and in need of extensive repair. Plaintiff decided to restore the Lurline and determined that the economically useful life of the Matsonia had ended because of inroads of air transportation upon surface travel and the large amount of restoration and repair needed.

The Matsonia was offered for sale to domestic operators, but there were none interested. It was then offered to foreign buyers. In January, 1948, negotiations were entered into with Panamanian Lines, Inc., a corporation organized under Republic of Panama laws, which was wholly owned by non-resident aliens and which has never done business in California. Both parties intended at and prior to the sale of the Matsonia that it should be registered as a foreign vessel upon such sale and taken from the United States to Italy. These dealings resulted in a contract of sale between plaintiff and Panamanian on July 13, 1948, following which, on July 15th, plaintiff applied to the United States Maritime Commission for approval of such sale. Approval was granted on September 24, 1948. Title 46, U.S. Code, § 808, 46 U.S.C.A. § 808, made mandatory the approval by the Maritime Commission of any such sale to foreign owners or a transfer to foreign registry.

Delay by the Commission in approving the flag transfer, and the 1948 San Francisco waterfront strike resulted in extension of the time for delivery. On December 15, 1948, title was transferred by a bill of sale delivered in New Jersey, and at the same time and place the consideration passed. On the same day, physical possession of the vessel was given to Panamanian in San Francisco, and the vessel was registered as a Panamanian vessel with the San Francisco Panamanian Consul. On December 16, 1948, plaintiff filed with the Collector of Customs a declaration of the Matsonia as an export, as required by federal law and regulations, i. e., Title 15, U.S.Code, § 173, 15 U.S.C.A. § 173, and Title 15, Chapter 1, Part 30, Sec. 30.30(d) (2) Code of Federal Regulations. On the same day her American Certificate of Enrollment was surrendered to the Collector of Customs. Federal law required prompt surrender of American registration, Title 46, U.S.Code, § 23, 46 U.S.C.A. § 23, under penalty of forfeiture of the vessel, Title 46, U.S.Code, § 41, 46 U.S.C.A. § 41. Upon sale to foreign owners, the Matsonia was legally disabled from ever thereafter engaging in domestic trade. Title 46, U.S.Code, § 883, 46 U.S.C.A. § 883.

On December 22, 1948, Panamanian signed on a foreign crew and the Matsonia sailed for Italy with neither cargo nor passengers. Since being repaired and outfitted in Genoa, Italy, the Matsonia has not returned to California, but has been used in trans-Atlantic trade.

Plaintiff is engaged in the transportation business and is not a ship merchant. The Matsonia was acquired for the transportation business and was sold when her useful life had ended. From 1942 through 1945, plaintiff sold no vessels. From 1946 to the time of trial in 1953 plaintiff sold 14 freighters and one barge in addition to the Matsonia, for a total price of $3,721,325. These sales were made within the period from April, 1946, to May, 1949. Each of the ships sold was about 20 years of age and some were substantially older. All had been used in the war and suffered considerable depreciation incident thereto, and therefore were disposed of as soon after war service as they could be replaced by newer equipment. Plaintiff generally considered the normal useful life of such ships to be twenty years, and at the time of their acquisition contemplated they would be resold at the end of such useful life unless sooner scrapped or lost at sea. Of vessels other than the above referred to acquired during the 1920's, three were sold for scrap and three were lost at sea for reasons other than war service. All of these ships were acquired for use in plaintiff's operations and not for resale.

Although it was not so specifically found, the record supports an inference that the reason for this apparently large number of sales in a three-year period was that the normal process of replacement of obsolete and worn-out equipment was interrupted by the extraordinary demands of wartime service resulting in an abnormal accumulation.

During the entire period under consideration, the Matsonia was berthed at Pier 34, San Francisco, and plaintiff held no State Sales Tax permit for that location, although it did hold several other such permits for other locations for purposes of retail sales of such things as tobacco, candy, liquor and vessels' stores, and for scrap sales at Wilmington, California.

The issues before us may be summarized as follows: (1) Is a large commercial trans-ocean passenger steamship of American registry such an object as can in legal contemplation be considered or treated as an article of export; (2) If it can be, is it to be so considered and treated where it is sold to a foreign purchaser for use in international trade; (3) If it can be and is sold as an export to a foreign purchaser for such use at what point does the transaction come under the protective mantle of the export clause of the United States Constitution; and, (4) If under the factual situation of this case the sale is not one to be considered as a sale into export trade and therefore not exempt from the provisions of the California Sales Tax Act is it nevertheless to be considered as an occasional sale and exempt from levy of the sales tax for that reason.

It is quite apparent that if question No. 1 above is to be answered in the negative, questions (2) and (3) become moot. Appellants contend that it must be so answered, but neither their authorities nor their logic seem convincing. The United States Constitution is silent on the subject and the legal authorities cited do not support appellant's position. No cogent reason has been advanced why an article of conveyance once having been used as a common carrier is thereby or thereafter to be quarantined as an article of commerce or foreign export. Appellant makes this observation: "It is the difference between an article of commerce and an instrumentality of commerce." This comment directs attention to a distinction rather than a difference, a distinction which has not, so far as we can see, the slightest legal significance. It must be remembered that, generally speaking, each and every piece of equipment in the world's transportation system was an article of commerce between the time the manufacturer relinquished title and the operator acquired it. We cannot see how or why the legal character of such an article could or should be changed by the mere circumstances of its use for a time as an "instrumentality of commerce." Appellant seeks to inject here the question of consumability, arguing that the ordinary articles of commerce exported to foreign countries are consumed there and that the possibility is at least remote that they would ever again be returned in the course of commerce to the country of origin. This argument seems without merit for certainly there is no legal prohibition against the export of imperishable articles of utility which might conceivably find their way back into domestic use. It is customarily presumed, it is true, that in the ordinary course of events they will not and it is further true perhaps that they do not. Appellant refers to A. G. Spalding & Brothers v. Edwards, 262 U.S. 66, 43 S.Ct. 485, 67 L.Ed. 865; and to Richfield Oil Corporation v. State Board of Equalization, 329 U.S. 69, 67 S.Ct. 156, 91 L.Ed. 80, and cites baseball bats and oil as examples of consumable goods. Certainly the possibility that oil once sold as an export will ever again reenter the field of domestic commerce is much more remote than in the case of the baseball bats referred to in the Spalding case. But it seems to us that in either case, remote though the possibility may be, there still remains a possibility, while in the case of the Matsonia there is none by reason of the Federal prohibition against a vessel once sold into foreign registry ever again engaging in domestic commerce. The element of consumption of goods exported may be a factor, but only a factor of assurance against the return of such goods into domestic commerce. The identity of baseball bats and oil might conceivably be hidden, but we cannot conceive the same relation to a large ocean-going vessel.

The case of The Conqueror, 166 U.S. 110, 17 S.Ct. 510, 41 L.Ed. 937, is cited by appellant for the proposition that a vessel is not an article of commerce but is treated as sui generis. An American citizen bought a yacht in England and brought it to New York where the Collector of Customs sought to levy a tariff duty. The owner claimed that the ship was not an "article" within the meaning of the applicable tariff act. The court upheld the owner's contention but no constitutional question was presented or decided, only a question of statutory interpretation. The holding of the case was that the vessel was not an "article", "goods" or "merchandise" within the meaning of the tariff act because so far as that and other tariff acts were concerned vessels were not treated as dutiable articles but always had been the subject of a separate and entirely different set of laws and taxes relating to vessels alone. If this be the rule then appellant has not shown by what authority an object not an "article", "goods" or "merchandise" and not recognizable as an object of export can nevertheless be subjected to the California sales tax. It is true that under the Act the tax is on the transaction or sale rather than on the object, but we do not believe that it was ever intended by the legislature that the sale of an object can be taxed, though that object may not be considered as an article of commerce or export.

The identical proposition under discussion was considered and rejected in the case of Alaska Steamship Co. v. State of Washington, 1948, 31 Wash.2d 328, 196 P.2d 1001, 1009-1010. The court said:

"The question here presented is novel, as well as important. We find no case in which the right of the state to levy an excise tax, in connection with the sale of merchandise claimed to be an export, concerned property which proceeded, as an export, beyond the territorial limits of the state and of the United States under its own power.

"The unusual circumstance here present, that the steamship itself is the property exported, is unimportant in applying the constitutional provision. Seagoing vessels are personal property and subject to sale, as are other articles of commerce. They are, of course, subject to Federal laws concerning registry, sale, and so forth."

[1-3] We agree with this conclusion by the Supreme Court of Washington. No logical reason has been advanced by appellant to the contrary. We hold, therefore, that the Matsonia was a proper object of export. We hold further that by reason of her sale to Panamanian Lines, Inc., a foreign corporation organized under the laws of the Republic of Panama, the vessel was sold as an export into export trade. The word "export" as used in the constitution and laws of the United States prohibiting taxes on "exports" generally means the transportation of goods from the United States to a foreign state or country. West India Oil Co. v. Sancho, 1 Cir., 108 F.2d 144, 147. "Exportation" means a severance of goods from the mass of things belonging to the United States with intention of limiting them to the mass of things belonging to some foreign country. United States v. 200 Watches, D.C.N.Y., 66 F.Supp. 228, 230. Another country as the intended destination of the goods is essential to the idea of exportation. Swan & Finch Co. v. United States, 190 U.S. 143, 23 S.Ct. 702, 47 L.Ed. 984; Kidd v. Flagler, C.C., 54 F. 367, 369. To "export" means to carry or send abroad. Canton R. Co. v. Rogan, 340 U.S. 511, 71 S.Ct. 447, 95 L.Ed. 488. The Matsonia was sold, delivered and became a part of the mass of goods and property subject to the laws of the Republic of Panama. She was thereby irrevocably committed to foreign trade if not to foreign ownership, for under the provisions of the United States Code, Title 46, Section 883, she could never again engage in United States coastwise trade.

[4, 5] The question next to be answered is, was she sufficiently committed into the stream of export trade at the time of sale so that the transaction would not be subject to the California Sales Tax? Appellant maintains that she was not exempt because the sale or transaction was completed before export began. This argument is untenable, for as in the case of Richfield Oil Corporation v. State Board of Equalization, supra, the act claimed to be subject to the tax is the very act which passed title and which would have incurred the tax had the transaction been domestic. For all practical purposes the same acts both in the Richfield Oil case and in the present case extinguished United States dominion over the subject matter of sale and at the same time invested it in a foreign power. A different principle is involved than in Empresa Siderurgica, S. A. v. County of Merced, 337 U.S. 154, 69 S.Ct. 995, 93 L.Ed. 1276, for the tax in question there was an ad valorem tax on the goods involved while there still was no sufficiently positive or certain or irrevocable commitment of those goods into the export stream. The transaction had not yet advanced the goods involved to a position where they were actually subject to dominion by a foreign country nor were they in the ordinary course of events certain to so become. As was said by the court in Cornell v. Coyne, 192 U.S. 418, 24 S.Ct. 383, 384, 48 L.Ed. 504.

"* * * The true construction of the constitutional provision is that no burden by way of tax or duty can be cast upon the exportation of articles, and does not mean that articles exported are relieved from the prior ordinary burdens of taxation which rest upon all property similarly situated. The exemption attaches to the export, and not to the article before its exportation."

The Richfield case presented a different situation from either the Cornell or Empresa cases, for in the Richfield case the oil was not sought to be subjected to an ad valorem tax along with all other taxable property similarly situated, but as in the present case a sales tax was sought to be levied. Oil was pumped by the seller into the hold of a foreign ship which is deemed for many purposes to be a segment of the country of its registry. It thereby passed into the control of a foreign purchaser and for many purposes under the dominion of a foreign land. The chances were extremely remote to say the least that it would ever be pumped out again on an American shore. As was stated in the opinion, 329 U.S. at page 83, 67 S.Ct. at page 163:

"* * * That delivery marked the commencement of the movement of the oil abroad. It is true, as the Supreme Court of California observed, that at the time of the delivery the vessel was in California waters and was not bound for its destination until it started to move from the port. But when the oil was pumped into the hold of the vessel, it passed into the control of a foreign purchaser and there was nothing equivocal in the transaction which created even a probability that the oil would be diverted to domestic use. It would not be clearer that the oil had started upon its export journey had it been delivered to a common carrier at an inland point. The means of shipment are unimportant so long as the certainty of the foreign destination is plain."

[6] Here, even more than in the Richfield case, exportation was made more and more certain as each step took place in the procedure necessary to transfer title and registry to a foreign purchaser. The sale was not a completed transaction until each and every step had been completed. Under the California Sales Tax Act the levy of the tax is on the completed sale and not on the several steps which may enter into or be necessary to its completion. Therefore, when the entire transaction was completed and as title to the ship passed, the event became an accomplished fact which, except for the constitutional prohibition, would have activated the law and given birth to the tax. But the completion of that very act constituted the vessel the property of a foreign purchaser and placed her under the jurisdiction of a foreign power.

[7] We concur in the reasoning and agree with the Supreme Court of Washington in holding that the completed sale of an ocean-going vessel to a foreign owner, including the change of registry and flag, constitutes an exportation of the ship and that a tax levied upon the sale constitutes an impost upon an export within the meaning of Article I, section 10, clause 2, of the United States Constitution and is, therefore, invalid.

In view of this determination it will be unnecessary to pass upon the question of whether sale of the Matsonia constituted an occasional sale under the provisions of the California Sales Tax Act.

The judgment is affirmed.

FINLEY, Justice pro tem.

This is a companion case to Matson Navigation Co. v. State Board of Equalization, Cal.App., 289 P.2d 73. In both cases the State of California levied and collected a tax on the sale and transfer to aliens of a seagoing vessel destined for use in foreign trade. The tax was paid under protest and a claim for refund was filed within the appropriate time. Appellant Board denied the claim and suit was instituted to recover the tax paid. Judgment in the trial court was for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The question common to both cases is whether the sale to an alien purchaser of an ocean-going passenger vessel docked in a California port is a transaction exempt from sales tax by virtue of the import-export clause of the United States Constitution, Article I, section 10, clause 2. The occasional sale issue raised in the Matson Navigation Co. case is not involved here.

The facts which are not disputed are as follows: On December 5, 1946, in New York City, plaintiff and the Government of Yugoslavia entered into a written contract for the future sale of plaintiff's vessel, the S.S. Chirikof, which had an American registry and home port at San Francisco, California. This contract was made conditional upon the cancellation of the United

Application for approval having been filed by plaintiff, the United States Maritime Commission on January 7, 1947, approved the sale. On January 20, 1947, in the Yugoslav Embassy in Washington, D. C., plaintiff delivered the certificate of ownership, Transfer Order No. C-4874 of the Maritime Commission, and bill of sale transferring title from it to the Government of Yugoslavia. The S.S. Chirikof was accepted by Yugoslavia in an "as is, where is" condition at Alameda, California. On January 22, 1947, pursuant to the Transfer Order, the vessel was registered under the laws and flag of Yugoslavia as the S.S. Radnik. On January 23, 1947, the permanent United States registry was surrendered to and cancelled by the Collector of Customs at San Francisco. On January 23, 1947, the Yugoslav flag was raised and a crew of Yugoslav nationals was placed aboard the vessel, preparatory to its departure. On January 29, 1947, a verified export declaration assigning Dubronik or Fiume as the destination of the vessel was filed with the Collector of Customs in San Francisco. Clearance for sailing was obtained on that day, and the vessel departed without cargo or passengers for Yugoslavia. The vessel at no time after transfer of possession to Yugoslavia was operated in the waters of the State of California, except as was necessary for its departure from San Francisco Harbor for Yugoslavia.

Inasmuch as the same discussion and reasoning would apply here as in the Matson Navigation Co. case, reference is hereby made to the opinion in that case. Our decision here is the same. We hold that sale of the S.S. Chirikof was an export transaction and sale and therefore under the provisions of Article I, section 10, clause 2, of the United States Constitution exempt from the California sales tax.

The judgment is affirmed.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES, and Board of Education of the Norwalk City Elementary School District, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Minna Omanoff COOPER, Leon Goldin, June Lillian Sirell, Claire Sokolow Kaye, Solly Rubenstein, David Francis Arkin, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 20960-20965.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 25, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Action by school district for determination of district's right to discharge certain teachers. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred L. Bartlett, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that refusal of public school teachers to answer under oath, before Board of Education by which he or she was employed, specific questions as to their membership in Communist Party and allied questions constituted cause for dismissal under Dilworth Act.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Schools and School Districts ⇨141(4)

Refusal of public school teachers to answer under oath, before Board of Education by which he or she was employed, specific questions as to their membership in Communist Party and allied questions constituted cause for dismissal under Dilworth Act. West's Ann. Education Code, §§ 8275, 12600-12607, 13521, 13526, 14130.5.

2. Schools and School Districts ⇨141(4)

Statute providing for discharge of school employee upon his failure to answer questions as to his knowing membership in Communist Party refers to employee's knowledge of membership, rather than to his knowledge of character of organization, and teacher could properly be discharged for failing to answer question as to knowing membership without inquiry into his knowledge of character of organization. West's Ann. Education Code, §§ 8275, 12600-12607, 13521, 13526, 14130.5.

3. Officers ⇨18

A governmental body may make reasonable inquiries into matters pertaining to fitness of its employees, and may inquire about employee's associates and conduct in determining his loyalty.

4. Officers ⇨66

Where statute provides merely for public employees' disclosure of information, on pain of discharge, it is not necessary that employee have knowledge of nature of organization, membership in which is investigated.

5. Statutes ⇨76(4)

No general law could have been made applicable to authorize inquiry as to public employees' membership in Communist Party, and statute requiring school employees to answer question as to knowing membership in Party was not in violation of constitutional provision prohibiting passage of special laws where a general law can be made applicable. West's Ann. Education Code, §§ 8275, 12600-12607, 13521, 13526, 14130.5; West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 25, subds. 1-33, 11.

6. Constitutional Law ⇨82

Schools and School Districts ⇨141(4)

Statute requiring that school employees answer questions concerning past or present membership in Communist Party, but not providing for any discharge for past membership in party or any organization and permitting the teacher who is a party member to retain job upon disassociation from party is not a bill of attainder. West's Ann. Education Code, §§ 12601, 12602.

7. Constitutional Law ⇨318

Where teachers who were questioned by Board of Education concerning relationships with Communist Party sat each at the elbow of his counsel, consulting him privately and frequently, they could not complain of denial of due process because of lack of counsel.

8. Schools and School Districts ⇨141(5)

School district employees who were summoned before Board of Education for interrogation as to their connections with Communist Party were not entitled to have attorney speak for them. West's Ann. Education Code, §§ 8275, 12600-12607, 13521, 13526, 14130.5.

Wirin, Rissman & Okrand, and William B. Esterman, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Clarence H. Langstaff, Baldo Kristovich, James W. Briggs, Deputy County Counsels, Los Angeles, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

These six actions are appeals by defendants following trials without a jury, from judgments in favor of plaintiffs, Board of Education of the City of Los Angeles in five of the actions, and Board of Education of the Norwalk City Elementary School District in one action, adjudging that plaintiffs may dismiss defendants as certificated employees of the respective school districts governed by said Boards of Education.

Facts: The California Legislature in 1953, added Chapter 2 to Division 7 of the Education Code, comprising sections 12600 to 12607, also section 14130.5, and amended sections 13521 and 13526 of said code. All of these provisions related to school district employees.

This statute, commonly called the Dilworth Act, provides:

(1) Legislative findings as to the nature, extent and objectives of the world-wide Communist movement, the presence in California of active disciplined Communist organizations, the objective of such organizations to place their members in public school system positions, and the clear and present danger that Communist organizations in California and their members will seek to hamper the efforts of local school boards to comply with and enforce Section 8275, Education Code. (Sec. 12600, Education Code.) Section 8275 prohibits the teaching of Communism so as to undermine a pupil's patriotism for and belief in the government of the United States and of this State.

(2) After September 9, 1953, no person knowingly a member of the Communist Party shall be employed or retained in employment by a school district (Secs. 12601, 12603 and 12606, Education Code). It permitted continuance of employment upon disavowal of Communist Party membership. (Sec. 12602, Education Code.)

(3) It is the duty of school district employees to answer under oath before legislative committees or before their employing school boards certain questions set forth in Sections 12604 and 12605. A failure or refusal to answer such questions is ground for suspension and dismissal. (Secs. 12604, 12605, last paragraph of 12600, 12607, 13521(a) and (j) and 13526, Education Code.)

Sections 12604, 12605, 12600 (last paragraph) and 12607, Education Code, read as follows:

"12604. It shall be the duty of any employee of any school district who may be subpoenaed by a United States Congressional Un-American Activities Committee or a subcommittee thereof or a California Legislative Un-American Activities Committee or a subcommittee thereof or any other committee or subcommittee of the United States Congress or the California Legislature or of either house of either thereof to appear before said committee or subcommittee and specifically to answer under oath a question or questions propounded by any member or counsel of the committee or subcommittee relating to:

"(a) Present personal advocacy by the employee of the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or of any state or political subdivision.

"(b) Present knowing membership in any organization which, to the knowledge of such employee, advocates the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or of any state or political subdivision.

"(c) Past knowing membership at any time since September 10, 1948, in any organization which, to the knowledge of such employee, during the time of the employee's membership advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or of any state or political subdivision.

"(d) Past knowing membership of such employee in the Communist Party at any time since September 10, 1948.

"(e) Present knowing membership of such employee in the Communist Party.

"Any employee who fails or refuses to answer under oath on any ground whatsoever any such question propounded by any member or counsel of any such committee or subcommittee shall be guilty of insubordination and guilty of violating this section and shall be suspended and dismissed from his employment in the manner provided by law.

"12605. It shall be the duty of any employee of any school district who is ordered to appear before the governing board of the employing school district to appear and specifically to answer under oath a question or questions propounded by a member or counsel of the governing board or by the superintendent of schools relating to any of the matters specified in Section 12604.

"Any employee who fails or refuses to appear or to answer under oath on any ground whatsoever any such question propounded by a member or counsel of the governing board or by the superintendent of schools shall be guilty of insubordination and guilty of violating this section and shall be suspended and dismissed from his employment in the manner provided by law.

"12600. * * * The Legislature further specifically finds that an indirect or evasive answer to a question relating to any of the matters specified in Section 12604 or 12605, or an answer which neither affirms nor denies shall, for the purposes of this act and chapter, be considered as a failure and refusal to answer, regardless of the ground or explanations given for any such answer. [Last paragraph of Sec. 12600.]

"12607. Any certificate employee of a school district who violates any of the provisions of Sections 12601 to 12606, inclusive, of this code shall be guilty of unprofessional conduct and shall be suspended and dismissed in the manner provided by law."

Sections 13521 and 13526 of the code, which set forth the causes for dismissal and immediate suspension of a certificated employee, were amended by adding to such causes violation of any provisions of Sections 12601 to 12607, inclusive, and knowing membership in the Communist Party.

Pursuant to the above provisions, appellants were ordered to and did appear before their respective governing boards, were duly sworn, and the following questions asked of each of them by counsel for the respondents:

"Are you now knowingly a member of the Communist Party?"

"Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1953?"

"Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1952?"

"Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1951?"

"Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1950?"

"Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1949?"

"Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1948 subsequent to the date of September 10th of that year?"

"Were you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly a member in any organization which, to your knowledge during the time of your membership, advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States, or of any state or political subdivision?"

"Are you now knowingly a member in any organization which, to your knowledge advocates the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States, or of any state or political subdivision?"

"Do you now personally advocate the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States, or of any state or political subdivision?"

Appellants refused to answer any of said questions (appellant Cooper refused to answer only the first 7 questions) but instead launched into indirect and evasive statements of more or less length which neither affirmed nor denied the questions asked. Each of said appellants was accompanied by his or her own counsel, with whom each was permitted to and did freely confer.

Typical of the refusals to answer is the following testimony of appellant Kaye in the Los Angeles transcript:

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1953?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1952?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1951?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1950?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1949?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Were you knowingly a member of the Communist Party at any time during the year 1948, after September 10th of that year?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Findlay: You can't be heard down here very well, I'm sorry.

"Mrs. Kaye: It is the same answer. I refuse to answer on any grounds—any questions that concern my political beliefs or affiliations or associations * * *.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Mrs. Kaye, were you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly a member in any organization which, to your knowledge during the time of your membership, advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or any state or political subdivision?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question on the same basis.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Are you now knowingly a member of any organization which, to your knowledge, advocates the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or any state or political subdivision?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that question.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Do you now personally advocate the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States, or of any state or political subdivision?"

"Mrs. Kaye: I refuse to answer that on the basis that my opinions, ideas and beliefs are my own.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: I have no further questions, Doctor.

"President Willett: Thank you, Mr. Lamoreaux.

"Mr. Wirin: She has not quite completed.

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Oh, pardon me. I thought she had.

"Mrs. Kaye: In further answer to that last question—

"Mr. Findlay: You can't be heard. I'm sorry.

"Mrs. Kaye: In further answer to that last question, I feel that I am loyal to the Constitution of this State and of the United States and will uphold them.

* * * * *

"Mrs. Kaye: In regard to the last three questions that were asked of me, I would like to extend on my answer. I am aware of what the questions are. I think you are, too, because of their repetition, so if it is all right with you, could I state my—

"Mr. Lamoreaux: Yes, indeed, Mrs. Kaye.

"Mrs. Kaye:—extension? When I came into the Los Angeles City School District, I took the Levering oath, which stated that I do not belong to any organizations or parties that believe in, or advocate the forceful or violent overthrow of the government—something like that. I am doing it in effect. I don't have this oath before me. This oath stands of today, because it said in it that I will not, and that is what I swore before, and since it said in there I will not, it stands today. I think that the oath, in itself, would have been enough for you to know the answer to those questions, my taking of that oath."

After said proceedings had been completed the respective governing boards took action suspending appellants and notifying them of their intention to dismiss, in conformance with the provisions of Section 13522 of the Education Code, as a result of which the proceedings below were instituted. The trial court found in each case that the defendant therein failed and refused to answer the questions asked, and concluded that each defendant was guilty of violating Section 12605 of the Education Code, of unprofessional conduct and evident unfitness for service, and that sufficient grounds existed for the suspension and dismissal of said defendant.

Questions: First: Does refusal of a public school teacher to answer under oath, before the Board of Education by which he or she is employed, specific questions as to his or her membership in the Communist Party and allied questions constitute cause for dismissal under sections 12604 and 12605 of the Education Code?

[1] Yes. From the above statement of facts it is apparent that these actions in all essential aspects are identical with the situation presented in Board of Education v. Eisenberg, 129 Cal.App.2d 732, 277 P.2d 943 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), and Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617, except that the later case was based upon the Luckel Act (Chap. 1646, Stats. of 1953), which was modeled after and is of similar import to the Dilworth Act (Chap. 1632, Stats. 1953), both having been enacted by the same legislature. Section 1028.1, added to the Government Code by the Luckel Act, is substantially identical to Sections 12604 and 12605, added to the Education Code by the Dilworth Act, making the public employee's refusal to answer certain questions a ground for his suspension and dismissal. The last section of the Luckel Act provides:

"Sec. 4. The provisions of this act shall not be applicable to school district employees, it being the intent of the Legislature that similar provision be made in the Education Code for such employees by other acts."

The Dilworth Act is the "other act" applicable to school district employees. The Dilworth Act and the Luckel Act, together, cover all public employees in California subject to control of the state legislature.

Defendants contend as follows:

1. The Dilworth Act on its face violates due process of law under the holding in Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 193, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216.
2. It constitutes special legislation.
3. It is a bill of attainder.
4. It offends the principle of separation of powers.
5. It is unconstitutional as applied to appellants.
6. The appellants complied by answering the questions.

All these contentions have been resolved against defendants by the appellate courts of this state in the case of Board of Education v. Eisenberg, supra, and Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, supra. In the Eisenberg case the dismissal of a Los Angeles County school teacher was upheld. The teacher, who, while appearing as a sworn witness before a legislative fact-finding committee, refused to answer the question, "Are you a member of the Communist Party of Los Angeles County?" At the time of her appearance before the committee, a board rule adopted by the Board of Education of the City of Los Angeles required employees of the Los Angeles City School Districts, when testifying before such committees, to answer questions pertaining to membership in the Communist Party. The rule further provided that a teacher who refused to answer such questions would be guilty of insubordination and unprofessional conduct and was to be dismissed in the manner provided by law. The board rule was, in all respects which are material to these appeals, the same as the Dilworth Act here involved. The trial court entered judgment authorizing her dismissal. On her appeal to this court from that judgment she urged substantially the same arguments as numbers 1, 5 and 6 of those which are summarized above. Mr. Presiding Justice Moore, in holding that these arguments were without merit and that her dismissal was justified, made the following pertinent comments [129 Cal.App.2d 732, 277 P.2d 947]:

"In view of the findings that there is a present, imminent danger, that communist organizations in the District will engage in a concerted undertaking to hamper the efforts of the Board to comply with section 8275 of the Education Code and in view of appellant's obligation to inform the Board whether she is a member of a Communist organization whose tenets she was forbidden to impart to her students, it cannot with reason be said that the adoption of its rule on September 22, 1952, was unreasonable or that it conflicts with the appellant's constitutional guaranties."

The court in 129 Cal.App.2d at page 738, 277 P.2d at page 948, distinguished the case of Wieman v. Updegraff, supra, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216, strongly urged by appellant in support of her contentions. On the question of due process, this court said on the same page:

"In the case at bar, the question was whether appellant was a member of an organization which is proscribed in the Board's Rule. She knew the Rule's contents. The incidents of due process had been meticulously observed, notwithstanding former holdings that due process of law does not require that a teacher must have had knowledge of the activities or purposes of the Communist Party. (Wieman v. Updegraff, supra; Galvan v. Press, 347 U.S. 522 [74 S.Ct. 737, 98 L.Ed. 911].)"

In the Eisenberg case, as here, it was argued, in effect, that because the appellant had previously taken the Levering Oath of Allegiance she could not be compelled to answer questions respecting her Communist Party affiliations. The court answered this argument in 129 Cal.App.2d at page 737, 277 P.2d at page 947, as follows:

"A public school teacher's refusal to answer before a legislative committee whether she is a member of the Communist Party is the only question involved in this action. Neither the Board nor the Legislature itself deemed a compliance with the Levering Act sufficient protection for the public. A teacher must answer directly that she is or is not a member. Past pledges or oaths of loyalty are not sufficient for the School Board which has jurisdiction over a vast empire of wealth, pupils and teachers. Its responsibility impels it to require every teacher to stand and be counted. * * *"

Inasmuch as the Dilworth Act is practically identical in its aims, purposes and wording with the board rule there involved, and since it cannot be successfully argued that the Legislature has less power than the Board of Education in prescribing qualifications for public school employees, the Eisenberg case is controlling here.

In Steinmetz v. State Board of Education, supra, a mandamus proceeding was instituted to compel reinstatement of an associate professor at San Diego State College who had been dismissed for his refusal to answer two questions as to whether he was or had been a member of the Communist Party at a hearing before the State Board of Education. The proceeding before the State Board was conducted pursuant to Section 1028.1 of the Government Code, which is part of a statute known as the Luckel Act. That section provides that it is the duty of any public employee, when required, to appear before the governing board of the public entity employing him and answer under oath questions relating to the identical matters set forth and referred to in Sections 12604 and 12605 of the Education Code. The same arguments were there presented with respect to the Luckel Act as have been urged by appellants in the instant cases with respect to its parallel legislation, the Dilworth Act, to wit:

1. That the Act on its face violated due process of law under the holding in Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216.

2. That the Act constituted special legislation.

3. That it was a bill of attainder.

4. That it offended the principle of separation of powers.

5. That it was unconstitutional as applied to petitioner.

6. That petitioner had complied by answering the questions.

In holding that these arguments were without merit and in denying the writ of mandate, the Supreme Court, in Steinmetz v. California State Bd. of Educ., 44 Cal.2d 816, at page 822 et seq., 285 P.2d 617, at page 620, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Gibson, made the following pertinent remarks which are fully applicable to the Dilworth Act:

[2] "Section 1028.1, considered as a whole, shows on its face that the Legislature, in using the words 'knowing membership,' was referring to a person's knowledge of his membership, rather than to his knowledge of the character of the organization. * * * It thus was proper, under the terms of subdivision (d), to question petitioner as to the fact of membership without reference to his knowledge of the character of the organization, and the questions on this point which he refused to answer were not covered by his denials that he was knowingly a member with knowledge of the nature of the party.

[3] "The statute under which petitioner was dismissed is not rendered invalid by the fact that it requires an employee to answer questions as to his membership in the Communist Party without regard to his knowledge of the nature of the party. Petitioner's discharge was not because of membership in a proscribed organization but because of his refusal to answer questions as to whether or not he held membership in the Communist Party. A governmental body may, of course, make reasonable inquiries into matters pertaining to the fitness of its employees. Loyalty on the part of those in public employment is important to orderly and dependable government and is, therefore, relevant to fitness for such employment. (Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 687, 249 P.2d 267.) An employee's associates, as well as his conduct, are factors which may be considered by a state agency in determining his loyalty, and information on that subject may properly be elicited from him. (Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 492-493, 72 S.Ct. 380, 385, 96 L.Ed. 517; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 685-687, 249 P.2d 267.) In this connection, it has been held that a public employer may constitutionally require its employees to disclose any past or present membership in the Communist Party. (Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 720, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317.)

[4] "Statutes, such as the one involved here, which compel disclosure of information concerning a public employee's membership in proscribed organizations, must be distinguished from those which provide for discharge or disqualification because of membership or refusal to take an oath denying membership. Under the latter type of statute, knowledge of the character of the organizations has been held essential (Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216), and the legislation has been sustained only when it expressly or impliedly required such knowledge (Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 494, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517; Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 723-724, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317; Gerende v. Board of Supervisors, 341 U.S. 56, 57, 71 S.Ct. 565, 95 L.Ed. 745; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 685, 249 P.2d 267; Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, 39 Cal.2d 698, 702, 249 P.2d 287, 250 P.2d 145). On the other hand, where the statutes provide merely for the disclosure of information, a requirement that the employee have knowledge of the nature of the organizations is not necessary. (See Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 719-720, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317; Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 492-493, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517.)"

"Section 1028.1 does not violate the provision of the California Constitution which prohibits the passage of special laws in certain enumerated cases and 'in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable.' (See Cal.Const., art. IV, § 25, subds. 1-33.) This section does not fall within any of the enumerated categories, and, insofar as any of its provisions are specific, no general law could have been made applicable. The Legislature, desiring to authorize inquiry as to membership in the Communist Party, could do so only by naming it. The designation of that organization was not arbitrary, but was reasonably related to the purpose of the legislation, since, as we have seen, information as to membership in the party is pertinent to fitness for public employment. The case of Communist Party v. Peek, 20 Cal.2d 536, 127 P.2d 889, is readily distinguishable. The statute there held invalid denied the Communist Party a place on the ballot, and regulation of elections is listed in the Constitution as one of the areas where a special law is prohibited. (Cal.Const., art. IV, § 25, subd. 11.) The basis of the decision in that case was that, in the absence of evidence, the court would be required to take judicial notice of the subversive character of the Communist Party in order to uphold the statute as reasonable and that judicial notice to that effect could not be taken under the conditions then existing."

Although the majority opinion in the Steinmetz case did not discuss the bill of attainder argument, the dissenting opinion makes it clear that the point was fully urged upon the court. Not only is it clear that the majority in the Steinmetz case rejected the bill of attainder argument; it is also clear that the United States Supreme Court has fully refuted that argument in the case of American Communications Association v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 70 S.Ct. 674, 94 L.Ed. 925.

[6] Under the Dilworth Act, any teacher could have been a member of the Communist Party on the date of the passage of the statute and would suffer no penalty therefor. He had 90 days in which to terminate membership in the Communist Party. After terminating membership, he would be completely eligible to remain in his position as a public school teacher. (Sections 12601 and 12602, Education Code.)

Obviously, this statute operates prospectively. Teachers may be removed solely for:

(1) Future membership in the Communist Party after the 90 days has passed;

(2) present personal advocacy after September 9, 1953 of the overthrow of the government by force or violence;

(3) present knowing membership in an organization after September 9, 1953 which at the time of his membership he knows advocates overthrow of the government by force or violence.

The discussion by Chief Justice Vinson in American Communications Association v. Douds, supra, 339 U.S. 382, 70 S.Ct. 674, 94 L.Ed. 925, regarding the bill of attainder conclusively establishes that the Dilworth Act does not constitute a bill of attainder. At 339 U.S. 413, 70 S.Ct. 691, 94 L.Ed. 952, the court said:

"The unions' argument as to bill of attainder cites the familiar cases, United States v. Lovett, 1946, 328 U.S. 303, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 90 L.Ed. 1252; Ex parte Garland [U.S.] 1866, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L.Ed. 366; Cummings v. Missouri [U.S.] 1866, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L.Ed. 356. Those cases and this also, according to the argument, involve the proscription of certain occupations to a group classified according to belief and loyalty. But there is a decisive distinction: in the previous decisions the individuals involved were in fact being punished for past actions; whereas in this case they are subject to possible loss of position only because there is substantial ground for the congressional judgment that their beliefs and loyalties will be transformed into future conduct. Of course, the history of the past conduct is the foundation for the judgment as to what the future conduct is likely to be; but that does not alter the conclusion that § 9(h) [29 U.S.C.A. § 159(h)] is intended to prevent future action rather than to punish past action.

"This distinction is emphasized by the fact that members of those groups identified in § 9(h) are free to serve as union officers if at any time they renounce the allegiances which constituted a bar to signing the affidavit in the past. Past conduct, actual or threatened by their previous adherence to affiliations and beliefs mentioned in § 9(h), is not a bar to resumption of the position. In the cases relied upon by the unions on the other hand, this Court has emphasized that, since the basis of disqualification was past action or loyalty, nothing that those persons proscribed by its terms could ever do would change the result. See United States v. Lovett, supra (328 U.S. at page 314, 66 S.Ct. [1073] at page 1078, 90 L.Ed. 1258; Cummings v. Missouri, supra [U.S.] 4 Wall. at page 287, 18 L.Ed. 356). Here the intention is to forestall future dangerous acts; there is no one who may not by a voluntary alteration of the loyalties which impel him to action, become eligible to sign the affidavit. We cannot conclude that this section is a bill of attainder."

It is clear that the Eisenberg and Steinmetz cases constitute a full and complete answer to the above arguments urged by defendants.

Second: Were defendants deprived of the right to counsel at the hearing before the Board of Education?

[7] No. I: The record shows that each defendant had his counsel with him when being interrogated by his employing board; sat at the elbow of his counsel, consulting him privately and frequently. Therefore, since defendants were at all times fully advised by private counsel of their own selection, there was no denial of due process because of lack of counsel.

[8] II: Assuming for the purpose of argument that one or more of the defendants were deprived of an alleged right to have their attorney speak for them when they were being interrogated by their employers, they were not entitled to such a right.

The six employee-teachers were appearing before plaintiff boards as employees for interview by their employers. These were not adversary proceedings or judicial trials between parties, but were merely interviews between employers and employees. If a public employer calls in an employee to ask whether it is true, as he has heard, that the employee was out fishing on days which the employee reported as having been at work, the question arises, could the employee demand the right to counsel before answering such a question? To ask the question is to answer it. The answer is "No!" There would be no ground to object in a later civil service proceeding that he had been deprived of right to counsel in that employer-employee interview.

That this was the true nature of the interrogations by the plaintiff boards is amply evidenced by the Dilworth Act itself, the provisions of which were followed in conducting the interrogations. For instance, Education Code, section 12605, makes it "the duty of any employee of any school district who is ordered to appear before the governing board of the employing school district to appear and specifically to answer under oath a question or questions * * *."

People v. Zammora, 66 Cal.App.2d 166, 152 P.2d 180 and Hallinan v. Superior Court, 74 Cal.App. 420, 240 P. 788, relied on by defendants, are criminal trials, while Nicholson v. Nicholson, 174 Cal. 391, 163 P. 219, also relied on by defendants, was a divorce action where the trial judge refused to permit one of counsel to argue his case after he had presented his authorities. In this case the Supreme Court held there was no prejudicial error in refusing him this

"Finally, it is urged that the court erred in refusing to allow plaintiff's counsel to argue the case. It appears, however, that the court did permit the presentation of the authorities upon which plaintiff relied. Ordinarily, a party to an action has the right to be heard by counsel. But the extent to which argument shall go, especially in civil cases tried without a jury, is largely in the discretion of the court. In the present case, where the issue was a simple one of fact, and only one of the parties was in court, no substantial prejudice was suffered, nor was a 'miscarriage of justice' occasioned, by the refusal of the court to listen to a discussion of the effect of the evidence. (Const., art. 6, § 4½.) It is perfectly apparent from the record that an indulgence of counsel's desire to argue the case would have been fruitless. 'Even if the inferior court erred in refusing to let the attorney speak, yet, if the cause has been decided correctly, we will not reverse it merely to give an opportunity to make a speech.' (Harrison v. Park, 24 Ky. (1 J.J.Marsh.) 170, 174.)"

A case similar in principle to the cases before us is People v. Cochrane, 307 Ill. 126, 138 N.E. 291. In this case a witness refused to answer certain questions asked by the grand jury in connection with its investigation of suspected criminal violations by other persons. He also refused to answer the same questions in open court where the court refused his request to be permitted to consult with counsel. The Supreme Court held that he had no right to counsel as he was not being prosecuted for a crime and his relation to the investigation was only as a witness, the court saying at page 294 of 138 N.E.:

"One occupying that relation to a criminal prosecution is not entitled to have an attorney at his elbow to advise him whether he shall answer a question or to have proceedings suspended until he can find and consult an attorney. Plaintiff in error never intimated that he would answer the questions if he was advised by counsel that it was his duty, and it is perfectly apparent that his only object was to obtain advice to aid him in obstructing the administration of justice."

No case has been called to our attention guaranteeing the right to counsel in proceedings such as are here involved, whereas, in fact, in other types of proceedings before a court such right has been denied. In the case of Ex parte McCarthy, 29 Cal. 395, a habeas corpus proceeding where the petitioner had been cited for contempt by the California State Senate, it appeared that he had been summoned to appear as a witness before that body. The court directly held that a witness before the Legislature does not have a right to counsel, and such decision was based upon the ground that he was not accused of any crime but was present merely as a witness. In that connection the court said at page 399:

"Hence the petitioner did not stand before the Senate accused of any offense, but as an accuser of other persons against whom charges of bribery and corruption had been indirectly if not directly made by himself. His real attitude was that of a witness. And we may here remark that that fact alone is a complete answer to all that was said at the argument touching the refusal of the Senate to allow him counsel, and fully explains and justifies the conduct of the Senate in that respect, and relieves it from all just criticism on the score that the course pursued was unusual and arbitrary."

For the foregoing reasons the defendant employees were not denied due process of law by the alleged denial of "effective" right to counsel at their interrogations by their employers. Defendants have wholly failed to show that their "case" was prejudiced by the action of the board. The only claim to prejudicial effect is that counsel might have clarified the meaning of the questions, particularly the meaning of the word "knowing." The record shows several instances when counsel stopped the proceedings to advise their clients; in fact several instances when the proceedings awaited the availability of counsel for a defendant or a conference between a defendant and his counsel. Had counsel wished to "clarify" their questions to their clients, counsel had full opportunity to do so, and since the attorneys representing defendants are recognized as able counsel, the presumption is that they in fact did do so.

III. The trials and judicial proceedings as to these defendants have occurred in the superior court. Each defendant was represented by counsel of his own selection. It was in such trials that the parties were appearing as adversaries and entitled to counsel, which they had.

An examination of the record discloses that defendants had a full, fair and complete trial before an able and conscientious trial judge.

The judgments are, and each is, affirmed.

William J. F. Brown, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged with grand theft of $1,200 from Jesse Gartmon and with having been previously convicted of the crime of grand theft. Following entry of a plea of not guilty and denial of the prior conviction, the cause proceeded to trial before the court sitting without a jury. By stipulation the cause was submitted upon the testimony adduced at the preliminary examination with the reservation that additional evidence might be submitted. At the commencement of the trial defendant admitted the prior conviction. He was found guilty, his motion for a new trial was denied and he was sentenced to State Prison. From the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The complaining witness Jesse Gartmon met a man called "Red" at the stockyards in Vernon, County of Los Angeles, when the latter introduced himself. During the ensuing few weeks Gartmon assisted "Red" in transporting live stock to various places.

On June 17, 1954 the complainant was at the stockyards as were "Red" and a man with a Jamaican accent. The Jamaican said that he had given a woman $50 and she had gone to the whiskey store but had not returned. He asked Mr. Gartmon and "Red" if they would show him how to have some fun with girls, and said that he had plenty of money. There was some conversation about a car, and "Red" said that he had one. The man with the Jamaican accent promised them some money if they took him somewhere where he could have some fun.

The man with the Jamaican accent said that he had $3,000 or $4,000 "on him" and had a good bit of money on his ship, which money his Captain was keeping for him. He said that the Captain wanted to take about twenty-five cents on the dollar. The defendant, who had joined them, said,

"That's too much", and asked him why he didn't put his money in the bank. The man with the Jamaican accent said, "You mean to tell me I can put my money in the bank and draw it out when I get ready?" The defendant said, "Sure, you can."

It was suggested that the man with the Jamaican accent let Mr. Gartmon put his money in the bank, but Mr. Gartmon said that the Jamaican could put his own money in and get it out. After some more conversation the defendant said, "Fellow, you better give it to him or give it to some of the guys to keep it for you because then it will be safe, because wherever you are going to have fun you might have it all taken away."

The defendant opened his billfold and said, "Probably some of you guys got a bank account or something like that. They are honest fellows."

Mr. Gartmon opened his billfold and said that he had a dollar or two. "Red" said, "Well, I have a bank account but I can't draw no money, nothing like that, out of the bank, because my wife is in Alaska and I couldn't draw it without her." He suggested that Mr. Gartmon show him his bank book. Mr. Gartmon said, "I have a bank book. I have a little money in the bank." The Jamaican said, "Well, I bet you don't have no money in the bank. You can't draw no money out of the bank." "I bet you $750.00."

Mr. Gartmon said, "No, I wouldn't go through drawing it out."

"Red" said, "Go ahead, draw it out. What have you got to lose? The guy has plenty of money. If you take yours out and show it to him, you can put it right back."

The defendant, the Jamaican, "Red" and Mr. Gartmon got into a car and went to the latter's home, where he got his bank book. The defendant took the bank book and said, "Here, you got $1,200 in the bank."

He said, "Well, now, in my country that's a ration book." "Do you mean to tell me the white people in this country allow negroes to have that kind of money? I don't believe he can draw it out." Then he said, "Well, if he can draw it out, so I will give him $750.00. I've got plenty of money." He added, "Well, negroes in this country don't even have a flag."

They went to the California Bank at 57th and Central, where Mr. Gartmon had a savings account. Mr. Gartmon and "Red" entered the bank and Mr. Gartmon drew out $1,100, taking it in the form of a cashier's check. Then they went to the Bank of America at 47th and Broadway, where Mr. Gartmon cashed the check, receiving therefor hundred dollar bills, which he added to $100 which he had in his pocket.

Mr. Gartmon showed the money to the Jamaican, who said, "Well, you can't keep that money because you have got to take it back to the bank. The people won't trust you in this country with that kind of money." He continued, "You don't even have a flag." "They don't allow Negro people to have that kind of money in this country."

Mr. Gartmon said, "This is mine. I don't want to fool around with the fellow. If he doesn't want to give me the $700, let's forget about it." Some one suggested that they ride, and they went to the west side. The defendant said that he had to make a telephone call to let them know he wouldn't be at work that day, and he and "Red" got out of the car and left Mr. Gartmon with the Jamaican. They returned in fifteen or twenty minutes, and when they did, the defendant had a paper bag in his hand. The defendant said, "Well, look, I'm going to take this guy where he can have some fun." "You have got too much money to take with you. Why don't you put all your money in this paper bag and give it to that fellow to keep?"

The Jamaican said, "O.K." and unbuttoned his belt, saying that he had a money belt. The defendant said, "Don't take your clothes off here in the car. Let's go in the men's room." They got out and went to the filling station. When they returned, the Jamaican had a paper bag about a foot high. The defendant said, "Well, here it is—".

They got into the car and the defendant said, "Let me see it." "Look here, all the money here." Mr. Gartmon looked in the bag and it appeared to have a lot of money in it. It was suggested that Mr. Gartmon keep the money, and he refused. The defendant suggested that Mr. Gartmon put his money in the sack, and that he could keep it. Mr. Gartmon had his money in his hand, but didn't know whether to put it in or not. The defendant pulled it out of his hand and put it in the bag. Mr. Gartmon asked for his money, and he said, "No. Here, you keep it." The Jamaican said, "I will show you how to keep it." He pulled his coat off, put it on his arm and said, "You keep it like this." He handed it to Mr. Gartmon and said, "Wait, put it on under your arm. Under your shirt. Put it like this." Mr. Gartmon asked to see in the bag and when he looked in the money was there. The defendant said, "Well, let me keep it." "Red" said, "I am going to move out, because the police might come." Mr. Gartmon said, "I haven't done nothing. This is my money." The defendant said, "Yes, but they might think these guys are trying to start some stuff like a fight, you guys talking so loud."

The defendant held the bag on the way back to Los Angeles, and Mr. Gartmon told "Red", who was driving, to take the money back before the bank closed.

"Red" said, "Look out, police." Mr. Gartmon looked back, and when he turned around again the Jamaican had what looked like the bag. The Jamaican said, "I'm going to let you keep it. Put it in the glove compartment and lock it up." "Red" opened the glove compartment and said that he would keep it and it would be safe in the glove compartment. The Jamaican put the bag in the glove compartment. "Red" took the key off the key ring and locked it.

The defendant said, "I'm going along with him. We will be back in a few minutes." "Red" stopped the car at Sixth and Los Angeles. The defendant and the Jamaican got out. The former whispered something to "Red" and dropped something by "Red". Mr. Gartmon asked if it was the key and "Red" said that it was. "Red" started the car, and when they had gone about a block Mr. Gartmon opened the glove compartment, took out the bag, and opened it. In it there was a lot of tissue paper, eleven $1 bills and three $5 bills. He told "Red" to turn around quickly. The latter drove around for several blocks, saying that the streets were all one-way streets, and when they got to Sixth and Los Angeles again, Mr. Gartmon got out, looked around, but didn't see anybody that looked like the men.

Police Officer Burkland and Narcotic Inspector King arrested the defendant on July 9, 1954. Officer Burkland told him that the Sheriff's Office had a "want" on him for a bunco deal. While Officer Burkland was talking to the defendant, the latter's father entered the room. The father said, "Well, what's the matter?" The defendant answered, "Well, it's about that job down at Vernon where we took that sucker for eight bills."

As a witness in his own behalf, defendant testified that on the day here in question he met the complaining witness and three or four other men at the stockyards. He knew the other men as "Red", "Big Boy", and "Chink". That this group were talking about girls and gambling. That the complaining witness and one of the other men engaged in a discussion as to who could put his hands on the most money and who was the best gambler. Defendant then narrated how the group engaged in a gambling game. That the complaining witness lost all his money and asked to be taken home to get his bank book. That he was taken home, obtained the bank book, was driven to the bank, made a withdrawal, and returned with $400 in his hand. The gambling game was resumed and again the complaining witness lost his money. That an argument ensued and defendant walked away. That the complaining witness, "Red" and "Chink" got into an automobile and drove away without defendant accompanying them. The latter further testified that it was the last time he saw the complainant until four days prior to the former's arrest. Defendant further testified that while the gambling was in progress, the complaining witness gave "Big Boy" a check for $1,200 and said he would make it good. That at no time was anybody known as "the Jamaican" in the automobile. Defendant also testified that at no time while he was present was any money placed in a paper bag.

Appellant's first contention seems to be that the court erred in failing to find as true, the facts which were consistent with his innocence and inconsistent with his guilt. Appellant's statement of the evidence is inaccurate and incomplete. As an instance thereof, there is no mention in appellant's brief of the evidence showing that after the complaining witness withdrew the money from the bank defendant took it from the former's hand, placed it in a paper sack, and put the sack into the glove compartment of the auto. Only the first point urged by appellant is supported by anything resembling argument. The remaining three grounds urged for reversal contain only an assertion of error and citation of cases without any indication as to how such cases support the claimed error. Although it was not incumbent upon the attorney general to supply the deficiencies he has, in the interest of justice and to aid this court, done so. Counsel should at all times be mindful of the provisions of Rule 18 of Rules on Appeal and keep in mind the warning given by the court in Goldring v. Goldring, 94 Cal.App.2d 643, 645, 211 P.2d 342. While we might very well pass the claims made by appellant without consideration, nevertheless, with the aid rendered by the attorney general we have seen fit to make a thorough study of the evidence instead of affirming the judgment summarily, in the hope that in the future when insufficiency of the evidence is relied upon for a reversal, counsel will not fail to make a satisfactory statement in the opening brief, or a supplement thereto, of the evidence claimed to be "insufficient" with transcript references.

was bound to accept as true evidence consistent with innocence and to disregard evidence inconsistent therewith, it has long been the rule in this state that when two inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, one pointing to innocence of the accused and the other to his guilt, that pointing to innocence is a rule for the guidance of the duly constituted arbiter of the facts. On appeal, the court is bound by the findings of the trial court, if there is substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, to support the conclusion arrived at in the court below. Reviewing judges are, obviously, in no position to determine the credit which should be accorded to witnesses or to weigh their testimony. As has often been repeated, it is for this reason that our constitution provides that the appellate courts are not authorized to review evidence, except where, on its face, it may justly be held that it is insufficient to support the ultimate issue involved, in which case it is not a review of a question of fact, but purely one of law. In consonance with the spirit and intent of this constitutional provision, the legislature has ordained that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses, Code Civ.Proc. § 1847, and are the judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them, except in those instances where it is declared by the law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact to which it relates. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061. And as a necessary corollary of the rules above noted, the trial judge in the case at bar was authorized, if he conscientiously felt warranted in so doing, after full and fair consideration thereof, to disbelieve the testimony of appellant and accept that of witnesses for the prosecution as to what occurred during the transactions here under consideration, People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 684, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Crawford, 41 Cal.App.2d 198, 205, 106 P.2d 219; People v. Rubio, 75 Cal.App.2d 697, 707, 171 P.2d 737; People v. Stanhope, 37 Cal.App.2d 631, 634, 635, 99 P.2d 1075.

[4] Appellant next insists that "There was no showing that Mr. Gartmon parted with any money on any false pretense made to him by the defendant and he is entitled to benefit of the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt". Since the 1927 amendment to section 484 of the Penal Code, an accused may be convicted of grand theft upon proof showing larceny, larceny by trick and device, and embezzlement, as well as theft by false pretenses. People v. Cannon, 77 Cal.App.2d 678, 688-689, 176 P.2d 409; People v. Frazier, 88 Cal.App.2d 99, 102, 198 P.2d 325; People v. Fewkes, 214 Cal. 142, 149, 4 P.2d 538. Since the finding of guilt may be sustained on the theory of larceny, it was not necessary that the complainant be shown to have parted with his money in reliance upon false pretenses. People v. Gerundo, 112 Cal.App.2d 797, 803, 804, 247 P.2d 374.

[5] Appellant's next complaint is that there was no reasonable or probable cause shown at the preliminary examination to hold him to answer. This objection may be raised only by a motion to set aside the information in accordance with section 995 of the Penal Code. Having failed to make such a motion, appellant's contention is unavailing, People v. Parry, 105 Cal.App.2d 319, 322, 232 P.2d 899.

It would serve no useful purpose to here set forth the evidence above narrated. Suffice it to say that it shows clearly and convincingly that the money was taken from the complaining witness by appellant with intent to deprive him of it wholly and permanently. People v. Darnell, 97 Cal.App.2d 630, 218 P.2d 172.

[6,7] The evidence establishes the existence of the four elements necessary to constitute theft by larceny, viz. (1) a taking of the thing which is the subject of the crime from the owner into the possession of the thief, without the consent of the owner; (2) asportation of the thing which is the subject matter of the offense; (3) the thing which is taken and carried away must be the property of another; and (4) the taking and carrying away must be with an intent, without claim or pretense of right or justification, to deprive the owner of his property wholly and permanently. People v. Edwards, 72 Cal.App.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

Civ. 20477.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 18, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1955.

Action wherein plaintiffs sought rescission and damages for fraud in exchange of their property for property of two of defendants, who were represented by four other defendants, real estate brokers, wherein defendant bank was sued as escrow holder alleged to be guilty of negligence, not fraud. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., rendered order granting defendants' motion to exclude all evidence, denied plaintiffs' motion to amend to cure alleged defects in their complaint, and rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that where complaint was sufficient despite imperfect showing of fact of damage, proposed amendment remedying defect would not have injected new issue into case and had been withheld in belief that complaint was sufficient, and defendants were not shown to have been prejudiced by delay, refusal to grant leave to amend was error amounting to abuse of discretion, but that bank's failure to disclose information as alleged was not negligence.

Judgment affirmed as to defendant bank and reversed as to all other defendants.

Objection by defendant to introduction of any evidence on ground that complaint fails to state cause of action will lie only where admitted averments justify judgment for defendant, that is, where no material issue is joined which it is necessary to prove.

5. Pleading ⚡428(6)

On objection by defendant to introduction of any evidence on ground that complaint fails to state cause of action, nothing dehors complaint and no defense set up in answer may be considered.

6. Fraud ⚡47

In complaint seeking rescission and damages for fraud, facts must be alleged which show existence of damage, but if that is done and prayer for specific sum is inserted in pleading, it is sufficient even though there is no specific allegation of damage in any stated sum, or if pleading states facts invoking wrong measure of recovery. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

7. Pleading ⚡428(4)

Where complaint seeking rescission and damages for fraud in exchange of plaintiffs' property for property of two of defendants, who were represented in transaction by four other defendants, real estate brokers, alleged facts tending at least inferentially to show that actual value of property purchased was less than price paid, granting of defendants' motion to exclude all evidence was error whether action was one at law for damages or one in equity to adjudge effectiveness of plaintiffs' alleged unilateral rescission. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

8. Evidence ⚡43(2)

Affidavit of plaintiff which was in file was proper subject of judicial notice.

9. Pleading ⚡229

Where amendment to pleading is designed to cure technical defect in pleading otherwise adequate to put other party on notice of true basis of pleader's case, amendment must be allowed in furtherance of trial upon merits.

10. Pleading ⚡428(6)

After granting of motion to exclude all evidence, leave to amend must be granted unless it appears to certainty that no basic right of action can possibly exist or no relief can possibly be granted.

11. Pleading ⚡428(6)

In action for rescission and damages for fraud in exchange of property, wherein defendants' motion to exclude all evidence for failure of complaint to allege damages under theory and method of computation authorized by statute, had been granted, but complaint was sufficient despite imperfect showing of fact of damage, proposed amendment remedying defect would not inject new issue into case, but had been withheld in belief that complaint was sufficient, and defendants were not shown to be prejudiced by delay, refusal to grant leave to amend was error amounting to abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

12. Pleading ⚡381(2)

Allegation in complaint against escrow holder in property exchange that escrow instructions were so carelessly and negligently drawn as to fail to disclose facts either as to true ownership of property to be exchanged for plaintiffs' property or true terms of deed of trust on such property, was specific charge of negligence, and where there was no general allegation, plaintiffs would be held to proof of that specific averment.

13. Escrows ⚡3

Where bank which held escrow between plaintiffs and defendants also held escrow between defendants and third party from whom defendants were to acquire property to be conveyed to plaintiffs, failure of instructions drawn by bank in plaintiffs' escrow to disclose true ownership of property to be conveyed to plaintiffs, or true terms of second deed of trust thereon, which facts bank had allegedly learned from the third party escrow, was not negligence on part of bank, since disclosure would have been violation of bank's duty to defendants and third party, and fact that bank held first trust deed on property, as plaintiffs knew, was immaterial.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs Richard J. Bice and Leila M. Bice, appeal from a judgment for defendants rendered pursuant to an order granting defendants' motion to exclude all evidence, followed by a denial of plaintiffs' motion to amend to cure the alleged defects in their complaint.

The complaint is captioned "Re[s]cission—damages—injunction." It alleges fraud in an exchange of plaintiffs' Glendora property known as the Daniel B. Motel for certain Ocean Boulevard property in Long Beach which the defendants James Stevens and Mabel Stevens claimed to own and which they did acquire and convey to plaintiffs. Defendants Thompson, Morrison and Hoagland were sued as real estate brokers representing the Stevenses and making the alleged false representations. Defendant Farmers and Merchants Bank of Long Beach was sued as escrow holder alleged to be guilty of negligence, not fraud. The issues as to the Bank require separate discussion. Those relative to the Stevenses and the brokers turn upon the same legal proposition and will be considered together.

The complaint alleges that plaintiffs were owners of the Daniel B. Motel and were induced to exchange it for the Ocean Boulevard property through false representations made by or on behalf of each of the defendants other than the Bank; that this was accomplished through an escrow at defendant Bank. All of the elements of deceit are alleged; also that plaintiffs learned before close of escrow of the falsity of representations made to them and gave notice of rescission prior to occurrence of that event; that after service thereof and before suit defendants Stevens sold the motel and that they thereby made it impossible to bring about a rescission and restoration of the positions occupied by the respective parties before the close of escrow. Then follows an allegation that the Long Beach property would have been worth $180,000 if the representations had been true, but in fact same had a value of no more than $100,000; that plaintiffs had been damaged in a sum not less than $80,000, for which sum they prayed judgment together with further and other relief. The complaint was plainly drawn upon the theory that plaintiffs had a right of rescission which they had exercised, but that same had been rendered fruitless by defendants' conveyance of the motel to third persons, and that therefore they were entitled to the alternative remedy of damages. But the complaint did not allege the value of plaintiffs' motel, and counsel for defendants moved to exclude evidence upon the ground that plaintiffs' allegation of damages based on loss of the bargain was incorrect, that section 3343 Civil Code¹ prescribes out-of-pocket loss as the exclusive measure of damages and absence of any such allegation rendered the complaint fatally defective. Counsel relied upon Bagdasarjian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, 759-762, 192 P.2d 935 and Oliver v. Benton, 92 Cal.App.2d 853, 855, 208 P.2d 375 as establishing out-of-pocket loss as the exclusive measure of damages in an action for damages for deceit, and they do so hold. There were also cited certain authorities to the effect that it is necessary to plead the precise amount of such damage. Counsel for plaintiffs met that argument with quotation from Warfield v. Basso, 62 Cal. App. 47, 216 P. 48 to the effect that a complaint which shows that plaintiff is entitled to damages of some sort is not fatally defective because the pleader has mistaken the rule by which the damages are to be determined. In the present case the court observed that the complaint did not show that plaintiffs were entitled to any damages, emphasizing the fact that there was no allegation of the value of the motel. Thereupon plaintiffs' attorney requested a recess and at its conclusion remarked that the complaint as drafted contemplated a rescission and prayed for rescission and damages, but it probably would have been better if damages in accordance with section 3343 Civil Code had been stated; referring again to Warfield v. Basso, supra, he moved to amend the complaint by alleging that the value of the motel was $110,000, and the equity therein $40,000. The complaint showed that the Long Beach property worth $100,000, was encumbered by two trust deeds aggregating $94,800. Counsel also offered other amendments which are copied in the margin² and which were based on Feckenschner v. Gamble, 12 Cal.2d 482, 500, 85 P.2d 885. The court said that "there isn't even a remote shadow of a doubt that the objection made by the defendants is well taken, that the complaint does not state a cause of action, for the simple reason that no damages have been alleged" and granted the motion to exclude evidence. The matter of amendment was then discussed and leave was denied for reasons which will be mentioned later.

"Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to deny to any person having a cause of action for fraud or deceit any legal or equitable remedies to which such person may be entitled."

[1-5] Concerning the nature of a motion to exclude evidence, more properly known as an objection to introduction of evidence, this court said in Miller v. McLaglen, 82 Cal.App.2d 219, 223, 186 P.2d 48, 50: "An objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that a complaint fails to state a cause of action is in the nature of a general demurrer to the complaint or a motion by a defendant for judgment on the pleadings. [Citing cases.] An objection by a defendant to the introduction of any evidence may only be sustained where the complaint fails to state a cause of action, and that is the sole question presented to the court. [Citing cases.] Upon such an objection the allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true for the purposes of the objection. [Citing cases.] Such an objection by a defendant will only lie where the admitted averments of the complaint justify a judgment for the defendant, i. e., where no material issue is joined which it is necessary to prove. 21 Cal.Jur. 234, sec. 163. Nothing dehors the complaint may be considered. No defense set up in the answer may be considered. The truth of the allegations of the complaint must be assumed. If the complaint states a cause of action the objection must be overruled. [Citing cases.]"

[6] Appellants now insist that the ruling excluding evidence was erroneous even if the action be considered one at law (which they do not concede), because the complaint shows the fact of damage and an averment of the wrong measure is not fatal to statement of a cause of action; that that goes to the remedy and not the right of recovery. This is the established rule. Facts must be alleged which show the existence of damage, King v. Mortimer, 37 Cal.2d 430, 436, 233 P.2d 4, but if that is done and a prayer for a specific sum inserted in the pleading it is sufficient even though there is no specific allegation of damage in any stated sum, or if the pleading states facts invoking a wrong measure of recovery. Referring to a claim that a complaint was defective for failure to meet the requirement of section 3343, the court in Sutter v. General Petroleum Corp., 28 Cal.2d 525, 534, 170 P.2d 898, 903, 167 A.L.R. 271, said: "Certainly it cannot be doubted that there is a sufficient showing of injury to plaintiffs. Whether the precise

2. The complaint alleged a representation that the second trust deed on the Long Beach property was payable at the rate of $5,000 per annum with first payment due on July 1, 1950 and that in fact the sum of $5,000 was payable semi-annually, the next one being due on September 9, 1949. The proffered amendments were these. "That if the representations and warranties made by the defendants as aforesaid were true, that said property would reasonably have been worth the sum of $180,000, and that the payments on the aforementioned second trust deed were in fact due on July 1, 1950, plaintiffs would have been able to maintain said payments and would have been able to have readily sold said property at the reasonable market value which defendants alleged said property to have." * * *

"That as a direct and proximate result of the false and fraudulent representations as aforesaid, the said plaintiffs were foreclosed of any and all rights to the Long Beach property by foreclosure sale, and that plaintiffs herein suffered loss, injury and damage, in that they have lost their equity in the aforementioned Daniel B. Motel, which plaintiffs allege to be worth the sum of $90,000." (Later corrected to $40,000.)

and correct measure of damages was pleaded is not important in the face of a general demurrer." Warfield v. Basso, supra, 62 Cal.App. 47, 49, 216 P. 48, 49: "In support of the judgment, one of the objections which is urged against the complaint is that the damages claimed therein are not such as are provided by the statutes covering a transaction of the nature outlined in the complaint; but the rule of law is that where the facts stated in the complaint show that the plaintiff is entitled to damages of some sort, it is not a fatal error that the pleader has mistaken the rule by which such damages should be determined." W. C. Cook & Co. v. White Truck & Transfer Co., 124 Cal.App. 721, 726, 13 P.2d 549, 551: "If respondent is entitled to recover, the fact that he seeks damages according to the wrong measure is inconsequential and does not preclude the court from according him the damages to which he is entitled according to their true measure." Numerous cases exemplifying this rule are collected in Eatwell v. Beck, 41 Cal.2d 128, 136, 257 P.2d 643, 648, where it is said: "Our conclusion that the amendment should have been allowed is in accord with the general rule that where 'the facts stated in the complaint show that the plaintiff is entitled to damages of some sort, it is not a fatal error that the pleader has mistaken the rule by which such damages should be determined.' (Warfield v. Basso (1923), 62 Cal.App. 47, 49, 216 P. 48; see also Gallagher v. California Pac. T. & T. Co. (1936), 13 Cal.App.2d 482, 486, 57 P.2d 195; Bonde v. Bishop (1952), 112 Cal.App. 2d 1, 5, 245 P.2d 617; Barr v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1914), 24 Cal.App. 22, 25, 140 P. 47; Riser v. Walton (1889), 78 Cal. 490, 21 P. 362; Sutter v. General Petroleum Corp. (1946), 28 Cal.2d 525, 532-533, 170 P.2d 898, 167 A.L.R. 271.)" And it was there held error to refuse leave to amend where plaintiff in a fraud case had alleged items of non-recoverable damage and sought upon motion for nonsuit to amend to conform to section 3343. To the effect that failure to plead according to the correct rule of damages is not fatal see also Hartzell v. Myall, 115 Cal.App.2d 670, 677, 252

P.2d 676; Breakers Holding Co. v. Josebra Co., 122 Cal.App.2d 741, 747-748, 265 P.2d 938; 23 Cal.Jur.2d § 71, p. 176; 2 Witkin on California Procedure, § 475, p. 1461; 15 Am.Jur. § 310, p. 752.

The complaint at bar did show imperfectly the fact of damage. The buildings on the Ocean Boulevard property were represented to have been erected at a cost of $350,000, whereas they cost only $75,000; the property was stated to have been bought for $180,000, but was in fact being acquired contemporaneously by defendant for $100,000 and was worth no more than that sum; the furnishings (included in the exchange) were represented to have a market value of $20,000 but were worth not over $11,500; plaintiffs were told that the property had yielded net income of $2254 for April 1949; $4035 for May 1949, and $4550 for June 1949 (the exchange escrow was opened on July 7, 1949) but in fact it was operated at a loss in each of those months; also that the property was zoned for business and usable for sale of liquor but that representation was untrue. That allegations such as these tend "at least inferentially to show that the actual value of the property purchased was less than the price paid" is recognized in the Eatwell case. At page 134 of 41 Cal.2d, at page 647 of 257 P.2d, it is said: "As contended by [plaintiffs], they had already introduced evidence tending to show certain elements which go toward the ascertainment of 'actual' or 'market' value of the motel. (See page 754 of 31 Cal.2d, pages 940, 941 of 192 P.2d of Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, supra.) For example, there was evidence that during the four months just prior to plaintiffs' purchase of the property the income therefrom 'would average between $300.00 and $450.00 actually $438.00 per month * * *, never * * * any more than $438.00.' Also, plaintiff Mrs. Eatwell testified that 'As far as income was concerned I don't think it was worth a dime.'

"It has been held that although 'anticipated revenue from the property is not "additional damage" within the meaning of section 3343 * * *. It is an element to be considered in determining the actual value of the property * * * (Oliver v. Benton (1949), 92 Cal.App.2d 853, 856, 208 P.2d 375.) There was also evidence that defendants Thomas, from whom plaintiffs purchased the motel for $43,000 on October 19, 1948, had themselves purchased it only the previous day (October 18, 1948), for the sum of $40,000. Evidence of 'sales of the identical property in question, whether realty or personalty' is also a proper indicium of value. (Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948), supra, 31 Cal.2d 744, 758, 192 P.2d 935.)" At page 136 of 41 Cal.2d, at page 648 of 257 P.2d: "By the complaint on file it is clear that plaintiffs were attempting to state a cause of action for damages for fraud. Their allegations as to the fact and substance of the fraud, and their reliance on it to their actual detriment, were adequate. They did not specifically allege damages under the theory and method of computation authorized by section 3343 but even under the limitations held to be imposed by that section the facts alleged tended at least inferentially to show that the actual value of the property purchased was less than the price paid. The defendants do not appear to have been misled or in any wise prejudiced by the failure of the plaintiffs to have earlier pleaded the more specific facts. Under these circumstances, and in accordance with the rule that amendments shall be liberally allowed in the interests of justice, we are satisfied that plaintiffs' request for leave to amend in the particulars noted should have been granted." Hefferan v. Freebairn, 34 Cal.2d 715, 721, 214 P.2d 386, 390: "It is obvious that receiving a business earning less than $10,000 a year constitutes a substantial injury to a buyer to whom it was represented as earning $20,000."

at law, which was the basis of the exchange of views between counsel and court. But appellants now argue further that the complaint sounds in rescission, belongs on the equity side, and that therefore the rule of section 3343 is inapplicable. There is considerable ground for this contention. It is unnecessary for us to decide this question, for, whether the action is one at law for damages or one in equity to adjudge the effectiveness of plaintiffs' unilateral rescission, it was error to grant the motion to exclude evidence.

Counsel for defendants contend, however, that the court has broad discretion in the matter of allowing amendments presented for the first time at the trial and that there was no abuse of that discretion in denying leave to amend in this case. The proffered amendments would have cured the defect which the court deemed to exist in that they showed an equity of $40,000 belonging to plaintiffs had been exchanged for one of $16,700, thus working damage of $23,300.³ Defense counsel claimed that this would inject a new issue which they were not prepared to meet and that plaintiffs had inexcusably delayed any amendment after being apprised of the necessity of one. He stated, without contradiction, that plaintiffs' attorney had asked him a year or more before trial for a stipulation consenting to an amendment of the complaint and that he had said he would give one upon condition that he receive the amendment at least thirty days before trial, but that plaintiffs' counsel had never presented one until the argument upon motion to exclude evidence. Plaintiffs' attorney upon his presentation gave no explanation of the delay and relied principally upon the proposed amendments quoted in footnote 2, supra, and the asserted applicability of Feckenschner v. Gamble, supra, 12 Cal.2d 482, 500,⁴ 85 P.2d 885.

3. Value of Long Beach property $100,000 plus furnishings with $11,500, total $111,500, less trust deeds aggregating $94,800, leaves equity of $16,700, to be compared with plaintiffs' equity of $40,000.

4. Counsel for defendants asserted without denial that one of plaintiffs testified upon deposition that she had the money and could have made the trust deed payment. The transcript is a bit obscure at this point but the matter is clarified by the affidavits on motion for new trial. The judge seemed to pay little attention to this proposed amendment, probably reasoning that it was a synthetic plea born of the exigencies of the lawsuit.

davit of plaintiff Leila M. Bice, which was in the file and a proper subject of judicial notice, that the present attorneys were substituted into the case on October 7, 1954, depositions were taken and thereupon "a serious question arose as to the sufficiency of the complaint as to the mode of pleading the element of damages, and therefore by agreement of counsel in open court, the matter was put off calendar, the first delay occasioned at the instance of Plaintiffs and affiant for the purpose of giving this problem further study, with a possible view to amendment of the complaint; That such a study was given, and after a perusal of the facts, it was decided that the complaint was sufficient;" An affidavit of Mr. Poppler, one of the attorneys, was presented on motion for new trial; it said that after taking of depositions he and Mr. Devitt weighed the problem of inadequacy of the pleadings, researched the law on the question of pleading damages for fraud, consulted other attorneys, and, relying on Feckenschner v. Gamble, supra, 12 Cal.2d 482, 85 P.2d 885, "concluded that the pleadings filed by plaintiffs' original counsel of record sufficiently pleaded the elements of damages for fraud and negligence and were adequate to bring the cause to trial on the merits * * *." Counsel for plaintiffs insist upon this appeal that the complaint is good as an equity action for rescission and that section 3343 is not the applicable measure of damages. It does not appear that their failure to amend prior to the judge's ruling at the trial was due to negligence or mere obduracy. Counsel then seemed to believe, and now to believe, that the complaint is sufficient to state a cause of action. And it does not appear that counsel for defendants were surprised, misled or prejudiced in any way.

The court ruled as follows: "The Court: That much is true. Even if I permitted the amendment, I couldn't try the case because it raises some new and different issues upon which we could not expect the defendants to be prepared for trial at this time; namely, the value of the property traded by the plaintiffs and, secondly, the foreclosure of the trust deed, nothing about which is alleged in the complaint as it now stands.

"Weighed over and against that is the fact that if the plaintiffs had been injured or damaged they should have their day in court at some time or other and be permitted to present their evidence to the Court. However, we come up some four years after the complaint is filed with a complaint that does not state a cause of action and then we want to interject some entirely new and different elements into the case that are not set up at all in the original complaint. The motion to amend is denied."

[9-11] Defendants seek to justify the ruling upon the authority of cases such as Vogel v. Thrifty Drug Co., 43 Cal.2d 184, 272 P.2d 1; Moss Estate Co. v. Adler, 41 Cal.2d 581, 586, 261 P.2d 732. Appellants rely upon Eatwell v. Beck, supra, 41 Cal.2d 128, 135, 257 P.2d 643; MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 815, 161 P.2d 449 and similar cases. The Moss Estate case involved a belated amendment to an answer; the ruling is summarized in this language, 41 Cal.2d at page 586, 261 P.2d at page 735: "The trial court was thus presented with a situation wherein defendant sought to file an amended answer alleging a new defense based on different facts on the eve of the trial more than a year after the original answer was filed and more than two months after she had notice of the date set for trial. Defendant was aware of the facts at the time the original answer was filed, but she gave no excuse for her delay. The original answer gave no inkling of the facts alleged in the proposed amended answer, and a continuance would have been required had leave to file been granted. Under these circumstances we cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion in denying defendant leave to file her proposed amended answer." Numerous cases are then cited in support of the holding. The Vogel case presented an attempt to inject into a negligence action a new count alleging breach of warranty. Denial of leave to amend was affirmed because of long delay in asserting known facts followed by an attempt to inject new issues into the case at the trial. There was also the element that the proposed amendment did not state a good cause of action for breach of warranty. The basis for differentiation of the two lines of cases—those holding it to be error to deny leave to amend and those holding the contrary—seems to lie in this language, 41 Cal.2d at page 585, 261 P.2d at page 734, of the Moss Estate case: "In the present case we are not confronted with an amendment designed to cure a technical defect in a pleading otherwise adequate to put the other party on notice of the true basis of the pleader's case. See, Eatwell v. Beck, 41 Cal.2d [at pages 128, 135-136], 257 P.2d 643; Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 271, 276, 33 P. 86; Chatfield v. Williams, 85 Cal. 518, 520-521, 24 P. 839; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 116 Cal.App.2d 174 [180-185], 253 P. 2d 723. Defendant's original answer was apparently based on the theory that a landowner may have an interest in a well located on adjoining land if that well taps a pool underlying both properties. At the trial, however, defendant abandoned this theory, see, City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 925-926, 207 P.2d 17, and sought instead to set up an entirely different defense." The Eatwell-Beck case is classified as one involving "an amendment designed to cure a technical defect in a pleading otherwise adequate to put the other party on notice of the true basis of the pleader's case." In such instances the amendment must be allowed in furtherance of trial upon the merits. The Eatwell case is controlling here. It presents a situation similar to an order excluding evidence and the rule is well established that after such a ruling leave to amend must be granted "unless it appears to a certainty that no basic right of action can possibly exist or no relief can possibly be granted." Miller v. McLaglen, 82 Cal.App.2d 219, 228, 186 P.2d 48, 53. See also Perry v. Futch, 119 Cal.App.2d 556, 559, 259 P.2d 971; Ser-Bye Corp. v. C. P. & G. Markets, 78 Cal.App.2d 915, 917, 179 P.2d 342; MacIsaac v. Pozzo, supra, 26 Cal.2d 809, 815, 161 P.2d 449; Gallagher v. California Pac. T. & T. Co., 13 Cal.App.2d 482, 486, 57 P.2d 195. And cases such as Vogel v. Thrifty Drug Co., supra, 43 Cal.2d 184, 272 P.2d 1 and Moss Estate Co. v. Adler, supra, 41 Cal.2d 581, 261 P.2d 732, do not involve any question of right or leave to amend after order sustaining motion to exclude evidence or motion for nonsuit. Examination of the numerous cases cited, 41 Cal.2d at page 586, 261 P.2d 732 of the Moss Estate opinion, in support of the holding that there was no abuse of discretion in denying leave to amend, discloses that none of them deals with such a situation. It does not appear that defendants at bar were prejudiced by plaintiffs' delay; the proposed amendment alleging plaintiffs' equity to be worth $40,000 would not inject any new issue into the case (the question of damages was already there). It was error to reject that proposed amendment, an error which in law amounts to an abuse of discretion.

[12] The plaintiffs' charge against Farmers and Merchants Bank of Long Beach is negligence, not fraud. It is averred that it was the escrow holder and it drew the instructions; that it was also acting as holder of an escrow between defendants Stevens and one Naomi N. Conover, from whom they were acquiring the Ocean Boulevard property; that the Bank knew at all times that the Stevenses did not own that property, were in default in the Conover escrow and unable to complete the same, that the second trust deed for $43,000 was payable at the rate of $5,000 semi-annually, not annually, and that the next payment would be due on September 9, 1949. The negligence charge is "that the said escrow instructions were so carelessly and negligently drawn as to fail to disclose and they did not in fact disclose the foregoing facts either as to the true ownership of the said property or the true terms of the said Deed of Trust, all of which were well known to the said Farmers and Merchants Bank of Long Beach * * *." This is a specific charge of negligence; there is no general allegation; and plaintiffs would be held to proof of that specific averment. O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 222, 146 P. 674; Preston v. Hubbell, 87 Cal.App.2d 53, 61, 196 P.2d 113. If there was no duty or right to make the disclosure there could be no negligence in failing to call for it in the instructions prepared by the Bank.

[13] The averment is that the Bank was acting as escrow agent of an existing escrow, opened March 9, 1949, between Stevens and Conover and the plain inference of the allegations is that the facts which defendant failed to disclose, or to call for in the instructions prepared by it, were learned from the Stevens-Conover escrow. The revealing to plaintiffs of information contained in that escrow would have been a violation of the escrow holder's duty, Blackburn v. McCoy, 1 Cal.App.2d 648, 654, 37 P.2d 153; it would also have been a breach of defendant's obligation to Stevens and Conover for it to contract (by escrow instruction in the Bice-Stevens deal) to disclose such confidential information; by the same token it could not be negligence merely to fail to call for such disclosure when preparing the Bice instructions. Appellants seek to avoid the effect of the Blackburn-McCoy case by urging that defendant Bank had an interest in the subject matter of the escrow and as trustee had a duty of full disclosure. This hinges upon the allegation that one of the representations made to plaintiffs was that a first trust deed "in favor of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Long Beach, California, with an unpaid principal balance of approximately $51,800.00" was a lien upon the property. This representation is not alleged to be untrue. It appears that plaintiffs were purchasing subject to that lien and also a second lien of $43,000. There was no point to disclosing to plaintiffs what they already knew, a fact which in ordinary course would appear in the escrow instructions. That was the extent of the Bank's interest in the property; and it was not a conflicting interest because everybody recognized it and agreed to sell and purchase subject to it. The complaint of non-disclosure relates to the second trust deed in which the Bank had no interest so far as appears. There is no merit in this contention of appellants. The objection to introduction of evidence was properly sustained as to defendant Bank.

The judgment is affirmed as to defendant Farmers and Merchants Bank of Long Beach and reversed as to all other defendants.

AMERICAN SURETY CO. OF NEW YORK,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

E. C. HEISE, Edgar Loren Helse, et al.,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5064.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Nov. 1, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action by automobile liability insurer to void policy. Defendants sought reformation of policy. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, John G. Gabbert, Judge assigned, rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that where fact that automobile liability policy was erroneously issued in form indicating that father was sole owner of automobile, while in fact father and son owned it jointly, was due solely to acts of insurer's agent, insurer could not rely on the mistake to void policy.

Judgment affirmed.

I. Declaratory Judgment $\S$ 347

In action by automobile liability insurer to have policy declared void on ground that named insured was not sole owner of automobile, evidence sustained findings that father and son, who intended to purchase automobile jointly, had not represented that automobile belonged only to father, and that issuance of policy in form indicating that father was sole owner was due to agent's negligence or mistake.

2. Insurance ⇨388(5)

Where fact that automobile liability policy was erroneously issued in form indicating that father was sole owner of automobile, while in fact father and son owned it jointly, was due solely to acts of insurer's agent, insurer could not rely on the mistake to void policy.

3. Principal and Agent ⇨178(1)

Knowledge of an agent obtained while negotiating transactions within scope of his authority is imputed to principal.

4. Insurance ⇨143(3)

Reformation of an insurance policy may be had, in general, where, by reason of fraud, inequitable conduct or mutual mistake, policy as written does not express actual or real agreement of parties.

5. Insurance ⇨143(8)

Suit for reformation of an insurance policy may be maintained after a loss which would fall within policy as reformed.

6. Insurance ⇨143(8)

Receipt and retention of an insurance policy without examination to ascertain whether or not it conforms to application made does not necessarily defeat insured's right to reformation.

7. Insurance ⇨143(8)

Where insurance agent was called to automobile lot where minor, accompanied by his father, was buying automobile, and there took application for liability policy which, when issued, erroneously denominated father as sole owner of automobile, that minor accepted policy and had not yet, at time of accident, complained of mistake did not estop minor from seeking reformation where mistake, if any, was due to negligence of agent.

Edgar Loren Heise, and others, seeking to have it declared that an automobile liability policy issued on January 15, 1952, covering a 1946 Mercury, in which E. C. Heise, the father, was named as the sole owner, was void from its inception because, contrary to the declaration in the policy, he was not such sole owner. The claim is that it was defendant E. C. Heise's minor son who furnished the money, was the owner and only user of the automobile, and that it was registered in the son's name. Defendant E. C. Heise and his son filed a cross-complaint seeking reformation to include Edgar Loren Heise as named insured, and sought other declaratory relief.

It appears that on February 9, 1952, the Mercury car, while being driven by the son, was involved in a collision causing injury to its passengers and others. The complaint alleged that these other named defendants intended to assert claims against Heise and his son for damages sustained.

The answer of the Heises admits the issuance of the policy as alleged but avers that its issuance in that form was due to mutual mistake or to fraud by the surety company's agent; that the correct information was given to the agent and the policy referred to contains the name of the father because of such mutual mistake or fraud.

The court found generally: (1) That although the declaration in the policy states that E. C. Heise is the sole owner of the Mercury such declaration is untrue and that the son, a minor, is its true owner and user; (1-a) That it is not true that the company believed and relied upon the declaration that the father was the sole owner of the Mercury, and not true that the company first learned of the falsity of the declaration after the collision.

(2) It then found that the son purchased the automobile in question, and that because he was not of age the seller required the father's name on the contract. (2-a) That the son applied to the company for the insurance in question. (2-b) That the facts of the purchase and of the ownership of the Mercury were known to the company. (3) That the policy was specially rated and issued as a "Class two risk" requiring the highest premium then in effect, and that this premium was charged for persons operating automobiles who were under the age of 21 years, and that the premium was paid by the son. (3-a) That the false information inserted in the declaration above mentioned was inserted by the plaintiff and that neither defendant made any false representations or warranty in applying for said policy, but on the contrary, the information that was brought to the plaintiff's agent at the time application was made for such insurance was true. (4) That one Levenson was the agent and employee of the company and the Heises relied upon the plaintiff and its agent for the issuance of a policy protecting them and each of them from loss or damage by reason of injury or death to any person or persons and damage to property to the limits of any financial responsibility described in said policy. (5) That at the time of making the application for automobile insurance coverage above described, they and each of them understood that the policy of insurance, when issued, would be in the names of E. C. Heise and Edgar Loren Heise and would correctly designate Edgar Loren Heise as the owner of said automobile and would provide complete coverage within the financial policy limits requested to both Edgar Loren Heise and E. C. Heise; that due to the mistake or inadvertence of the plaintiff the policy when issued contained a declaration which incorrectly designated E. C. Heise instead of Edgar Loren Heise, as the sole owner of the insured automobile, and failed to include the name of Edgar Loren Heise as the named insured; that said policy was delivered to E. C. Heise by mail, who immediately turned it over to Edgar Loren Heise, who in turn intended within a few days thereafter to discuss the omission and error in said policy with the plaintiff's agent, but was prevented from doing so by reason of the intervention of the automobile accident. (6) It then found that the company, knowing well that the son was the owner of the automobile and that the same would be in his charge, accepted the premium paid by the son at the highest rate that could be charged.

Judgment upon these findings recited that the company should reform its policy by an endorsement adding the name of Edgar Loren Heise as the named insured from the time of its inception; that it was valid and in full force and effect at the time of the accident; and that the company has to defend the suits which may be brought against defendants and pay any judgment within the limits of the policy.

It is plaintiff's contention on this appeal that the evidence does not support findings 1-a, 2-a, a portion of 2-b reciting "that the facts of the purchase and of the ownership of the Mercury were known to the company", and findings 4, 5 and 6.

The evidence shows that Edgar Loren Heise, a school boy aged 19, on December 18, 1951, attempted to purchase an automobile from a used-car lot. He picked out the Mercury and made a deposit on it. The sales manager told him that because of his age it would be necessary for his father to come to the lot and sign the contract with him. He came the next day and with his son signed the conditional sales contract dated December 19, 1951. It had been completely filled out by the car salesman from information given by the son. The son claims he told the salesman he was to be shown as the registered owner in the application to the Motor Vehicle Department. A portion of this contract included an application for liability insurance reading: "The undersigned make joint application and order for the following insurance for six months". It then set forth the charge for such insurance and indicated "Percy Levenson, Insurance Agent or Broker". It authorized the seller to obtain such insurance.

The testimony further shows that immediately, Levenson, the agent of plaintiff, was called to the lot. Although the father was present at all times, Levenson chose to take the necessary information for the issuance of the insurance policy from the sales contract which he admitted was his practice. Apparently, the only question propounded to the father was whether any one under 21 years of age would be driving the car and he was told that Heise's son would be driving it. Levenson did not see the son on this occasion. He stated that if [Edgar] Loren Heise's name appeared as "buyer", which it admittedly did, he overlooked it. After taking his notes from this contract, he informed the father that there was immediate coverage on the car from that moment, and departed for his office. He wrote up some form of application from his notes and said he destroyed his notes at that time; that he attempted to place this insurance with another company first, but was turned down and he subsequently wrote it on plaintiff company, with its consent, based on the application presented. Two or three weeks later E. C. Heise received the policy, effective as of January 15, 1952. The boy said he casually read it and some questions arose in his mind as to the effective date, etc.; that he noticed it gave E. C. Heise as the owner, but since he had never obtained insurance before and was a minor he assumed that it had to be issued that way because of the fact that his father had to sign the contract of purchase with him; that it was his intention to take the policy back to Levenson on February 12, 1952, a school holiday, and have Levenson explain it to him but the accident happened before that date; that he reported the accident to Levenson and Levenson told him he was covered.

The claim of plaintiff is that under the provisions of the policy, i.e., "by its acceptance", the named insured agrees "that the statements in the declaration are his agreements and representations" and that "this policy is issued in reliance upon the truth of such representations" and that it embodies all agreements existing between himself and the company or any of its agents; that it is an express warranty and that the terms of the policy cannot be waived or changed except by endorsement, duly authorized; that the company is not estopped from claiming these rights and that accordingly, since the sole ownership of the car is stated to be in the named insured, the policy is void ab initio, if, in fact, it is owned by another. Secondly, that there was no meeting of the minds as to any claimed reformed policy, and accordingly the Heises did not make out a case for the reformation of the policy as issued, citing such authority as Trinity Universal Insurance Co. v. Woody, D.C., 47 F.Supp. 327; 29 Am.Jur. [Insurance] secs. 132, 140 and 241; Craig v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 11 Cal.App.2d 644, 54 P.2d 486; and Restatement of the Law of Contracts, secs. 504 and 508-a.

It is further argued that when a policy of insurance is delivered pursuant to an application therefor, the insured has the duty to examine it and, in the absence of fraud or mistake, when he accepts and retains it without protest, he is bound by its terms, citing such cases as Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Hilton-Green, 241 U.S. 613, 36 S.Ct. 676, 60 L.Ed. 1202; and Telford v. New York Life Ins. Co., 9 Cal.2d 103, 69 P.2d 835.

It is further argued that since there was no evidence of fraud practiced on the part of the agent or the company, defendants may not prevail in seeking reformation of the policy; that even though the insurance agent may have been negligent in overlooking the fact that the contract showed both Heises as owners, the principal, plaintiff company, is not necessarily responsible since the principal is not liable for failure of its agent to obtain knowledge of that which he could have found out, which knowledge may have been relevant, citing Restatement of the Law of Agency, sec. 277; and Ambrose v. Indemnity Insurance Co. of North America, 124 N.J.L. 438, 12 A.2d 693.

[1] The evidence set forth sufficiently establishes the fact that it was the intention of the Heises that they should be considered as joint owners of the automobile which was being purchased; that plaintiff's agent took the required information from the contract agreement, as written, which clearly set forth these facts; that neither the father nor the son made any other representations to the agent, and that it was solely the agent's negligence or mistake which led to the issuance of the policy in the form indicated, which policy erroneously showed E. C. Heise as the sole owner of the car. It may well be inferred that this agent did, in fact, take the information from the contract as written, present the policy to one insurance company under the given facts and the application was turned down, and that it was subsequently rewritten in the form submitted to plaintiff company. The notes of the agent and the application to this former company were destroyed by him and obviously were not obtainable to refute the inference. The judgment and the supporting findings decreeing that plaintiff company was not entitled to have the policy of insurance declared void and of no effect because of claimed misrepresentation of the insured or any other person acting for them is supported by the evidence. Mercer Casualty Co. v. Lewis, 41 Cal.App.2d 918, 108 P.2d 65. See also Cooley's Briefs on the Law of Insurance, Vol. 3, p. 2594, which reads:

"From an examination of the cases the following propositions may be regarded as established by the weight of authority. Where the insured, in good faith, makes truthful answers to the questions contained in the application, but his answers, owing to fraud, mistake, or negligence of the agent filling out the application, are incorrectly transcribed, the company is estopped to assert their falsity as a defense to the policy."

This rule is cited with approval in Bass v. Farmers Mutual P. Fire Ins. Co., 21 Cal. App.2d 21, 68 P.2d 302, and cases cited therein, including Allen v. Phoenix Assurance Co., 12 Idaho 653, 88 P. 245, 8 L.R.A., N.S., 903, which latter case (quoting from the syllabus) held that:

"Where it is shown that the insured truthfully and correctly stated the nature and condition of his title in making his application for insurance, he will not be precluded from recovering in case of loss on account of a contrary statement as to title inserted in the policy by the underwriter."

The Bass case also cited Phipps v. Union Mutual Insurance Co., 50 Okl. 135, 150 P. 1083, which held that although ordinarily a mere soliciting agent had no authority to waive any of the terms or provisions of the contract of insurance, yet if by a course of conduct he was clothed with power in taking the applications and procuring the company to issue policies thereon, and to do anything necessary to take the application, he had the right to fill it out and it was his duty to do so honestly. See also Maxson v. Llewelyn, 122 Cal. 195, 54 P. 732.

[2] Since the insurer, through its agent, is responsible for the omissions and/or falsity of the declarations in the policy, it cannot now directly or indirectly assert the contents of the policy against the insured to rectify its own wrong. Byrd v. Mutual Benefit Health & Accident Ass'n, 73 Cal. App.2d 457, 464, 166 P.2d 901, quoting with approval from Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall, U.S., 222, 20 L.Ed. 617; Ames v. Employers Casualty Co., 16 Cal.App.2d 255, 266, 60 P.2d 347.

[3] In the instant case it has been stipulated that Levenson was the agent of the plaintiff; that at all times herein mentioned he was acting within the scope of his authority and the trial court found that knowledge of ownership of the vehicle had been made available to the agent; that he was charged with that knowledge and that it was imputed to the plaintiff. Knowledge of an agent obtained while negotiating transactions within the scope of his authority is imputed to the principal. Mercer Casualty Co. v. Lewis, supra.

The only remaining question of importance is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that the policy should be reformed as sought by the cross-complaint to include the son as one of the assured.

[4-7] It appears to be the rule that reformation of an insurance policy may be had, in general, where, by reason of fraud, inequitable conduct or mutual mistake, the policy as written does not express the actual and real agreement of the parties. More particularly, if by inadvertence, accident, or mistake the terms of a contract of insurance are not fully or correctly set forth in the policy, it may be reformed in equity so as to express the actual contract intended by the parties, if the mistake is mutual or if there has been fraud or inequitable conduct by one of the parties to the contract. A suit for a reformation may be and usually is maintained after a loss which would fall within the policy as reformed. 29 Am. Jur. p. 237, sec. 241, and p. 238, sec. 242; Snell v. Atlantic Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 98 U.S. 85, 25 L.Ed. 52. The greater weight of authority is to the effect that under the facts involved the receipt and retention of an insurance policy without an examination to ascertain whether or not it conforms to the application made does not necessarily defeat the insured's right to a reformation. (29 Am. Jur. p. 244, sec. 253.) In the instant case the automobile dealer and plaintiff's agent were dealing with a minor school child whose father was called to the lot so as to permit the sale to the minor through the father. The minor was the one intended to be protected by the insurance, as well as the father. They made no other representations to the agent. When dealing with a minor under the circumstances here related, plaintiff may not claim that the clause set forth in the policy in relation to reading and retention of the policy by such minor is a complete estoppel by him from thereafter seeking reformation according to the agreement of the parties participating, where the mistake, if any, was due to the carelessness or negligence of plaintiff's agent.

The general principles above mentioned were considered in Hunt v. Century Indemnity Co., 58 R.I. 336, 192 A. 799, 112 A. L.R. 902. There a Miss Loyer applied to the company agent for liability insurance "on my Chrysler car". The agent asked for her automobile registration slip and from it he obtained all the information for filling in the blanks in the printed policy. The policy contained a declaration of complete ownership of the car by the insured although Miss Loyer did not at any time make any such representation other than to refer to the automobile as her car. The agent admitted he did not ask her if she had complete ownership, and nothing was said about it. The company later attempted to deny liability on the policy because of the claimed misrepresentation as to complete ownership in that it later appeared that she was purchasing said automobile on contract. The appeal was from a decree ordering reformation to express the true agreement of the parties. There the court said, 192 A. at page 804:

"* * * it is clear to us from the evidence that the minds of the agent of the respondent and Miss Loyer met on the agreement to issue to her a liability policy as the owner of the automobile registered in her name and described on the official registration card. The fact of complete ownership did not enter into the negotiations, and the agent so testified. That the policy was issued with such a term included therein was, in our opinion, clearly a mutual mistake."

It cited as authority Houlden v. Farmers' Alliance Co-operative Fire Ins. Co., 188 App.Div. 734, 177 N.Y.S. 286, affirmed in 231 N.Y. 636, 132 N.E. 919, stating:

"* * * where, under a somewhat similar situation, with reference to a fire insurance policy, the court decreed reformation and went on further to say that, even if the mistake were not mutual, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover without reformation on the ground that the company would be estopped to deny the validity of the policy."

The particular findings about which plaintiff complains are adequately supported by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Workmen's Compensation proceeding. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded employee benefits for an injury he received when struck on head by a rock thrown by a fellow employee. The insurer and employer petitioned to review and annul the order granting compensation. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where employee had been injured by rock thrown by fellow employee, whom employee had just accused of allowing him to take severe censure of superior for having agitated about union matters on job, when, in fact, fellow employee had been agitator, injury arose out of and was proximately caused by employment.

Award affirmed.

This is a proceeding to review and annul an order of respondent Industrial Accident Commission awarding workmen's compensation benefits to respondent John C. Lawrence for an injury received when he was hit on the head by a rock thrown by a fellow workman. The question to be determined by this court is: Did the Industrial Accident Commission exceed its jurisdiction in holding, on the evidence, that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment?

The facts as shown by the record are not in substantial dispute and may be summarized as follows:

Respondent Lawrence, hereinafter referred to as "applicant," and one Ingram were fellow employees employed as drivers of Euclid trucks by certain joint venturers engaged in work at Folsom Dam. They were of equal rank in their employment and their duties were confined to the driving of these Euclid trucks.

Some time shortly before August 29, 1954, Ingram had made complaints to a driller foreman on the job about the latter's workmen doing certain work which Ingram claimed should have been done by members of his craft union, the Teamsters, which other work was not connected with Euclid driver work, however. These complaints reached the ears of one "Bino" who was main superintendent of heavy equipment and the boss of applicant and Ingram. On August 28, 1954, during working hours and on the job, Bino, in the presence of Ingram, accused applicant of agitating about union matters on the job and severely reprimanded him for it, and threatened to fire applicant. Ingram at that time made no comment. The next day at about 20 minutes to 4:00 a. m. applicant and Ingram came into contact again as they met with several fellow workmen at an automobile in which they were all to ride home from work. The shift ended at 4:00 a. m., but because of the impossibility in the time remaining for the drivers to make another round trip with their Euclid trucks, they had gathered at the car, waiting for the shift to end. Applicant asked Ingram why the latter had not spoken up "like a man" and accepted blame for what he had done. Ingram cursed applicant and assaulted him without warning, but applicant obtained the upper hand before the two were parted by some of the other men. Applicant then got into the front seat of the car and Ingram remained on the ground on the far side. The other men tried to persuade him to ride home in the same car with applicant, which he refused to do. Ingram then called applicant several foul and obscene names and as a result applicant started to get out of the car to renew the argument with Ingram. Ingram then sprang up from the ground, seized a large rock, and ran around the back of the car toward applicant. At this time applicant had just gotten out of the car and, being warned by one of the others, attempted to run, but Ingram threw the rock. It struck applicant's forehead and fractured his skull, causing the injury in question.

Petitioners first contend the injury to applicant did not arise out of the employment because it resulted from a fight between employees of equal rank over a matter not connected with their duties. They point out that it was over a labor union matter not connected with their duties for their employer, and that neither fought with a superior but with one another in a personal quarrel the day after the applicant's superintendent reprimanded him.

In this connection petitioners cite Metropolitan Redwood Lumber Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 41 Cal.App. 131, 182 P. 315, in which the court held that an injury suffered by an employee by an assault by a fellow employee of equal rank during a quarrel between themselves was not compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act; but that there were two exceptions to this general rule, (1) where the fellow employee causing the injury did so due to a condition of temperament which made it unsafe for him to be around other employees and this condition was known to the employer, or (2) where the injured employee was the superior of the other and was injured by an assault in the course of an attempted exercise of discipline by the superior. The court said in that case it was unable to distinguish in principle between the case before it and Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 P. 212, L.R.A.1916F, 1164, and Fishing v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 690, 158 P. 215, in which cases it was held that injuries resulting from the playful acts, or "horseplay", of fellow employees, in which the applicants had not participated, were not compensable.

Respondent commission asserts the injury arose out of the course of the employment inasmuch as the quarrel was a direct outgrowth of the applicant's concern for tenure on his job and an amicable relationship with his superiors, and the desire that his fellow employee, Ingram, not interfere with them, and that such factors were certainly connected with and an outgrowth of the employment. Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co., 28 Cal.2d 652, 171 P.2d 5, and Kaiser Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 65 Cal. App.2d 218, 150 P.2d 562, are cited for the legal theories upon which they were based. In the Kaiser case, an injury was held compensable when suffered by the employee in intervening in a purely personal quarrel between two other fellow employees. The court said it was a fair inference from the evidence that she was engaged in the service of the employer in attempting to stop the fight so work could go on; that to hold otherwise would be to follow the discarded theory that any voluntary act was an assumption of the risk. In the Carr case, a non-workmen's compensation case, an employer was held liable to a third person for the wilful and malicious tort of his employee committed in the scope of the employment. The employee had gotten into a quarrel over the doing of certain construction work with the victim, an employee of an independent contractor, and struck the victim with a hammer. The court said it was sufficient that the injury resulted from a dispute arising out of the employment in order to say the assailant was acting within the scope of his employment, and it was not necessary to determine that the act in fact furthered the employer's interests. The court did say the doctrine of respondeat superior would not apply if the employee inflicted an injury arising out of personal malice not engendered by the employment.

Respondent commission says these two cases rely on the principle expressed in Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co. v. Cardillo, 1940, 72 App.D.C. 52, 112 F.2d 11, 17, that an injury caused by assault is compensable if "the work of the participants brought them together and created the relations and conditions which resulted in the clash." In that case Justice Rutledge said:

"This view recognizes that work places men under strains and fatigue from human and mechanical impacts, creating frictions which explode in myriads of ways, only some of which are immediately relevant to their tasks. Personal animosities are created by working together on the assembly line or in traffic. Others initiated outside the job are magnified to the breaking point by its compelled contacts. No worker is immune to these pressures and impacts upon temperament. They accumulate and explode over incidents trivial and important, personal and official. But the explosion point is merely the culmination of the antecedent pressures. That it is not relevant to the immediate task, involves a lapse from duty, or contains an element of volition or illegality does not disconnect it from them nor nullify their causal effect in producing its injurious consequences."

This rule was followed, claims respondent commission, in Mutual Implement & Hardware Company v. Pittman, 1952, 214 Miss. 823, 59 So.2d 547, where the assault apparently was the culmination of "horseplay" between the assailant and applicant, and the injury was held compensable. Respondent concludes by saying that under the view of the Carr, Kaiser, and Cardillo cases the assault arose out of the work because it came as a result of the two men being brought together on the job, whether we take as the source (1) Ingram's original contentions regarding union regulations or (2) applicant's expressing to Ingram his objection to being blamed for them by their boss.

The referee in his report on the order denying the petition for reconsideration stated that he was bound by the decision of the Supreme Court in State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Industrial Accident Commission and Hull, 38 Cal.2d 659, 242 P.2d 311. In that case the applicant took exception to the manner in which his foreman gave certain work orders on the job, cursed the latter, to which language he took exception, and the applicant assaulted the foreman, and in the course of the altercation received injuries. In affirming the award the court said, 38 Cal.2d at page 660, 242 P.2d at page 312:

"The workmen's compensation law as declared in the Constitution and statutes compels affirmance of the award. The Constitution confers upon the Legislature power to establish a system of workmen's compensation and create and enforce a liability on employers to compensate their workmen for injury sustained in the course of their employment 'irrespective of the fault of any party.' (Italics added.) Cal. Const., art. XX, § 21. The only requirements of the statute are, that to be compensable, an injury must 'arise out of' and 'occur in the course of' the employment. Labor Code, § 3600. That is to say the employee must be engaged in some activity growing out of and incidental to his employment at the time he suffers an injury in order to be entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation law. It cannot be doubted that a dispute between an employee and his superior in regard to the latter's treatment of the former in their relations as boss and worker is incidental to the employment. There is no doubt that the injury occurred in the course of the employment, for that has reference ordinarily to time and place. Hull has satisfied both aspects. The crucial issue is whether it 'arose out of' the employment, and that poses the question of whether there is a causal connection between the employment and the injury. That that is the only issue follows from the Workmen's Compensation Act which excludes fault and contributory negligence of the employee and assumption of risk as defenses. That is the express declaration of the Constitution and statutes relating to workmen's compensation. Indeed the statute compels that result inasmuch as it declares that 'serious and wilful misconduct' on the part of the employee does not defeat his recovery; it merely cuts it in half, and not even that under certain conditions (Labor Code, § 4551), thus indicating clearly that misconduct on his part is not a defense. Hence the charge of aggressor cannot be a defense, for it is nothing more than an assertion that the employee was at fault—was to blame—brought it on himself.

"These principles, including the negation of a requirement that the employee is doing something for his employer's benefit were clearly stated by this court in the recent case of Pacific Emp. Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 26 Cal. 2d 286, 158 P.2d 9, 159 A.L.R. 313, where we abandoned the long standing rule in this state that the victim of 'horseplay' was not entitled to compensation. The logic of that case is here compelling. We said: 'As grounds for annulling the award, the insurer contends that, although the applicant's injury occurred in the course of her employment, it did not arise "out of" her employment and, accordingly, is not a compensable injury within the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission. * * * "It is not indispensable to recovery, however, that the employee be rendering a service to his employer at the time of the injury. [Citations.] The essential prerequisite to compensation is that danger from which the injury results be one to which he is exposed as an employee in his particular employment.'"

The court stated further that fault and contributory negligence are not defenses, and hence the charge of aggression could not be a defense. The court quoted with approval the following language of Justice

Rutledge in Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Cardillo, supra:

"Nor is it necessary, as these cases show, that the particular act or event which is the immediate cause of the injury be itself part of any work done for the employer by the claimant or others. * * * "The risks of injury incurred in the crowded contacts of the factory through the acts of fellow workmen are not measured by the tendency of such acts to serve the master's business." Not that the act is in the line of duty, or forwards the work, or creates special risk, but that the work brings the employee within its peril makes it, for purposes of compensation, "part of the work.""

Petitioners seek to distinguish the Hull case by pointing out that the case decided that an aggressor could recover compensation, but that on the facts the dispute arose out of the giving of orders to an employee by a superior in the course of his duties, and thus it does not change the rule that as between employees of equal rank injuries suffered in a personal quarrel are not compensable, citing Metropolitan Redwood Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

Petitioners also argue that the activity of Ingram or respondent Lawrence or both in attempting to see that certain union regulations or rules were being followed as far as the drillers on this job were concerned was an activity which was no part of their duties and of no benefit to their employer, and that an injury resulting from an argument based on this activity is not compensable. They cite the case of Pacific Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 27 Cal.App.2d 499, 81 P.2d 572, which involved an injury to an employee while attending a union meeting on the employer's premises. In that case the court held that the injury was not compensable, stating in 27 Cal.App.2d at page 503, 81 P.2d at page 574:

"* * * At the time respondent Kendall was injured she was not acting for her employer nor engaged in his service. She was exercising a personal privilege for her own personal benefit in attending a meeting of an organization of which she was a member and the purposes of which were clearly for her own interests and not necessarily in any way for the benefit of her employer."

We believe that, in view of the later decisions of our Supreme Court hereinbefore cited, the statement in Metropolitan Redwood Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, to the effect that an injury suffered by an employee through an assault by a fellow employee of equal rank during a quarrel between themselves was not compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act, must be considered as out of harmony with later decisions.

In the case of Pacific Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, cited by petitioners, the employee, while attending a union meeting on the employer's premises, was injured while attempting to sit on a table. The court held that the meeting was one relating only to union activities with which the employer was prohibited by law from interfering and was not compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act. We believe that the case is clearly distinguishable on its facts from the instant case, but that if it is construed to support petitioners' position it is out of harmony with the later decisions hereinbefore cited.

There is no merit in petitioners' further contention that the fight between Ingram and applicant resulting in injury to applicant arose over foul name calling and was in fact a second fight between these two men; and, therefore, even if it is assumed the first fight arose out of an incident of their employment, the second fight was purely a personal quarrel unrelated to the employment; and so the injury did not arise out of the employment. The second encounter, coming so soon after the first, must properly be regarded as a part of the same quarrel and resulting from the same cause.

We are satisfied that the cases of Pacific Employers Insurance Co. v. Industrial Acci- dent Commission, 26 Cal.2d 286, 158 P.2d 9, 159 A.L.R. 313; Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co., supra, and State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, require an affirmance of the award where, as in the instant case, there is ample evidence to support the inferences that the quarrel between Ingram and applicant, resulting in applicant's injury, originally arose out of the employment because it concerned the work relationship between the superintendent on the job and applicant, and the latter's tenure on the job, for which applicant rightly or wrongly blamed certain on-the-job activities of Ingram, and that the rock-throwing incident was simply a continuation of and part of this work dispute, and could not be logically isolated as a separate, unrelated matter. Here the applicant feared for his job, was under threat of discharge for the act or acts of a fellow worker. Certainly the dispute did in fact arise from the "crowded contacts of the factory"; did arise from and was incident to the employment. The assault occurred on the premises of the employer, during working hours and at the hand of an employee for whom the employer was responsible under the holding of the Carr case and authorities cited.

Article XX, section 21, of the California Constitution, as amended in 1918, provides: "The Legislature is hereby expressly vested with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution, to create, and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, by appropriate legislation, and in that behalf to create and enforce a liability on the part of any or all persons to compensate any or all of their workmen for injury or disability * * * sustained by the said workmen in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party."

The Legislature has declared that in the determination of controversies arising under the statutes governing workmen's compensation, their provisions "shall be liberally construed by the courts with the purpose of extending their benefits for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment." Labor Code, sec. 3202.

In view of the statute, the constitutional provision and the decisions hereinbefore cited, we conclude that the injury sustained by the applicant arose out of and was "proximately caused by the employment" within the meaning of section 3600 of the Labor Code.

The award is affirmed.

Action by former partner against partner continuing business for money had and received and for an accounting following dissolution of partnership pursuant to an agreement. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen W. Ashburn, J., gave judgment for former partner, and defendant appealed. This is an appeal from the judgment.

The action is for money had and received and an accounting. The court gave judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $7,704.19.

As recited in appellant's brief,

"On or about July 1, 1944, plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement of partnership (hereinafter referred to as 'the partnership') for the ownership and operation of a publishing business under the firm name and style of The Hollywood Reporter. Thereafter, differences arose between plaintiff and defendant and in August of 1951, plaintiff commenced an action (not the one involved herein) against defendant in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, Case No. 589425, for declaratory relief, dissolution of the partnership, an accounting thereon, a receiver thereof and damages. On or about December 30, 1952, plaintiff and defendant entered into a certain written agreement for the purpose of dissolving and terminating the partnership and for the settlement of disputes and claims between them.

"Under Exhibit I, the partnership was to be dissolved and terminated on January 15, 1953. Upon dissolution, defendant was to acquire all of plaintiff's right, title, interest and estate in and to the assets of the partnership excepting only a certain automobile not herein involved and all accounts receivable of the partnership, and the proceeds thereof, existing as of the close of the month of November, 1952, said accounts receivable being hereinafter referred to as 'the accounts receivable'.

"The Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and the Judgment entered thereon purported to determine the amount of money owing by defendant to plaintiff as of August 31, 1954, under sub-paragraph (4) of Paragraph Third of Exhibit I.

"The total amount of money collected by defendant from the accounts receivable to and including August 31, 1954, was not in dispute. The dispute between plaintiff and defendant concerned two deductions which defendant claimed should be made from the total amount of collections from the accounts receivable in computing the amount of money, if any, owing from defendant to plaintiff under sub-paragraph (4) of Paragraph Third.

"The first disputed deduction involved sub-paragraph (2) of Paragraph Third. Defendant claimed that under sub-paragraph (2) of Paragraph Third, the sum of Eighteen Thousand ($18,000) Dollars should be deducted from the total monies collected from the accounts receivable as of August 31, 1954, in computing the amount which should be disbursed in accordance with the provisions of sub-paragraph (4) of Paragraph Third.

"The second disputed deduction involved the question of whether defendant was entitled to deduct from the total amount of collections from the accounts receivable as of August 3, 1954 the amount of certain commissions in the sum of Seventy-One Hundred Thirty-Two and thirty-one/100 ($7132.31) Dollars, which sum defendant claimed was payable and paid out of the proceeds of the accounts receivable to salesmen of the partnership for having obtained the accounts receivable and for having collected the same."

The court found,

"That defendant has failed to prove that all or any specific portion of the $18,000 charged to said partnership by said firm of Bautzer, Grant, Youngman & Silbert, or any predecessor thereof, was a charge for services rendered to or for said partnership; and no portion of the sum of $18,000 which was paid by defendant to said attorneys is to be credited to defendant in the accounting which has been taken and stated herein.", and "That except for the sum of $1,292.41 (which, together with the sum of $3,707.59 heretofore paid on account of accounts payable, falls within the $5,000.00 maximum limitation of paragraph Third (1) of said Dissolution and Settlement Agreement), all remaining commissions to salesmen on account of collections of said accounts receivable were and are an obligation to be borne solely by defendant and no portion thereof is chargeable to plaintiff or deductible from plaintiff's share of the collections of said accounts receivable."

It is contended on appeal that, I. Defendant is, as a matter of law, entitled to credit in the sum of $18,000 for monies paid to said law firms; II. Finding of Fact VII is against the weight of the evidence which showed that defendant is entitled to a credit in the sum of $18,000 for monies paid to said law firms; III. Defendant is entitled, as a matter of law, to a credit in at least the sum of $10,800 for monies paid to said law firms; IV. The judgment is based upon an erroneous conclusion of law that defendant had the burden of proving the existence and amount of a partnership debt to said law firms; V. Defendant is entitled to an additional credit (as a matter of law) in the sum of $5,839.90 for commissions paid to salesmen; VI. The lower court erroneously failed to consider extrinsic evidence in construing Exhibit I with reference to the right of defendant to an additional credit in the sum of $5,839.90 for commissions paid to salesmen; and VII. The judgment is void for want of jurisdiction by reason of the absence of indispensable parties.

From the foregoing it is obvious that the dispute relates to certain deductions which as contended by appellant should have been made, one of $18,000 and one of $7,132.31.

[1] Appellant's contention No. VII is without merit. The other parties are unaffected by the action and are not necessary parties.

[2, 3] It is also obvious from the foregoing that appellant's arguments relate to the sufficiency and weight of the evidence. A review of the record supports respondent's contention in this regard; that the evidence is sufficient there is no question. Although the evidence may be conflicting, it is well settled that when there is sufficient evidence to support them, the appellate court is without power to disturb the findings on appeal. Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, 210 P.2d 757.

A review of the record reveals no prejudicial errors.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

A jury awarded plaintiffs, husband and wife, damages for personal injuries sustained by them as the result of a collision between an automobile in which they were riding, driven by plaintiff husband, and a streetcar operated by defendant Pacific Electric Railway. Defendant moved for a new trial upon the grounds, (1) excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice; (2) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and (3) errors of law occurring at the trial prejudicial to said defendant. The motion was granted solely on the last-named ground. From that order plaintiffs prosecute this appeal while defendant has filed a cross-appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiffs.

By their complaint plaintiffs alleged that their injuries were the result of negligence on the part of defendant and its employee who was operating the streetcar. Defendant's answer denied negligence and affirmatively pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs and unavoidable accident.

The record reflects that the accident occurred on May 11, 1953, at about 1:15 p.m. when plaintiffs were driving east on Palo Alto Street in the City of Los Angeles in a light pick-up truck. Mr. Corsetto was then 74 years of age and Mrs. Corsetto was 55 years old. Harry Corsetto, the driver, made a complete boulevard stop when he reached the intersection of Palo Alto and Glendale Boulevard. Plaintiffs both looked to the south and observed the traffic on Glendale Boulevard, including a northbound streetcar, was stopped at the intersection of Glendale Boulevard and Temple Street. They looked to the north toward Bellevue and saw only a small truck some distance away driving south on Glendale Boulevard. They then proceeded to drive into the intersection of Palo Alto and Glendale for the purpose of making a left turn into Glendale. Glendale Boulevard at this point has two sets of parallel streetcar tracks running down the middle of the street. As plaintiffs approached the middle of the intersection they noticed that the northbound traffic on Glendale Boulevard had begun to move north from Temple Street. Harry Corsetto thereupon stopped his truck in the middle of the intersection on the southbound streetcar track to permit the northbound traffic to pass in front of them.

As he reached the middle of the intersection, he saw, for the first time, a streetcar on the southbound tracks of Glendale Boulevard at Bellevue about 550 feet away. This streetcar made a full stop at Bellevue to discharge passengers. The northbound traffic, including the streetcar, proceeded to pass in front of the plaintiffs, and they were then struck by the southbound streetcar which had proceeded south from Bellevue. The southbound streetcar came to a stop 50 to 75 feet south of the point of impact. The force of the impact spun plaintiffs' truck completely around and hurled it across the intersection, over the curb, up a ten- or fifteen-foot embankment, through a fence and into a tree. Plaintiff, Harry Corsetto, was dragged this distance half in and half out of the truck. The truck moved a distance of 120 to 150 feet.

[1] As to these and other surrounding facts and circumstances occurring immediately prior and up to the moment of impact the evidence was in conflict, but since insufficiency of the evidence is not specified in the order granting a new trial, it is conclusively presumed that the order was not based on that ground, Code Civ.Proc. § 657, and because of the conclusion at which we have arrived as to the correctness of the order on the ground therein stated we deem it unnecessary to set forth in detail the evidence adduced at the trial.

[2] Upon an appeal from an order granting a new trial all presumptions favor the order as against the judgment, and the order will be affirmed if it may be sustained on any ground. Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Railway Corp., 25 Cal.2d 165, 169, 153 P.2d 338.

We are satisfied that the order granting a new trial was proper because of erroneous rulings by the court in admitting evidence, over objection, of the inexperience of respondent's motorman.

During the cross-examination of the motorman Bair, who was operating the streetcar involved in the accident, the following questions were propounded and answers thereto given:

"Q. And you had started on your own about ten days before that?

"Mr. Yeomans (Attorney for defendant): I object to the question as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Well, it may be relevant. The objection is overruled.

"The Witness: Approximately two weeks.

"Q. By Mr. Honoroff (Attorney for plaintiffs): You had begun to work for the Pacific Electric the end of March as a trainee? A. Yes.

"Mr. Yeomans: I would like to object to that, too, and ask to have it stricken, and I wonder if I can have an understanding that to all these questions I have a running objection?

"The Court: What is your objection?

"Mr. Yeomans: That it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: The objection is overruled. Your objection on that ground may be deemed denied.

"Q. By Mr. Honoroff: Your experience driving alone on the date of this accident, then, was about two weeks in total? A. On my own, yes.

"Q. Prior to your employment with the Pacific Electric, you had never operated a streetcar before that time? A. No."

In the argument to the jury, appellants' attorney made the following comments as to this evidence:

"I believe that one of the witnesses, Miss Bruce, said that he put up a card

'Take the Next Car' but whether it was because he was in a hurry, or whether it was because the Pacific Electric Company had let a man work possibly a little too soon without having another employee there with him—he had only been alone for about two weeks—whether he had been going possibly a little too fast, or was inattentive, these are the possibilities. We know from the statements of the witnesses that he had ample opportunity, if he was being careful, to bring his streetcar to a stop."

"With regard to the fact that this streetcar weighs 32 tons, I agree with that. It is a tremendous amount, and certainly the company, the defendant company, is aware of that when they entrust it alone to a man who has had two weeks of experience by himself."

[3-6] The complaint herein contained no allegation as to negligence of respondent in the training or employment of the motorman. The great weight of authority supports the rule that in actions of this kind the competency of the person claimed to have acted negligently, or his reputation for care, is not a subject of inquiry. The ultimate question was whether the motorman exercised ordinary care to avoid the accident and injuries to appellants. No matter how wanting the motorman may have been in general competency, if he did on the occasion here involved, exercise ordinary care, plaintiffs could not recover, while if he did not exercise such care, then, even though the motorman was possessed of the utmost degree of efficiency and skill in the control and operation of a streetcar, plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Therefore, the sole question was the conduct of the motorman at the time of the accident in question. Towle v. Pacific Imp. Co., 98 Cal. 342, 343, 344, 33 P. 207; Cunningham v. Los Angeles Railway Co., 115 Cal. 561, 564, 47 P. 452; Langford v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 729, 732, 733, 734, 164 P. 398; Strandt v. Cannon, 29 Cal.App.2d 509, 520, 85 P.2d 160. Appellants insist that in the cases just cited it was held error to instruct the jury that the general competency of a driver may be considered in determining his negligence in a particular case, while in the present proceeding the jury was in no way instructed that the general competency of the motorman, the extent of his previous experience, or the length of his service should be considered in determining his negligence in this particular case. That in the case at bar the instructions clearly advised the jury that the appellants were burdened with the duty of proving that the conduct of the motorman at the particular time and place was negligent. But the answer to this suggestion is that the natural effect of testimony of incompetency is to lead the jury to infer that the person whose conduct is in question failed to act properly at the time and in the very matter under investigation. Regardless of the instructions, the jury had before it and was entitled to consider the foregoing evidence improperly admitted. Whether they did or not, we are of course unable to say, but under the law, respondent was entitled to have the evidence limited to an examination of the conduct of the motorman at the very time in controversy. The challenged evidence in the case now engaging our attention was no more admissible than would be evidence that a motorman was experienced and commonly a careful and skillful operator of streetcars, to show that when the accident occurred he was exercising due care. While evidence of the character here complained of would be admissible in cases where the utmost care is required and where the defendant is held liable for injuries resulting from the slightest negligence, such a rule does not apply to cases like the one at bar, where the defendant can be held liable only for a failure to exercise ordinary care. Towle v. Pacific Imp. Co., supra, 98 Cal. at page 345, 33 P. 207. Other grounds urged to justify the order need not be discussed.

For the foregoing reasons the order is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 25, 1955.

Hearing Denied Nov. 23, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of second degree murder, and judgment of conviction was entered. Over two years after the ten-day statutory time for appeal had expired he applied for an order allowing his appeal. The Superior Court, San Francisco County, Orla St. Clair, J., denied the application, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that where defendant made no effort to file appeal except to deliver it to a man working in the jail who returned it to him in half an hour, did not mail instructions to his attorneys to appeal, and waited over two years to seek to file same, subsequent attempt to appeal could not be considered as a constructive timely appeal.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1031

An exception to the general rule that in criminal cases a reviewing court is without jurisdiction to consider an appeal after expiration of the ten-day statutory time, may be made where: 1. The defendant is free of all fault or lack of diligence contributing to the tardiness of the notice of appeal and 2. The tardiness was caused by fault, negligent or intentional, of the public officials having custody of defendant. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1081

Where defendant seeking to appeal from his conviction over two years after ten-day statutory time for appeal had expired made no timely effort to file the appeal except to deliver it to a man working in the jail who returned it to him in half an hour, and did not mail instructions to his attorneys to appeal, attempt to appeal could not be treated as a constructive timely appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

3. Criminal Law ⇨1068½

State did not have obligation to assist defendant, who was restrained, in perfecting a timely appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

4. Criminal Law ⇨1081

Where defendant knew no notice of appeal had been filed during ten-day statutory time for appeal, his complete lack of diligence in not mailing notice he had prepared for over two years after leaving jail could not be overlooked in consideration of allowing appeal on basis it was a constructive timely appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

5. Criminal Law ⇨1089(1)

Theory of constructive timely filing of a notice of appeal cannot justify an unlimited postponement of the actual institution of the appeal.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., of the State of California, Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying an application made by defendant in propria persona to the San Francisco Superior Court, dated December 15, 1954, with respect to his appeal from a judgment of conviction of second degree murder entered by said court on December 19, 1951. No notice of appeal of said judgment had previously been filed. In 1953 appellant had petitioned the California Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was denied without opinion. Appellant then petitioned the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari stating among other grounds: "XI That petitioner was deprived of his rights to give notice of appeal and the arrest of judgment of conviction by actions of his jailors." On October 14, 1954 said petition was denied in the following terms: "Petition for writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of California denied without prejudice to the petitioner's rights under the facts alleged to prosecute an appeal in the California state courts in accordance with principles announced in People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868." 348 U.S. 850, 75 S.Ct. 61. Appellant's above application to the Superior Court stated in substance that appellant appealed from the judgment of December 19, 1951 on the basis of the above order of the United States Supreme Court and prayed for an order allowing such appeal and for an order for a transcript on appeal, designating the parts of the reporter's transcript he desired. His petition for writ of certiorari, containing his grievances against the original judgment, was appended. On February 24, 1955 the matter was heard in the Superior Court, appellant and a witness for the People testified and the motion was denied, the court holding that the facts, even those testified to by appellant, did not bring him under the Slobodion case. The transcript shows that when on December 19, 1951 appellant was sentenced to San Quentin a stay of execution was granted to and including January 2, 1952. Appellant's testimony was in substance to the following effect. During that period he was kept in the San Francisco County Jail No. 1. On December 19th his attorneys visited him there. They advised against appeal, but he said that he thought he would continue. He had an arrangement with them that for the amount paid by him they would defend his case in full including, if necessary, an appeal. The result of their conversation was that appellant and the attorneys would think the question of appeal over, and that one of the attorneys would be back in a day or so. When he did not come, even after appellant wrote to them asking why they did not show up, appellant himself wrote out a document intended as a notice of appeal, and gave it to a man, he knew as Mr. Jule. After about half an hour Mr. Jule brought the document back saying: "Captain Smith wants to know who you think you are, anyhow, around here * * Do you think we are your servants?" Appellant kept the document and did not do anything further about it, except trying to contact his attorneys through his sister. He did not mail the notice of appeal. Mr. Jule said later it was useless to mail the thing; it would not be given privilege, because most of his mail was confiscated by Mr. Smith. Mr. Jule "practically" told him that he would not be able to get it out unless he got it out through his attorneys. Appellant insisted on it being notarized, hoping to have the notary take it to court, but he was refused that privilege. He was sending out mail at that time. Some of it was confiscated, some reached his sister or his wife. He did not try to mail the notice or to contact anybody else to file it because he was afraid that if he was too insistent, there would be retaliation by putting him in the "black hole" where he had been for four days prior to his trial. On January 3, 1952 he was taken to San Quentin and he took the papers he had prepared with him. He kept them in his locker where they were eventually confiscated. He remained in San Quentin for four months and was then taken to Folsom. Because of restrictions on study he took eighteen months of research in Folsom before he filed his petition to the California Supreme Court.

Mr. Smith, who at that time was captain of the day watch in charge of County Jail No. 1 testified for the People that mail was censored but that no mailing was refused except when it was obscene or derogatory. He did not recall any conversation about appellant's mail or any of appellant's mail being refused. Appellant had the normal mailing privileges.

Counsel for appellant, appointed by this court to assist him on this appeal, has diligently urged that the above facts can be brought under the rule of the Slobodion case, supra. Both parties have concentrated on this point and have abstained from treating the formal adequacy of appellant's application or motion. We also think it advisable to decide this appeal solely on the merits as to the matter suggested by the United States Supreme Court, and have concluded that on that basis the order must be affirmed.

In the Slobodion case the defendant incarcerated in San Quentin had four days after judgment placed his notice of appeal in the prison mailbox. Three days later it had been returned to him without explanation. The next day he went to the mailing department where the sergeant in charge could find no explanation for the return. Defendant explained the nature of the document and the importance of having it mailed at once, but, notwithstanding a promise to take care of it, the mailing was delayed some days so that it reached the clerk's office a few days too late. The Supreme Court held that nevertheless the appeal should be considered timely.

[1] In its opinion the court upheld the general rule that in criminal cases the appellate courts are without jurisdiction to consider an appeal taken after the expiration of the 10 day period of Rule 31 of the Rules on Appeal, but recognized that an exception should be made in the case of a defendant who was in custody, who had taken every step allowed by the officials in whose custody he was which he could possibly take to perfect his appeal, but who was unable to have the clerk of the Superior Court timely receive his notice of appeal because of the negligence of said authorities in forwarding it. Cases in which the defendant was without negligence prevented from timely noticing his appeal by other circumstances than the fault of public officials were expressly distinguished. The exception was rationalized as a constructive timely appeal. From the above it appears that there are two requirements for the applicability of the exception: 1. The defendant must be free of all fault or lack of diligence contributing to the tardiness of the notice of appeal and 2. The tardiness must have been caused by the fault, negligent or intentional, of the public officials in whose custody the defendant was.

[2] In our case these requirements are evidently not fulfilled. The only step which appellant took to effectuate his appeal within the statutory period was to hand the notice to a man whose exact capacity at the jail does not appear, but who was not the person in charge. It is conceded on appeal that no jail attendant was under duty to act as appellant's messenger. Nevertheless when appellant was so told within half an hour, he did not try to effect the filing of the document in any other manner. No endeavor was made to mail it, although appellant had sent out other mail which at least in part had reached the addressees. Although he testified that he had paid for services of his attorneys with respect to an appeal, if that should become necessary, he did not instruct them by mail to file notice of appeal. Even if it should be believed that his conversations with Mr. Jule had convinced him that the jail officials did not wish him to appeal without the assistance of his attorneys, that could not reasonably prevent him from instructing these attorneys. With respect to the alleged fear of retaliation it must be noted that appellant did not testify to any threat. The vague conversations with Mr. Jule to which he testified cannot be considered to have prevented timely filing of the appeal, even if we assume that Mr. Jule was employed at the jail in such a capacity that his acts would be those of the authorities in whose custody appellant was.

[3] Appellant urges that it is not enough that the State did not prevent the timely appeal but that it had a duty to take positive action to assist appellant, who was restrained, in timely perfecting it. The failure to do so is said to bring appellant's case under the rule of the Slobodion case. This contention disregards the very exceptional nature of the rule and would extend it beyond its reasonable limits.

[4, 5] Moreover, as appellant knew that no notice of appeal whatever was forwarded during the statutory period for appeal, his complete lack of diligence after he left the jail cannot be overlooked. When on January 3, 1952 he came to San Quentin he was still in possession of the papers he had prepared but he did not mail them and instead he took nearly two years to prepare a petition for writ of habeas corpus. The theory of the Slobodion case, based on a constructive timely filing of notice of appeal cannot justify an unlimited postponement of the actual institution of the appeal. In all cases in which the applicability of the rule was accepted the statutory period had been exceeded by a few days only.

Ernest KINGDON, Frank Kingdon, Betty Oughtred, and Henry B. Nathan, as sole surviving executor of the Estate of Frank W. Kingdon, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

ESTATE of Sarah Maud KINGDON and Berry D. Brown, as Executor of the Estate of Sarah Maud Kingdon, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16462.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 28, 1955.

As Corrected on Denial of Rehearing

Nov. 25, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

'Action against deceased's estate consolidated with proceedings on objections to first and final account of executor. From a judgment of the Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Murray Draper, J., in favor of the defendants and from an order overruling objections to the account the plaintiffs and objectants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where there had been a partnership between husband and wife, the widow's estate was entitled to apply in payment of Federal excess profits taxes, joint income taxes and surtax credits of the partners and was not required to pay to the other partner's estate one-half of that credit.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨42

Where there had been a partnership between husband and wife, executor of the wife's estate as part of winding up business of partnership terminated by death of husband was entitled to offset the husband's share of tax credit against the partnership tax debt and was not required to pay to husband's estate one-half of the tax credit. West's Ann.Corp.Code § 15037; 26 U.S.C.A. § 1481.

2. Property ⇨7

A Federal tax credit is an asset of the person so credited.

3. Husband and Wife ⇨42

Where executor of wife's estate as part of business of winding up of husband and wife partnership terminated by husband's death, made settlement agreement with government that he would pay tax liability less tax credit without expressly mentioning that the husband's share of tax credit was to be so used, the agreement did not preclude the use of the husband's share of tax credit, but such provision was implied in the statement that tax liability would be paid less tax credit. Two proceedings brought by appellants were consolidated for trial on stipulated facts and additional documentary evidence. One was an action against the Estate of Sara Maud Kingdon and Berry D. Brown, as executor thereof. The other was objections filed in that estate to the first and final accounting of the executor. From the judgment in the first proceeding in favor of respondents, and from the order in the second proceeding overruling objections to the said account, appellants appeal.

Question presented.

In view of the confusion between statements made in appellants' brief and the issue raised by the pleadings and considered by the trial court, it is difficult to determine the exact contention of appellants. As nearly as we can judge, it is (other than the fact that appellants want the Sara Kingdon Estate to pay them a total sum of $13,760.78): Where there was a partnership of husband and wife, is the estate of the surviving partner (the wife) entitled to apply in payment of federal excess profits taxes joint income tax and surtax credits of the partners, or is the estate required to pay to the other partner's estate one-half of that credit? ¹

Facts.

The United Service Company, owned by Frank and Sara, became indebted to the United States Maritime Administration in the sum of $35,889.50 for excess profits taxes for 1944 and 1945. The Administration's invoice charged the company with the total tax liability. In its credit memoranda it named the company as debtor but in showing the charges and debits it showed one-half the charge as against Frank and one-half as against Sara. Likewise a total credit of $27,521.56 for income tax and surtax overpaid was shown as one-half ($13,760.78) in favor of Frank and a similar sum in favor of Sara. However, it is clear from the record that both the charge and the credit were jointly in Sara and Frank as owners of the company.² Frank died. The probate of his estate was com-

1. Appellants will probably dispute this statement of the question on two grounds: (1) They vacillate between claiming that the United Service Company, the business subject to the tax, may have been a partnership or may have been the separate property of the husband. However, it is clear that the business was the partnership of Frank and Sara Kingdon. In the Estate of Frank Kingdon it was mentioned as such and the court so found in an order confirming sale of certain personal property and in the decree of distribution. The court so found in this proceeding. (2) Appellants contend that the tax credit was not a joint, but a several one. This will be discussed later.

2. See United States v. Sarkozy, D.C., 99 F.Supp. 736, for holding that a partnermenced August 31, 1947. No reference was made in the probate of his estate to this tax liability or credit. The court in that estate ordered the executors (Sara was one) to continue the operation of the company and found that it was the partnership of Sara and Frank. In February, 1948, the partnership business was sold for $10,000, one-half of which the court ordered paid to Sara as her share of the partnership. In the decree of distribution (March 11, 1949) the court found that the company had been operated at a net loss of $6,043.01; that Sara as partner was entitled to half of its remaining assets; that Sara was willing to absorb from her private resources the losses of the business; that she waived all moneys due her for family allowance. In Frank's will appellants Ernest Kingdon, Frank Kingdon and Betty Oughtred were bequeathed $10,000 each. The decree found that the total remaining asset of the estate was a sum which could pay each legatee only $4,402.58 and such sum was distributed to each. Sara died in December, 1949. Respondent executor in 1952 petitioned the court in her estate to permit him to compromise and pay the government's tax claim. The petition set forth the government's claim of $35,889.50, the credits of $27,521.56, and asked permission to pay the difference, $8,367.94 from the moneys in Sara's estate. The court approved the petition and the executor settled the government's claim accordingly.

Pleadings.

The complaint charges that Brown as executor of Sara's estate received from the United States a credit for $13,760.78 tax refund that belonged to Frank's estate and asked that the said sum be paid to plaintiffs because they had not received their full legacies under Frank's will. Also, in Sara's estate they filed objections to the final account. These objections referred to the last mentioned complaint and stated that the executor had received the above mentioned sum belonging to Frank's estate and asked that the final account in Sara's estate be not approved until the complaint was heard on its merits.

Offset.

[1] Thus, the sole question to be considered by both the trial court and the probate court was whether the executor of Sara's estate as part of the winding up of the partnership business was entitled to offset Frank's tax credit against the partnership tax debt. To ask the question is practically to answer it. The partnership owed the government $35,889.50. Each of the partners was liable jointly for this amount. The husband and wife made joint tax returns, and the tax credit was a joint one. Neither partner could have collected any portion of the credit without first paying the liability. In the administration of Frank's estate no claim was made that the tax credit was an asset of the estate. Moreover, in the decree of distribution in that estate, the court found that the business had been operated by the executors at a loss, which loss of $6,043.01 Sara had assumed personally. Had the tax credit been considered as an asset of the estate separate and apart from its being an offset on the tax liability, the court would not have found a loss to have existed.

[2] Appellants cite cases holding that a tax credit is an asset of the person so credited. There can be no question but that it is such asset. However, the asset here was of a type which required that it either be used in offset of the liability or that the liability be paid before the credit could be received in cash.

[3] Appellants stress the fact that in the settlement agreement with the government the executor of Sara's estate agrees that he as such executor will pay the government the $35,889.50 "less the tax credit, if any, applicable * * *" They contend that because no mention was made in so many words that Frank's share of the tax credit was to be used, the executor was ship tax liability and tax credit of the type here, are both joint as to the partners, and that the tax credit up to an amount equal to the tax liability can only be used as an offset and cannot be withdrawn in whole or in part.

agreeing to use only Sara's share. This overlooks, first, that the agreement was made by the executor as the representative of the estate of the surviving partner in closing up the affairs of the partnership as it was his duty to do. (See Corp. Code § 15037.) Secondly, the agreement itself recites the incurring of the tax liability by Frank and Sara as partners, and that the payment of said sum less the tax credit would release the estates of both Frank and Sara from said tax obligation. It was unnecessary to state in such agreement expressly that Frank's share in the tax credits was being used. It was implied in the statement that the tax liability would be paid less the tax credits. Both of the parties to the agreement so understood it, and it was made pursuant to court order in Sara's estate which expressly showed that the entire tax credit was to be offset. Actually, Sara's estate paid the balance of $8,367.94 out of its funds. (There were no assets of the partnership left.) Of this sum Frank's estate, were it in existence, would have been liable for one-half.

As pointed out hereinbefore, appellants are asking for a specific sum which they claim belongs to Frank's estate and which they claim the executor of Sara's estate has failed to account for. The evidence supports the court's findings that Sara's estate did not receive "from the United States a credit for a $13,760.78 tax refund that in fact belonged to the estate of said Frank

W. Kingdon, Deceased; but in fact said estate of Frank W. Kingdon, Deceased, received the full benefit of said tax credit in the amount of $13,760.78 upon the joint liability of said estate and of said estate to Sara Maud Kingdon, Deceased, in the amount of $35,889.50 due the United States of America for excess profits under applicable United States statutes for renegotiation of excess profits upon war contract work; said tax credit having been allowed and the benefit thereof having been received by said estate of Frank W. Kingdon, Deceased, under the applicable provisions of Internal Revenue Code, Section 3806 [26 U.S.C.A. § 3806³]. Said tax credit was not obtainable by or available to said estate of Frank W. Kingdon, Deceased, except in the sense and to the extent it was available by the provisions of Internal Revenue Code Section 3806, as a credit upon said joint liability of said estate for repayment of said excess profits to the United States of America."

We have not discussed appellants' reference to the properties held by Frank and Sara in joint tenancy and which were treated in both estates as such, as we fail to see any relevancy of such properties to the issue here.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

A. G. KEATING, Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of The CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, and Honorable Samuel F. Finley, as Judge Thereof, Respondents.

Harry E. Foster, Real Party in Interest.

S. F. 19259.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 1, 1955.

Original proceeding was brought for writ of prohibition to prevent judge of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco from hearing the retrial of an action to recover damages for alleged fraudulent conversion of assets of a business. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that where judge stated that defendant had given false testimony, and judge rejected books of account with the statement that he had no confidence in defendant's integrity or veracity, and, on appeal by defendant from adverse judgment, it was held that issue of liability was correctly determined but that action was required to be remanded for retrial on issue of damages, judge was disqualified from sitting at the retrial.

1. Prohibition ☞3(5)

Where facts are without substantial conflict, prohibition is a proper remedy to test whether trial judge is disqualified, since order striking petition for change of judge is not immediately reviewable by appeal, and since an appeal from a subsequent judgment is not an adequate remedy. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

2. Judges ☞51(4)

If written statement under the Code of Civil Procedure setting forth facts allegedly constituting ground of disqualification of trial judge is timely and states sufficient facts, it is judge's duty to file answer within five days or be disqualified from sitting until the matter of his bias is passed on by another judge, but where statement is legally insufficient, judge may ignore it or strike it from the files. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

3. Judges ☞49(1)

The mere fact that trial judge rejects the testimony of a party, does not disqualify the judge. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

4. Judges ☞49(2)

A judge is not disqualified from proceeding to try and decide a case or pass on a motion for new trial because he states during the course of the trial that in his opinion a party has deliberately given false testimony, provided that judge's opinion is based on a consideration of the evidence produced. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

5. Judges ☞49(2)

Judge, when acting as the trier of the facts, has duty to pass on the credibility of witnesses, and, if he believes that a party had testified falsely and chooses to say so rather than remain silent, he is not disqualified from proceeding to render judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

6. Judges ☞49(2)

Where a judge has stated during the course of a prior trial that he believes that a party has wilfully sworn falsely, though judge's belief is founded on the evidence before him, he is disqualified from retrying the case. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

7. Judges ☞49(2)

Where trial judge, in action for damages for alleged fraudulent conversion of assets of a business, stated that defendant had given false testimony, and judge rejected books of account with the statement that he had no confidence in defendant's integrity or veracity, and, on appeal by defendant from adverse judgment, it was held that issue of liability was correctly determined but that action was required to be remanded for retrial on issue of damages, judge was disqualified from sitting at the retrial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

8. Judges §51(2)

Where statement by defendant of disqualification of trial judge to sit on retrial met the purposes of the statute and was presented by defendant, promptly after learning that the case was to be set for trial, application for disqualification was timely. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Petitioner is the defendant in an action brought to recover damages for fraudulent conversion of the assets of a business. Foster v. Keating, 120 Cal.App.2d 435, 261 P.2d 529. The case was tried without a jury, and after the conclusion of testimony the trial judge, Honorable Samuel F. Finley, said with reference to defendant's testimony, "I know some of those statements he made were untrue and palpably false; and I think a situation of this kind to a certain extent is a situation that the grand jury ought to investigate * * * because people shouldn't be permitted to take the stand and give testimony that is false." He then orally announced that judgment would be given against defendant in the sum of $35,000.

The plaintiff in the action applied to the court to increase the award of damages, and at the hearing defendant sought to reopen the case for the purpose of introducing certain books of account. The judge stated that it was unnecessary to go into the books since they would not show anything to alter his conclusion. He added, "Of course I make the further observation that the figures in the books were placed there either by the hand of or under the direction of Mr. Keating, and I have no confidence at all in Mr. Keating's integrity and veracity, and I wouldn't have any confidence in the figures * * * in those books." The award was then increased to $50,000 but was later set at $40,940. Findings and judgment were thereafter filed.

On appeal by defendant from the adverse judgment, it was held that the issue of liability was correctly determined but that the action must be remanded for retrial of the issue of damages. Foster v. Keating, 120 Cal.App.2d 435, 451-455, 261 P.2d 529.

Some months later plaintiff filed notice that he would make a motion in the department where Judge Finley was presiding to set the action for further proceedings. Defendant filed a petition and affidavit for change of judge on the ground that the judge's statements showed him to be disqualified by reason of bias and prejudice against defendant. No answering affidavit was filed by the judge, but after argument he reaffirmed his opinion that defendant had not told the truth at the trial, although he denied any disqualification and said that he did not feel he had "any prejudice, any more than any judge would have against someone who doesn't tell the truth." He struck the petition from the record, asserting that it was not timely and that the evidence was not sufficient to support a charge of disqualification.

Petitioner then brought this proceeding in prohibition to restrain Judge Finley from hearing the retrial of the issue of damages, claiming that a fair and impartial trial could not be had before him.

[1] Prohibition is a proper remedy to test whether a judge is disqualified where, as here, the facts are without substantial conflict. Briggs v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 336, 341, 10 P.2d 1003; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.App.2d 628, 66 P.2d 689; Chastain v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.App.2d 97, 104, 57 P.2d 982; see Kreling v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 305, 153 P.2d 734. The order striking the petition for a change of judge is not immediately reviewable by appeal, and an appeal from a subsequent judgment is not an adequate remedy. See Briggs v. Superior Court, supra, 215 Cal. at page 341, 10 P.2d 1003; 1 Witkin, California Procedure (1954), p. 177.

[2] Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part that "No justice or judge shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding: * * * 5. When it is made to appear probable that, by reason of bias or prejudice of such justice or judge a fair and impartial trial cannot be had before him", that any party may file "a written statement * * * setting forth the fact or facts constituting the ground of the disqualification of such judge", that within five days thereafter the judge may file an answer admitting or denying the allegations of the statement, and that "No judge of a court of record, who shall deny his disqualification, shall hear or pass upon the question of his own qualification * * *." Under this section, if the written statement is timely and states sufficient facts, it is the duty of the judge to file an answer within five days or be disqualified from sitting until the matter of his bias is passed upon by another judge. In re Harrington, 87 Cal. App.2d 831, 834-835, 197 P.2d 783; Rosenfield v. Vosper, 70 Cal.App.2d 217, 221-223, 160 P.2d 842; 1 Witkin, California Procedure (1954), pp. 173-176. Where, however, the statement is legally insufficient, the judge may ignore it or strike it from the files. Neblett v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 393, 401, 139 P.2d 934; Fishbaugh v. Fishbaugh, 15 Cal.2d 445, 457, 101 P.2d 1084; People ex rel. Department of Public Works v. McCullough, 100 Cal.App.2d 101, 108 et seq., 223 P.2d 37.

[3-5] In deciding questions of fact a judge may often reject the testimony of a party, but this does not necessarily indicate that he believes that the party was guilty of deliberate falsification. The rejection of the testimony may have been the result of a consideration of the ability of the party to observe or remember, and in such a situation failure to accept a party's version of the facts does not show that the judge is biased or prejudiced against him. Nor is a judge disqualified from proceeding to try and decide a case or pass on a motion for new trial because he states during the course of the trial that in his opinion a party has deliberately given false testimony, provided the opinion of the judge is based upon a consideration of the evidence produced. Cf. Fishbaugh v. Fishbaugh, 15 Cal.2d 445, 456-457, 101 P.2d 1084; Chastain v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.App.2d 97, 101 et seq., 57 P.2d 982. It is the duty of a judge when acting as the trier of the facts to pass upon the credibility of witnesses, and if he believes that a party has testified falsely, and chooses to say so rather than remain silent, he is not disqualified from proceeding to render judgment.

[6] The rule is different, however, where a judge is about to retry a case after having stated during the course of the prior trial that he believes a party has wilfully sworn falsely. Such is the situation here, as there must be a complete new trial on the issue of damages. Foster v. Keating, 120 Cal.App.2d 435, 451-455, 261 P.2d 529. When a judge has stated that a party has given false testimony, even though his belief is founded on the evidence before him, he is disqualified from retrying the case. Briggs v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 336, 343 et seq., 10 P.2d 1003; Chastain v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.App.2d 97, 101 et seq., 57 P.2d 982; Evans v. Superior Court, 107 Cal.App. 372, 380-384, 290 P. 662; see 1 Witkin, California Procedure (1954), p. 168 et seq.

In Evans v. Superior Court, supra, the judge, at the close of the trial, stated that in his opinion two of the defendants had been guilty of deliberately falsifying while under oath. Later another case in which these two persons were parties was assigned to the same judge for trial, and prohibition was sought to prevent the judge from trying the case. It was held that the judge was biased and prejudiced against the defendants and that a fair and impartial trial could not be had before him. 107 Cal.App. 372, 380-384, 290 P. 662. The Evans case was expressly approved in Briggs v. Superior Court, supra, which involved a retrial. The court there stated, "As the trier of the facts [the judge] will be called upon to pass on the credibility of these petitioners as the principal witnesses in their own behalf. Is it humanly possible or probable that a judge who has stated under oath that it is his opinion that these petitioners have deliberately falsified under oath can pass upon their credibility with that impartial judicial mind which should exist in the trier of the facts? We think it not probable." 215 Cal. at page 345, 10 P.2d at page 1007. The Chastain case also involved a retrial, and the court held that it is "the right of a litigant to have his cause tried by one who has no preconceived opinion against his veracity which may preclude a full and a fair consideration of the facts and the law which are involved therein. * * *

When there is uncontradicted evidence that the trial judge entertains a fixed opinion that a party to an action has deliberately perjured himself upon a material issue or that he is unworthy of belief, and frankly admits he possesses that frame of mind, the law entitles the litigant to the privilege of a trial before some other judge. Under such circumstances the question regarding the existence of bias or disqualifications becomes one of law." 14 Cal.App.2d 103, 104, 57 P.2d 985.

The cases of Kreling v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 305, 310 et seq., 153 P.2d 734; Fishbaugh v. Fishbaugh, 15 Cal.2d 445, 456-457, 101 P.2d 1084, and McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 6, 10-11, 155 P. 86, are in accord with the rules set forth above. In the McEwen case the judge was held not disqualified to pass on a motion for a new trial by reason of his statement "I do not see how the jury could possibly have reached this verdict." 172 Cal. at page 10, 155 P. at page 87. The judge did not charge a party with perjury or even express a view with respect to the credibility of witnesses, and his statement may have been based on his opinion of the law or the weight of the evidence. In the Fishbaugh case the judge was held not disqualified to continue with the trial or to pass on a motion for new trial by reason of his statements, made at the conclusion of the taking of the evidence, that defendant "'took the law into his own hands'" and "'misrepresented his financial condition'" to the other party. 15 Cal.2d at page 456, 101 P.2d at page 1090. The claim of disqualification was not made in connection with a retrial of the action. The Kreling case involved four connected actions set for trial before the same judge, in each of which the identical affirmative defense was interposed, and it was stipulated by the parties that the decision on the affirmative defense in the first case "should be accepted and govern the decision of that same issue in all the other cases." 25 Cal.2d at page 313, 153 P.2d at page 738. After the judge had indicated what his decision would be on the affirmative defense in the first case an effort was made to disqualify him from continuing with the trial of the other cases, and it was held that there was no basis for the disqualification. The qualification of the judge to retry the case was not involved since there had in effect been a consolidation of the cases and a partial trial of each of them. Moreover, the judge did not charge that a party had given perjured testimony.

[7] It thus appears that the cases which have dealt directly with the problem have held that where a judge has stated that he is of the belief that a party has wilfully given false testimony, he is disqualified from hearing a retrial of the case, and we are of the opinion that the same rule is equally applicable whether the subsequent trial be of the whole case or a retrial of a single issue such as damages. The existence of grounds for the disqualification of Judge Finley is particularly apparent since he not only charged petitioner with having given false testimony but also stated, in rejecting the books of account, that he had no confidence in petitioner's integrity or veracity and that he would have no confidence in the books because they were kept by petitioner or under his direction. The refusal to admit the books was one of the main grounds of petitioner's appeal, and they will no doubt be important evidence in the retrial of the issue of damages. This attitude of the judge toward petitioner apparently still existed at the time he struck out the statement of disqualification, since he then said he did not feel any more prejudice against petitioner "than any judge would have against someone who doesn't tell the truth."

Under these circumstances it would appear probable that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had before Judge Finley.

[8] The remaining question to be determined is whether the application for disqualification was timely. Subdivision 5 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part: "The statement of a party objecting to the judge on the ground of his disqualification, shall be presented at the earliest practicable opportunity, after his appearance and discovery of the facts constituting the ground of the judge's disqualification, and in any event before the commencement of the hearing of any issue of fact in the action or proceeding before such judge." The reason for requiring a prompt claim of bias is that a party should not be allowed to play fast and loose with the administration of justice by deliberately refraining from raising an objection, on the chance that he might get a favorable decision and still be free to urge the objection as grounds for upsetting an unfavorable judgment. Woolley v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.App.2d 611, 619, 625, 66 P.2d 680; see Rohr v. Johnson, 65 Cal.App.2d 208, 212, 150 P.2d 5. Insofar as the retrial is concerned, it is clear that the statement of disqualification met the purposes of the statute and was timely because it was presented promptly after petitioner learned that the case was again to be set for trial before the same judge.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue restraining the Honorable Samuel F. Finley from hearing a retrial of the action.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I reluctantly concur in the judgment, but because of the rule set forth in Chastain

v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.App.2d 97, 57 P. 2d 982; Briggs v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 336, 10 P.2d 1003, and Evans v. Superior Court, 107 Cal.App. 372, 290 P. 662, I can see no escape from the conclusion reached by the majority.

I feel, however, that when a trial judge, sitting without a jury, decides a case in favor of one of the parties litigant as indeed he must, the only inference to be drawn therefrom is that he believed one side and disbelieved the other. This court, or an appellate court, later reverses the judgment and the cause is remanded for a new trial. In such a situation, I believe that the same trial court should not be permitted to sit in the matter since the implication is clear that once having determined in his own mind, if not publicly, that one or the other of the parties was telling the truth he might, in the absence of entirely new and different evidence, be biased and prejudiced against the opposing litigant. In my opinion it would be better in all such cases to have the retrial proceed before a judge to whom the cause was a new one. This, however, is not the law either by legislative enactment or case law.

It is true that here Judge Finley openly and frankly stated his views with respect to the integrity of one of the parties who had been a witness before him. For this I believe he is to be commended. If he had entertained the same opinion but had remained silent, he would have been subject to no criticism even under the majority opinion and could have retried the cause without subjecting himself to a charge of bias and prejudice. So the moral appears to be, that if a trial judge does not wish to be disqualified in the event of a new trial, he should keep his opinions to himself.

R. H. FLICKINGER, Plaintiff and

v.

SWEDLOW ENGINEERING CO., Inc., a corporation, and Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co., a corporation, Defendants and Appellants.

L. A. 23534.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1955.

Action by subcontractor against general contractor and surety on general contractor's bond for work performed under subcontract and payment allegedly due under bond. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. F. Moroney, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that action was barred under compulsory counterclaim statute, West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 439, by failure of subcontractor to assert claim on which action was based by way of counterclaim in prior action by general contractor to recover damages for breach of subcontract.

Judgment reversed.

1. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇐44(2)

Any claim which subcontractor, his copartner, or partnership, to which subcontractor had assigned the benefits of subcontract to perform part of highway construction contract, had against general contractor arising out of subcontract could and should have been presented by way of counterclaim in action by general contractor against subcontractor and copartner, individually and as copartners, to recover damages for breach of subcontract. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 439.

2. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇐1

The law abhors a multiplicity of actions, and the legislative intent in enacting counterclaim statutes was to provide for the settlement, in a single action, of all conflicting claims between the parties arising out of the same transaction. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 439.

3. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇐60

Under compulsory counterclaim statute, a party cannot by negligence or design withhold issues and litigate them in successive actions. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 439.

4. Action ⇐12, 53(1) Trial ⇐3

A party may not split his demands or defenses or submit his case in piecemeal fashion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 439.

5. Principal and Surety ⇐66(2)

Any right of subcontractor to recover upon general contractor's bond for work performed under subcontract and payment alleged to be due under terms of bond was necessarily dependent upon subcontractor's right to recover upon subcontract with general contractor. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1192.1; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4204, 14371 et seq.

6. Pleading ⇐149

In action by general contractor against subcontractor to recover damages for breach of subcontract, subcontractor, having a claim against general contractor for work performed under subcontract and payment allegedly due under terms of general contractor's bond, could file a cross-complaint on bond and thereby bring in surety as a party to action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 389, 1192.1; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4204, 14371 et seq.

7. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇐60

Where subcontractor in action by general contractor to recover damages for breach of subcontract filed a counterclaim based on alleged account stated without directly asserting claim for work performed under subcontract and payment allegedly due under general contractor's bond, subcontractor was barred by compulsory counterclaim statute from thereafter asserting such claim under contract in action against general contractor and surety on its bond. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 389, 438, 439, 1192.1; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4204, 14371 et seq.

8. Principal and Surety ⇨143

Defense available to general contractor, that action by subcontractor for work performed under subcontract and payment allegedly due under general contractor's bond was barred under compulsory counterclaim statute by failure of subcontractor to assert such claim in prior action by general contractor for breach of subcontract, was also available to surety on general contractor's bond. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 389, 438, 439, 1192.1; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4204, 14371 et seq.

9. Principal and Surety ⇨143

Sureties on a bond are entitled to avail themselves of all defenses that would be allowed the principal, and are generally in no worse position than principal would be if sued separately.

10. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇨60

Where action on claim which should have been asserted by way of counterclaim in prior action between the parties was ordered off calendar by agreement of the parties pending disposition of prior action and, when plaintiff in action based on such claim indicated intent to bring it to trial, defendants therein acted with reasonable promptness in amending answer so as to allege that action was barred by compulsory counterclaim statute, evidence failed to show any laches, waiver or estoppel which would preclude defendants from relying on bar of counterclaim statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 439.

SPENCE, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in this action arising out of a contract for the performance of work on a state-highway project. As grounds for reversal, defendants contend: (1) that plaintiff is precluded from maintaining this action because of failure to comply with the state licensing requirements, Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 7025-7031; (2) that a prior judgment which has now become final is res judicata on the claim here asserted; and (3) that plaintiff's present action is barred by section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Since defendants' third point is well taken and is determinative of this appeal, it will be unnecessary to consider the first two contentions above recited.

On January 29, 1948, plaintiff Flickinger, a licensed contractor, entered into a written contract with defendant Swedlow Engineering Co., Inc., to perform a portion of the latter's contract with the state for the construction of a public highway. Defendant Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co. is the surety on Swedlow's contractor's bond. Gov. Code, §§ 4204, 14371 et seq. By an oral agreement on March 15, 1948, Flickinger assigned the benefits of the contract to a partnership composed of himself and another licensed contractor, Ralph Welker. Thereafter the partnership entered upon the performance of Flickinger's obligations under the contract, except that portion of the work that Swedlow, the general contractor, thereafter agreed to complete. Periodic payments were made to the partnership of Flickinger & Welker as the work progressed. The partnership at no time during performance of the contract obtained a contractor's license. All of the work under the contract between Swedlow and the state was officially accepted by the state on October 27, 1948.

After the contract was completed a controversy arose between Swedlow and Flickinger concerning the work under their contract; and Swedlow sued (April 9, 1949) Flickinger and Welker, individually and as copartners, for a sum in excess of $60,000 as damages for breach of contract. Flickinger and Welker answered and, in addition, filed a counterclaim alleging that there was a sum of money owing to them and that an account had been stated for some $11,000 between the parties. In that action judgment was entered (February 3, 1953) that neither party take anything on their opposing claims. That judgment became final.

The present action was brought (May 12, 1949) by Flickinger, individually and as assignee of the partnership, against Swedlow, the general contractor, and the surety, Fireman's Fund, setting forth a claim for work performed under the contract and for payment alleged to be due under the terms of defendants' bond. (Formerly Code Civ. Proc. § 1184e; now Code Civ. Proc. § 1192.1.) The same amount asserted in the prior action as a counterclaim by defendants Flickinger and Welker, plus one additional charge for certain blasting material furnished for the construction project, constitutes the sum sought in this action. The parties agreed that the present action should be ordered off calendar pending disposition of the prior action, and it was reset for trial on January 8, 1954. By stipulation, the pleadings in the prior action were introduced in evidence in this action.

Flickinger sought recovery here in his own name, alleging that at all times he had been a licensed contractor; that he had assigned the "benefits" of his individual contract to the partnership (Flickinger & Welker); that the partnership and Welker had agreed to do the work under his control and direction; that he (Flickinger) duly performed all the conditions agreed to be performed; and that prior to the commencement of suit the partnership and Welker had assigned to him all their right and interest in the money here sought for the work performed. However, at the trial Flickinger testified that following the oral assignment of the Swedlow contract to the partnership, the partnership did the work; and the court generally found that "plaintiff and said partnership duly performed all" the agreed conditions and work for defendant Swedlow. The court further found that "during all of the time mentioned in plaintiff's * * * complaint, plaintiff was and now is a duly licensed contractor * * *; that Ralph Welker at all times since November 24, 1947, has been and now is a duly licensed contractor * * *; and that at all times since May 9, 1949, the said partnership of Flickinger & Welker has been and now is a duly licensed contractor * * *," which date was some six months after the work was completed and three days before the filing of the complaint in this action. The court concluded that Flickinger and Welker individually and as partners had "substantially complied with the licensing provisions of the Business and Professions Code," and that "the cause of action * * * [was] not barred by * * * section 7031 or any section of [that] code." It further determined that the prior decision was not res judicata, and that this action was not barred by the provisions of section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Accordingly, judgment was entered on plaintiff's alleged claim.

Defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied. However, at that time, in response to defendants' request for a "more detailed and comprehensive finding of fact with reference to [their] sixth affirmative defense" (the alleged bar of section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure), the court made these additional findings, Code Civ. Proc. § 662: That the same highway construction project was the subject matter of both actions, involving the same basic contract between Swedlow and the state and the same subcontract between Swedlow and Flickinger; and that "the work and labor for which plaintiff herein seeks to recover upon defendants' labor and material bond arose out of said agreement (subcontract) between * * * Flickinger and * * * Swedlow * * * upon which Swedlow * * * brought suit as plaintiff in [the prior] action." Upon the basis of this finding, defendants properly challenge the propriety of the trial court's conclusion that the statutory bar, Code Civ. Proc. § 439, does not apply; and accordingly, they seek reversal of the judgment.

Section 439 provides: "If the defendant omits to set up a counterclaim upon a cause arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor." A counterclaim "must tend to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery and must exist in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had * * *." Code Civ. Proc. § 438; Tomales Bay Oyster Corp. v. Superior Court, 35

[1] Any claim which Flickinger, Welker or the partnership may have had against Swedlow arising out of the contract between Flickinger and Swedlow could and should have been presented by them by way of counterclaim in the prior action. Such counterclaim came precisely within the terms of said section 439. It was "upon a cause arising out of the transaction" set forth in Swedlow's complaint in that action "as the foundation of plaintiff's (Swedlow's) claim"; it would have tended "to diminish or defeat" Swedlow's recovery; and it existed, if it could be sustained by any defendant in that action, "in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had." Therefore, the defendants in the prior action, including Flickinger, were required to assert any counterclaim which they may have had against Swedlow or be forever barred. Code Civ.Proc. § 439.

Apparently recognizing the necessity for filing a counterclaim in the prior action, defendants therein attempted to establish such counterclaim in the form of an account stated. They omitted, however, to urge directly any counterclaim which they may have had under the terms of Flickinger's contract with Swedlow. A final judgment on the merits was entered against them upon their counterclaim in the form in which it was stated, and they now take the position that they are not barred in this action either upon the theory of res judicata or upon the theory that said section 439 is applicable. They rely on cases indicating that an action upon an account stated is a different form of action from an action upon the original obligation. Jones v. Wilton, 10 Cal.2d 493, 498, 75 P.2d 593; Young v. LoPresti, 95 Cal.App. 79, 82, 272 P. 310; Hallford v. Baird, 27 Cal.App.2d 384, 389, 80 P.2d 1040. We are of the view, however, that such cases are not helpful to plaintiff here; and that to sustain plaintiff's claim would defeat the salutary purpose and policy of the compulsory counterclaim requirement.

[2-4] The law abhors a multiplicity of actions, and the obvious intent of the Legislature in enacting the counterclaim statutes, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 439, was to provide for the settlement, in a single action, of all conflicting claims between the parties arising out of the same transaction. (23 Cal.Jur. § 4, pp. 221-222.) Thus, a party cannot by negligence or design withhold issues and litigate them in successive actions; he may not split his demands or defenses; he may not submit his case in piecemeal fashion. Brunswig Drug Co. v. Springer, 55 Cal.App.2d 444, 449-450, 130 P.2d 758. If by an attempt at artful pleading, a party could assert his cause in one form in one action and, after an adverse decision on the merits, reassert it in another form in a subsequent action, there would be no end to litigation; and, of course, the mere fact that Flickinger may have seen fit to counterclaim in the prior action in the form of an account stated cannot place him in any better position than if he had omitted to file a counterclaim of any kind in that action.

[5-9] Plaintiff contends, however, that he is not barred from relitigating his rights under his contract with Swedlow as this is an action on Swedlow's bond; that the defendant surety company was not a party to the prior action and could not have been made a party except by way of cross-complaint; and that plaintiff was not required to file a cross-complaint in the prior action. The fallacy underlying this contention is that any right which plaintiff might have had to recover upon the bond was necessarily dependent upon plaintiff's right to recover upon his contract with Swedlow. While he had the option to file a cross-complaint on the bond and thereby bring in the surety as a party in the prior action, Code Civ.Proc. § 389, he was clearly compelled to assert by way of counterclaim, in said prior action, any right which he had against Swedlow under the contract which was the basis of Swedlow's prior action. Schrader v. Neville, 34 Cal.2d 112, 115, 207 P.2d 1057. Having omitted to assert directly in that action his alleged rights under the contract, but having elected to assert his alleged rights upon an alleged account stated with the resulting adverse final judgment on the merits, plaintiff is now barred from relitigating his alleged rights under the contract as the basis for an action against Swedlow as the principal on the bond. And as such defense to this action is available to Swedlow as the principal, it is likewise available to defendant Fireman's Fund, as the surety on the bond. "Sureties on a bond have a legal right to avail themselves of all defenses that would be allowed the principal and are generally in no worse position than he would be if sued separately." 8 Cal.Jur.2d § 82, p. 691; County of Sonoma v. Hall, 132 Cal. 589, 593-594, 62 P. 257, 312, 65 P. 12, 459.

[10] Nor does the record support plaintiff's claim that by reason of laches, waiver or estoppel, defendants may not rely on the statutory bar of section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In answer to plaintiff's original complaint in this action, defendants urged as an affirmative defense the pendency of the prior action. At that time and apparently until the entry of judgment in that action on February 3, 1953, defendants believed that the issue herein as to the liability of the parties on their conflicting claims arising out of their basic agreement was being litigated in the prior action. Then, when plaintiff indicated his intent to bring the present action to trial, defendants were granted leave to amend their answer by adding the further defenses of res judicata and the statutory bar of the compulsory counterclaim. Code Civ.Proc. § 439. Plaintiff offered no evidence showing any laches, waiver or estoppel chargeable against defendants in so amending their answer; and to the contrary, the record indicates that defendants acted with reasonable promptness in filing their amendment on December 30, 1953, after the parties had submitted arguments thereon, and prior to the trial herein.

The judgment is reversed.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Action by unemancipated minor daughters and by mother against father and unemancipated minor son for injuries sustained while daughters were guests in automobile owned by father and driven by son and for medical and other care furnished by mother. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Herbert C. Kaufman, J., entered judgment on order which sustained, without leave to amend, defendants' general demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that father and son were not immune from suit by daughters but that mother's pleading was defective as against father and son.

Judgment reversed.

1. Automobiles $\hookrightarrow$ 229½

Where automobile accident out of which personal injury action arose occurred in Idaho, Idaho law would be determinative of answer to question whether complaint alleged facts sufficient to constitute causes of action against the defendants.

2. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 11

"Wilful misconduct" implies at least the intentional doing of something either with knowledge that serious injury is a probable, as distinguished from possible, result, or intentional doing of an act with wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Wilful Misconduct".

3. Automobiles ⇨238(7)

Complaint, which alleged that host motorist was an unskilled driver, was sleepy, and had not slept for twenty-four hours, but drove at excessive speed on narrow road, and that such facts were known to automobile owner under whose direction motorist drove, and that motorist's falling asleep caused automobile to roll over, was, under Idaho guest statute, sufficient to allege "wilful misconduct" on part of host motorist and owner. I.C. § 49-1001; Vehicle Code, § 403.

4. Husband and Wife ⇨203½

Parent and Child ⇨11

Where, in action by unemancipated minor daughters and by mother against father and unemancipated minor son for injuries sustained and medical and other care furnished as result of automobile accident, all parties were apparently domiciliaries of California, the Supreme Court would look to California law to determine whether any disabilities or immunities existed.

5. Parent and Child ⇨11

Preservation of parent's right to discipline his minor children has been basic policy behind rule of parental immunity from tort liability.

6. Parent and Child ⇨2(1), 11

Law imposes on parent duty to rear and discipline his child and right to prescribe course of reasonable conduct for child's development, and parent has wide discretion in performance of his parental functions, but such discretion does not include right wilfully to inflict personal injuries beyond limits of reasonable parental discipline.

7. Parent and Child ⇨11

An unemancipated minor may sue his parent for a wilful or malicious tort.

8. Parent and Child ⇨11

Father was not immune from suit brought by his unemancipated minor daughters for alleged wilful misconduct concerning father's automobile in which daughters were injured while passengers, and which was being operated by minor unemancipated son at time of injury.

9. Infants ⇨59

Exception to general principle of liability of minors for their torts would not be lightly created and would not be created on basis of speculative assumption that, to do so, would preserve family harmony between plaintiff unemancipated sisters and defendant unemancipated brother. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 41, 3523.

10. Infants ⇨59

Mere possibility of fraud or collusion in tort actions between minor unemancipated brothers and sisters because of possible existence of liability insurance would not warrant immunity from liability between brothers and sisters where liability would otherwise exist, since child's interest in freedom from personal injury caused by tortious conduct of another would be sufficient to outweigh any danger of fraud or collusion.

11. Torts ⇨21

Courts will not immunize tort-feasors from liability in a whole class of cases because of possibility of fraud, but will depend upon the Legislature to deal with the problem as a question of public policy.

12. Automobiles ⇨181(1)

In enacting the guest statute, Legislature considered that immunity thereby granted was sufficient to protect automobile owner and operator from fraudulent claims, and, therefore, the Supreme Court would not extend such immunity further in a particular class of cases to claims for injuries proximately resulting from operator's wilful misconduct or intoxication. Vehicle Code, § 403.

13. Parent and Child ⇨8, 13(1)

Ordinarily, parent is not vicariously liable for torts of his minor child, and minor child's property is his own and not that of his parents. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 202.

14. Infants ⇨59

Possibility of unemancipated minor brother's succession, by intestacy, to damages recovered from him by his unemancipated minor brother or sister would be too remote and speculative to form basis upon which to found rule of immunity from tort liability between brothers and sisters.

15. Infants ⚭59

Unemancipated minor sisters, who were injured while guests in automobile owned by their father and driven by unemancipated minor brother, were entitled to maintain personal injury action against their minor brother.

16. Husband and Wife ⚭249

Negligence ⚭89(2)

Parent and Child ⚭7(9)

Cause of action for damages suffered by parents because of injury to their minor unemancipated daughters was community property, and husband's alleged wilful misconduct in permitting his automobile to be operated by his unemancipated minor son in certain alleged manner was imputable to mother, and, therefore, mother could not recover from father for medical and other care furnished by mother to unemancipated minor daughters who were injured while guests in the automobile.

17. Parent and Child ⚭7(11)

Mother's pleading, which attempted to state cause of action against her unemancipated minor son for medical and other care furnished by mother to unemancipated minor daughters who were injured while guests in automobile driven by son, was defective in view of fact that it failed to comply with requirements pertaining to bringing of such action by one parent where other parent has failed to join as plaintiff. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 376.

1. The relevant paragraphs of the complaint are as follows:VII

"That on or about the 18th day of June, 1952, at approximately 9:30 A. M., on said public highway 99, about twenty-eight miles west of Idaho Falls, in the State of Idaho, the Plaintiff was riding as a guest in a certain 1939 Pontiac Automobile, California license plate, being driven, operated and maintained by the Defendant, James Buel Emery as the agent, servant and employee of the Defendant Buel E. TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiffs Barbara and Joyce Emery, unemancipated minor daughters of plaintiff Esther Emery and defendant Buel Emery, brought this action to recover for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident that occurred in the State of Idaho. At the time of the accident, Barbara and Joyce were riding as guests in an automobile owned by Buel and driven by defendant James Emery, their unemancipated minor brother. Esther, appearing individually, alleges that she is responsible for the support, maintenance, and medical care of Barbara and Joyce and attempts to state a separate cause of action to recover for medical, nursing, hospital, and other care furnished Barbara and Joyce. Judgment for defendants was entered on an order sustaining, without leave to amend, defendants' general demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint. Plaintiffs appeal.

that at time and place hereinafter and hereinbefore mentioned; said minor defendant James Buel Emery had only been driving for a short period of time and was an unskilled and inexperienced driver and unaccustomed to driving during the times, in the places and under the circumstances hereinbefore and hereinafter mentioned; all of which facts were known to the Defendant Buel E. Emery.

IX

"That at said time, place, and direction, as aforesaid, the Defendants James B. Emery and Buel E. Emery were guilty of wilful misconduct; that said wilful misconduct consisted of the following acts under the following existing circumstances: That Defendant Buel E. Emery, the father of the minor Defendant James B. Emery, directed the said minor Defendant James B. Emery to drive that cer-

the latter are not immune from suit because of their family relationship to these plaintiffs. Since the accident occurred in the State of Idaho, the law of that state is determinative of the answer to this question. Grant v. McAuliffe, 41 Cal.2d 859, 862, 264 P.2d 944, 42 A.L.R.2d 1162; Loranger v. Nadeau, 215 Cal. 362, 366-367, 10 P.2d 63, 84 A.L.R. 1264. The applicable Idaho statute provides, "No person transported by the owner or operator of a motor vehicle as his guest without payment for such transportation shall have a cause for damages against such owner or operator for injuries, death or loss, in case of accident, unless such accident shall have been intentional on the part of the said owner or operator or caused by his intoxication or his reckless disregard of the rights of others." Idaho Code, § 49-1001.

The Idaho Supreme Court has interpreted the term "reckless disregard" in that statute as describing conduct that is not necessarily as culpable as that described by the words "wilful misconduct" as used in section 403 of the California Vehicle Code.² Mason v. Mootz, 73 Idaho 461, 253 P.2d 240, 243; Hughes v. Hudelson, 67 Idaho 10, 169 P.2d 712, 716. A fortiori, if the complaint states causes of action for "wilful misconduct" within the meaning of the California statute it also states causes of action for conduct in "reckless disregard of the rights of others" within the meaning of the Idaho statute.

[2,3] "Willful misconduct depends upon the facts of a particular case, and necessarily involves deliberate, intentional, or wanton conduct in doing or omitting to perform acts, with knowledge or appreciation of the fact, on the part of the culpable person, that danger is likely to result therefrom. [Citations.]" Norton v. Puter, 138 Cal.App. 253, 258, 32 P.2d 172, 174, quoted with approval in Parsons v. Fuller, 8 Cal.2d 463, 468, 66 P.2d 430. "Willful misconduct implies at least the intentional doing of something either with a knowledge that serious injury is a probable (as distinguished from a possible) result, or the intentional doing of an act with a wanton tain 1939 Pontiac automobile, California license plate, knowing that the said Defendant James B. Emery was sleepy and drowsy and had not had any sleep for a long period of time in excess of twenty-four hours; that the said Defendant James B. Emery did for many miles and for a long period of time prior to and during said accident, drive at high and excessive rates of speed, with the knowledge and consent of his father, the said Defendant Buel E. Emery; that the said defendant Buel E. Emery, the father of the minor defendant James Buel Emery, directed the said minor defendant James Buel Emery to drive that certain 1939 Pontiac automobile, California license plate, knowing that the said minor Defendant James Buel Emery was an unskilled driver and unaccustomed to driving during the times, in the places and under the circumstances hereinbefore and hereinafter mentioned; that said Defendant Buel E. Emery knew that the said road was in a dangerous condition in that said road had dirt and gravel on either side and was only a 2-lane highway; that while the minor Defendant James Buel Emery was so operating said aforementioned automobile, said minor Defendant James Buel Emery fell asleep at the wheel of said car while said car was travelling at said high and excessive rates of speed, and lost control thereof, causing said car to roll over; that all of the aforementioned wilful misconduct of the defendants took place with a complete disregard of and indifference to the great possibility of injuring the persons riding in the car that defendants were operating, including the plaintiff herein, and with full knowledge of the dangers involved; and that as a direct and proximate result of said wilful misconduct on the part of the defendants as aforementioned the said 1939 Pontiac automobile, California license plates, did at the aforementioned time and place and direction leave the highway and roll over as aforementioned, causing the plaintiff to sustain severe, serious and permanent injuries as hereinafter set forth."

2. "No person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle upon a highway without giving compensation for such ride, nor any other person, has any right of action for civil damages against the driver of such vehicle or against any other person legally liable for the conduct of such driver on account of personal injury to or the death of such guest during such ride, unless the plaintiff in any such action establishes that such injury or death proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of said driver."

and reckless disregard of its possible result.'” Meek v. Fowler, 3 Cal.2d 420, 426, 45 P.2d 194, 197, quoted with approval in Mercer-Fraser Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 40 Cal.2d 102, 118, 251 P.2d 955. In Parsons v. Fuller, supra, it was held that the evidence, which showed that the defendant had “persisted” in driving at an excessive rate of speed “for some hours and over many miles of travel, after repeated protests on the part of his guest, and while they were traveling over a mountain road with frequent curves * * *,” was sufficient to show wilful misconduct. 8 Cal.2d at page 465, 66 P.2d at page 431. In that case the court said, “To us it seems clear that one who, while driving an automobile, knowingly flirts with danger and, without necessity or emergency compelling him, “takes a chance” on killing or injuring himself and others, who may be so unfortunate as to be riding with him, is guilty of willful misconduct.” Ibid., 8 Cal.2d at pages 468-469, 66 P.2d at page 433. In the present case it is alleged in the complaint (see footnote 1, supra) that James was an unskilled driver, that immediately before the accident he was “sleepy and drowsy” and had not had any sleep for more than 24 hours, that for a long period of time and many miles of travel before the accident he drove at high and excessive rates of speed on a road that was narrow and unfamiliar to him, that the foregoing facts were known to Buel, that James drove under these circumstances with the consent and under the direction of Buel, that James fell asleep “while said car was travelling at said high and excessive rates of speed, and lost control thereof, causing said car to roll over. * * *” Applying the foregoing principles, we conclude that the complaint adequately alleges wilful misconduct on the part of James and Buel and thus that the minor plaintiffs have stated causes of action against defendants, assuming that the latter are not immune from suit because of their family relationship to the minor plaintiffs.

[4] To determine whether Buel and James are immune from liability to Barbara and Joyce for the torts alleged in the complaint, it is first necessary to decide whether that question should be determined by the law of California or that of Idaho. This choice of law problem is one of first impression in this state. The possible choices in cases like the present one are three: the law of the place where the injury occurred, the law of the forum, and the law of the state in which the family is domiciled. We are aware of only two reported cases on the precise question presented. In Ball v. Ball, 269 P.2d 302, 304, the Supreme Court of Wyoming applied the law of the place (Montana) where the injury occurred to determine this question. It is not, however, a question of tort but one of capacity to sue and be sued³ and as to that question the place of injury is both fortuitous and irrelevant. In Fowlkes v. Ray-O-Vac Co., 52 Ga.App. 338, 340, 183 S.E. 210, 212, the Court of Appeals of Georgia held that in actions between a minor child and its parent the “law of the forum governs as to the parties and the right to sue.” In a somewhat analogous situation, many courts have held in tort actions between husbands and wives that questions of capacity to sue and be sued should be governed by the law of the forum. (See Ford, Interspousal Liability for Automobile Accidents in the Conflict of Laws, 15 U.Pitts.L.Rev. 397, 419, and cases cited.) It should be noted, however, that in many of these cases, as in Fowlkes v. Ray-O-Vac, supra, the state of the forum was also the state of the domicile. Although tort actions between members of the same family will ordinarily be brought in the state of the family domicile, the courts or another state will in some cases be a more convenient forum, and thus the question arises whether the choice of law rule should be expressed in terms of the law

3. The parent's immunity, if any, from tort liability is based on the minor child's disability to sue rather than on the absence of a violated duty. See Worrell v. Wor-

of the forum or that of the domicile. We think that disabilities to sue and immunities from suit because of a family relationship are more properly determined by reference to the law of the state of the family domicile. That state has the primary responsibility for establishing and regulating the incidents of the family relationship and it is the only state in which the parties can, by participation in the legislative processes, effect a change in those incidents. Moreover, it is undesirable that the rights, duties, disabilities, and immunities conferred or imposed by the family relationship should constantly change as members of the family cross state boundaries during temporary absences from their home. Since all of the parties to the present case are apparently domiciliaries of California, we must look to the law of this state to determine whether any disabilities or immunities exist.

Defendants contend that Trudell v. Leatherby, 212 Cal. 678, 300 P. 7, and Myers v. Tranquillity Irrigation District, 26 Cal.App.2d 385, 79 P.2d 419, are controlling on the question of Buel's immunity to suit by his unemancipated minor daughters, Barbara and Joyce. In Trudell v. Leatherby it was stated that a "minor child has no right of action against a parent for the tort of the latter", 212 Cal. at page 680, 300 P. at page 8, but plaintiff points out that both Trudell v. Leatherby and Myers v. Tranquillity Irrigation District involved actions for injuries caused by the parent's negligence, whereas in the present case Barbara and Joyce state causes of action for wilful misconduct. To sustain their contention, plaintiffs cite a number of cases from other jurisdictions holding that, although a parent is not responsible to his minor child for negligence, he is responsible for wilful and malicious torts. Wright v. Wright, 85 Ga.App. 721, 70 S.E.2d 152, 155-156 [wilful misconduct]; Treschman v. Treschman, 28 Ind. App. 206, 210-212, 61 N.E. 961 [assault and battery]; Siembab v. Siembab, 202 Misc. 1053, 1056, 112 N.Y.S.2d 82 [wilful misconduct]; Meyer v. Ritterbush, 196 Misc. 551, 554, 92 N.Y.S.2d 595 [wilful misconduct],

[5-8] Although there are no California cases involving an action by a minor child against its parent for a wilful or malicious tort, the modern trend of decisions, see, Annotation 19 A.L.R.2d 423, 427 and cases cited; Prosser on Torts [2d ed.] 675-677; Davis v. Smith, D.C.E.D.Pa., 126 F.Supp. 497, 502-506 and cases cited; Dunlap v. Dunlap, 84 N.H. 352, 150 A. 905, 71 A.L.R. 1055; Borst v. Borst, 41 Wash.2d 642, 647-654, 251 P.2d 149 and cases cited; 29 N.Y. U.L.Rev. 1302; 39 Va.L.Rev. 389, is to mitigate the rule of absolute immunity established by the early cases of Hewlett v. George, 68 Miss. 703, 9 So. 885, 13 L.R.A. 682 [false imprisonment of minor child in an insane asylum], and Roller v. Roller, 37 Wash. 242, 79 P. 788, 68 L.R.A. 893 [rape of a minor child by her father]. The rationale of the cases refusing to extend immunity to the parent for wilful or malicious torts against his minor children is that the lack of such immunity does not conflict with or inhibit reasonable parental discipline. See Cowgill v. Boock, supra, 189 Or. 282, 293, 297-298, 218 P.2d 445; Borst v. Borst, supra, 41 Wash.2d 642, 656, 251 P.2d 149; McCurdy, "Torts Between Persons in Domestic Relations," 43 Harv.L. Rev. 1030, 1079; 64 Harv.L.Rev. 1208. Preservation of the parent's right to discipline his minor children has been the basic policy behind the rule of parental immunity from tort liability. (See McCurdy, supra, 43 Harv.L.Rev. 1030, 1076-1077.)

Since the law imposes on the parent a duty to rear and discipline his child and confers the right to prescribe a course of reasonable conduct for its development, the parent has a wide discretion in the performance of his parental functions, but that discretion does not include the right wilfully to inflict personal injuries beyond the limits of reasonable parental discipline. No sound public policy would be subserved by extending it beyond those limits. While it may seem repugnant to allow a minor to sue his parent, we think it more repugnant to leave a minor child without redress for the damage he has suffered by reason of his parent's wilful or malicious misconduct. A child, like every other individual, has a right to freedom from such injury. Accordingly, we conclude that an unemancipated minor may sue his parent for a wilful or malicious tort, and thus that Buel is not immune from suit for the causes of action pleaded by Barbara and Joyce in the complaint in the present action.

live to inherit the money recovered from him by the minor plaintiff. These arguments are not persuasive. Exceptions to the general principle of liability, Civ.Code, § 3523 ["For every wrong there is a remedy."] of minors for their torts, Civ.Code, § 41; Ellis v. D'Angelo, 116 Cal.App.2d 310, 313-315, 253 P.2d 675, are not to be lightly created, and we decline to create such an exception on the basis of the speculative assumption that to do so would preserve family harmony. An uncompensated tort is no more apt to promote or preserve peace in the family than is an action between minor brother and sister to recover damages for that tort. Furthermore, the relationship between brother and sister is not complicated by reciprocal rights and obligations of the kind that characterize the relationships of husband and wife and parent and child and that lend some support to the immunities from tort liability that have been recognized in such cases.

[10-12] Defendants' second argument, that tort actions between minor brothers and sisters will encourage fraud and collusion, is based on assumptions opposite from those on which their first argument is based. This argument assumes that the action is not in reality directed against the minor brother or sister of the plaintiff, but is in fact directed at his liability insurer. If this assumption is correct, maintenance of such a tort action would not disturb the family peace and harmony; on the contrary, the "domestic harmony will not be disrupted so much by allowing the action as by denying it." (Prosser on Torts [2d ed.] 677.) Moreover, although defendants' statement that the existence of insurance, of which there is no evidence in the present case, "gives no cause of action where one did not exist before" is correct, by the same token the mere possibility of fraud or collusion because of the possible existence of liability insurance does not warrant immunity from liability where it would otherwise exist. The interest of the child in freedom from personal injury caused by the tortious conduct of others is sufficient to outweigh any danger of fraud or collusion. As the Supreme Court of Washington said in reply to the same argument in a case involving an analogous situation [action by a child to recover for injuries caused by its parent's negligent operation of a truck for business purposes], "The courts may and should take cognizance of fraud and collusion when found to exist in a particular case. However, the fact that there may be greater opportunity for fraud or collusion in one class of cases than another does not warrant courts of law in closing the door to all cases of that class. Courts must depend upon the efficacy of the judicial processes to ferret out the meritorious from the fraudulent in particular cases. Rozell v. Rozell, supra. If those processes prove inadequate, the problem becomes one for the legislature. See Signs v. Signs, supra [156 Ohio St. 566, 103 N.E.2d 743]. Courts will not immunize tortfeasors from liability in a whole class of cases because of the possibility of fraud, but will depend upon the legislature to deal with the problem as a question of public policy." Borst v. Borst, supra, 41 Wash.2d 642, 653-654, 251 P.2d 149, 155. In California, the Legislature has dealt with the problem. Our guest statute, Veh.Code § 403, which was enacted to protect owners and operators of vehicles from fraudulent claims of those riding as guests, Weber v. Pinyan, 9 Cal.2d 226, 229, 70 P.2d 183, 112 A.L.R. 407, grants the owner and operator of a vehicle absolute immunity from liability for injuries proximately resulting from negligence in the operation of the vehicle. Since the Legislature obviously considered that the immunity thus granted was sufficient to protect the owner and operator from fraudulent claims, we think it improper for this court to extend that immunity further in a particular class of cases to claims for injuries proximately resulting from the operator's wilful misconduct or intoxication.

[13-15] Although defendants contend that to allow tort actions between minor brothers and sisters will impair their parents' exercise of their disciplinary functions, they fail to make clear how that impairment will take place and we see no substance in the contention. Similarly, the contention that to allow a sister to recover a judgment against her brother will result in an uneven distribution of the family resources is without merit. A parent is not ordinarily vicariously liable for the torts of his minor child, Weber v. Pinyan, 9 Cal.2d 226, 235, 70 P.2d 183; Martin v. Barrett, 120 Cal.App.2d 625, 628, 261 P.2d 551; Ellis v. D'Angelo, supra, 116 Cal.App.2d 310, 317, 253 P.2d 675, and a minor child's property is his own and not that of his parents. In re Estate of Tetsubumi Yano, 188 Cal. 645, 649, 206 P. 995; Civ.Code, § 202. Finally, we think that the possibility of a minor defendant's succession by intestacy to the damages recovered from him by a minor brother or sister is too remote and speculative a basis on which to found the rule of immunity for which defendant contends. (See McCurdy, supra, 43 Harv.L. Rev. 1030, 1073.) Accordingly, we conclude that Barbara and Joyce may maintain the present action against their minor brother, James.

[16,17] In the third cause of action pleaded in the complaint Esther, the mother of the minor plaintiffs, attempts to recover for the expenses incurred in caring for and treating the injuries received by the minor plaintiffs. Insofar as that cause of action is pleaded against her husband, Buel, the pleading is defective since a cause of action for damages suffered by the parents because of injury to their minor child is community property, Flores v. Brown, 39 Cal.2d 622, 630, 248 P.2d 922 and Buel's alleged wilful misconduct is imputable to Esther. (Ibid.) Insofar as Esther attempts to state a cause of action against her minor son, James, the pleading is defective since it fails to comply with the requirements of section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁴

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

4. "The parents of a legitimate unmarried minor child, acting jointly, may maintain an action for injury to such child caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. If either parent shall fail on demand to join as plaintiff in such action or is dead or cannot be found, then the other parent may maintain such action and the parent, if living, who does not join as plaintiff must be joined as a defendant

v.

LOS ANGELES TRANSIT LINES, Langendorf United Bakeries, Inc., Ben B. Harmell and E. E. Feb, Defendants and Appellants.
L.A. 23806.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Oct. 28, 1955.

Action against owner and drivers of truck and bus for injuries sustained by a bus passenger whose elbow, which was protruding from bus window, struck open rear door of parked bakery truck. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Wallace L. Ware, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that passenger's resting of his arm on the windowsill did not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Affirmed.

Opinion 283 P.2d 265, vacated.

1. Carriers ⇨280(1)

Duty of care owed to passenger by common carrier includes use of utmost care and diligence for his safe carriage.

2. Carriers ⇨320(20, 30)

In action against carrier for injuries sustained by passenger whose elbow, which was protruding from bus window, struck open door of parked bakery truck, evidence was sufficient to take to jury questions as to whether bus driver had been negligent in driving too close to truck and as to whether bus driver should have anticipated that truck door might be open or whether opening of truck door just before passenger's elbow was struck was such an independent intervening cause as would break chain of causation.

3. Carriers ⇨316(1)

Res ipsa loquitur doctrine was applicable as between passenger and owner and driver of bus in which passenger was riding when he was injured as result of his elbow (which was at time protruding from bus window) striking open rear door of bakery truck.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨856(1)

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could be relied upon to support judgment for passenger in his action against carrier even though passenger had offered no jury instruction on subject and none had been given.

5. Carriers ⇨347(6)

In action against carrier for injuries sustained by passenger whose elbow, which was protruding from bus window, struck open rear door of parked bakery truck, question of contributory negligence and assumption of risk were, under evidence, for jury.

6. Carriers ⇨347(6)

Passenger's resting of his arm on windowsill of bus does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of the law.

7. Negligence ⇨105

A person, if fully informed, may assume risk even though dangerous condition is caused by negligence of others; but he does not assume risk of negligence which he has no reason to anticipate.

8. Negligence ⇨105

Assumption of risk requires knowledge of danger, and mere fact that plaintiff would, in exercise of ordinary care, have known and appreciated danger is not sufficient.

9. Trial ⇨261

Trial court was under no duty to correct tendered instructions.

10. Trial ⇨236(1)

Instruction that credibility of party could be tested by contradictory statements in pretrial deposition read in evidence adequately covered subject, and it was not error to omit therefrom direction that if any statement in such deposition constituted an admission against interest it could be considered in determining truth or falsity thereof as well as in judging credibility.

11. Automobiles ⇨173(1)

Statute, prohibiting leaving a door open on side of vehicle available to moving traffic for period of time longer than necessary to load or unload passengers, applies to trucks as well as to passenger vehicles. Vehicle Code, §§ 32, 596.6.

12. Automobiles ⇨245(17)

In action against truck owner and driver for injuries sustained by bus passenger whose elbow, which was protruding from bus window, struck open rear door of parked bakery truck, evidence raised question for jury with regard to negligence of defendants.

F. Murray Keslar, Los Angeles, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendants, Los Angeles Transit Lines, hereafter called Transit Lines, a common carrier of passengers by bus in Los Angeles, Feb, the driver of one of its busses, Langendorf United Bakeries, hereafter called Langendorf, a corporation operating trucks delivering its products, and Harmell, the driver of one of its trucks, appeal from a judgment entered on a jury verdict for damages for plaintiff for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff as the result of defendants' negligence. Plaintiff's right arm was injured when he was resting it on the window ledge of Transit Lines' bus in which he was riding as a passenger when it collided with the rear door of Langendorf's truck.

Plaintiff was riding as a regular passenger on a Transit Lines' bus driven by Feb. He was seated on the right rear side of the bus beside a window. The day was warm and that window and others were open. The window ledge was shoulder high to plaintiff, and he was resting his right arm on it with his elbow protruding beyond the outside of the ledge. The bus was being driven on Beverly Boulevard, a street having three lanes on each side of its center including the one next to the curb. Langendorf's truck was parked on Beverly Boulevard in the curb lane about half way between two streets intersecting Beverly. The bus swung to the curb lane and made a stop. The driver proceeded ahead swinging the bus out toward the center lane (of the three lanes) and around the truck. He drove so close to the truck that plaintiff's elbow collided with the door on the end of the truck which was open and in that position extended beyond the side of the truck. As a result thereof plaintiff suffered the injuries for which he was awarded damages against all four defendants.

Defendants Transit Lines and Feb contend that as a matter of law they were not negligent; that plaintiff was contributively negligent and had assumed the risk; and that there was error with respect to the jury instructions.

[1-4] It is conceded by those defendants that: "[T]he duty of care owed to a passenger by a common carrier includes the use of the utmost care and diligence for his safe carriage." McBride v. Atchison, Topeka & S. F. Ry. Co., 44 Cal.2d 113, 279 P.2d 966, 968. In the light of that rule the jury could properly conclude, as it did, that the bus was driven too close to the parked truck for safety. The bus was 105 inches wide; the middle lane in which it was proceeding was 108 inches wide. While no part of the bus contacted any part of the truck, the proximity of the bus to the truck was evident. Plaintiff's elbow was struck and it protruded only 2 to 4 inches beyond the window sill. The rear door of the truck when open extended 4 inches beyond the fender, the widest part of the truck. Plaintiff testified that the door on the truck was opened just before his elbow was struck, and it was for the jury to decide that the bus driver should have anticipated that might happen; that it was not an independent intervening cause such as would break the chain of causation. See Richardson v. Ham, 44 Cal.2d 772, 285 P.2d 269; Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 44 Cal.2d 225, 282 P.2d 69. There were no guards or bars on the bus window. It is common practice for a person to rest his arm on the window sill of the vehicle which he is driving or in which he is riding and allow his elbow to protrude to some extent beyond the window sill. While it would appear that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is clearly applicable as between plaintiff and Feb and Transit Lines, plaintiff did not invoke the doctrine either in the trial court or on this appeal. It may be relied upon, however, to support a judgment even though plaintiff offers no jury instruction on the subject and none is given. Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7; Rose v. Melody Lane, 39 Cal.2d 481, 247 P.2d 335.

[5] It is clear that the jury was not required to find plaintiff was contributively negligent or that he had assumed the risk. In addition to the evidence above mentioned plaintiff testified that he had no awareness of impending danger before the accident happened and that he did not think his arm could be hit; he was not watching the traffic.

[6] Resting the arm on the window sill such as was done here does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law; it is a question for the jury. See Albania v. Kovacevich, 44 Cal.App.2d 925, 113 P.2d 251; Ivancich v. Davies, 186 Cal. 520, 199 P. 784; Gornstein v. Priver, 64 Cal.App. 249, 221 P. 396; Lindenberg v. Needles, 203 Md. 8, 97 A.2d 901, 40 A.L.R.2d 233; Capitol Motor Lines v. Billingslea, 246 Ala. 501, 21 So.2d 240, 157 A.L.R. 1212; Georgetown & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 25 App.D.C. 259, 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 274; Malakia v. Rhode Island Co., 36 R.I. 149, 89 A. 337, Ann.Cas. 1916C, p. 1218. While there are a few authorities to the contrary, the great weight of authority is as stated. (See authorities cited supra.)

[7] As to assumption of the risk the jury was justified in concluding that plaintiff did not have actual knowledge and appreciation of the danger involved so as to consent to the risk and the facts do not show that he knew of and appreciated the hazard. See Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 265 P.2d 904. He was not required to anticipate that Transit Lines and Langendorf would be negligent. Plaintiff could not have assumed the risk at all unless he actually saw that the door of the Langendorf truck was open some time before it struck his elbow and also knew that the bus was being driven too close to it. While a person, if fully informed, may assume the risk even though the dangerous condition is caused by the negligence of others. Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal.2d 158, 162, 265 P.2d 904. "The plaintiff does not assume the risk of any negligence which he has no reason to anticipate, but once he is fully informed of it, it is well settled that the risks arising from such negligence may be assumed." (Prosser on Torts, p. 385.)

[8, 9] Transit Lines and Feb claim error in the refusal to give their offered instruction on assumption of risk. Suffice it to say the offered instruction was erroneous in that it advised the jury that plaintiff would assume the risk if in the exercise of ordinary care he would have known and appreciated the danger rather than that he must have knowledge of the danger. See Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., supra, 44 Cal.2d 225, 282 P.2d 69; Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal. 2d 158, 265 P.2d 904. Under the last cited authorities the trial court was under no duty to correct the instructions.

[10] Transit Lines and Feb also claim error in the omission from an instruction of the following statement: "If, prior to the trial, the deposition of a party to the action was taken, and if part or all of it was read into evidence, and if you should believe that in said deposition he made contradictory statement or statements in conflict with his testimony here in court, you may consider such conflicts, and any explanations given therefor, in testing his credibility, in like manner as if all such testimony were given originally at the trial. The deposition, too, was given under oath. Also, if any statement in a party's deposition constituted an admission against interest, it may be considered in determining the truth or falsity thereof as well as in judging his credibility." The parts italicized were omitted and it is asserted that the portion with respect to admissions should have been left in. The instruction as given adequately covers the subject.

Defendants Langendorf and Harmell contend prejudicial error was committed in the giving of the following instruction at plaintiff's request: "You are instructed that Section 596.6 of the Vehicle Code of the State of California provides as follows:

"Sections 596.6—Opening and Closing Vehicle Doors.

"No person shall open the door of a motor vehicle on the side available to moving traffic unless and until it is reasonably safe to do so, nor shall any person leave a door open upon the side of a vehicle available to moving traffic for a period of time longer than necessary to load or unload passengers." (the word "passengers" was omitted although it appears in the code section mentioned); that conduct in violation of section 596.6 is negligence per se and requires a presumption of negligence but it is rebuttable and "may be overcome by other evidence showing that under all the circumstances surrounding the event, the conduct in question was excusable, justifiable and such as might reasonably have been expected from a person of ordinary prudence. In this connection, you may assume that a person of ordinary prudence will reasonably endeavor to obey the law and will do so unless causes, not of his own intended making, induce him, without moral fault, to do otherwise." Defendants assert the section has no application to the rear doors of panel trucks; and that inasmuch as Harmell, the operator of the truck, testified that he had both doors open to unload merchandise and while the left door extended beyond the body of his truck it did not protrude beyond the white line of the curb lane in which he was parked, the jury would no doubt have found him free from negligence if properly instructed.

[11,12] Section 596.6 refers to the opening of a door of a "motor vehicle" and that term as defined in the Vehicle Code includes trucks. Veh.Code, § 32. The reference to loading and unloading passengers does not limit its application to passenger vehicles. There is no provision bearing upon a door left open to unload merchandise and in that respect the instruction was more favorable to defendants than required by the section. The instruction and section do nothing more than prescribe the conduct of a man of ordinary prudence with respect to opening doors on the traffic side of vehicles. West v. House, 99 Cal.App.2d 643, 222 P.2d 269. We hold, therefore, that the instruction was proper; the question of defendants' negligence was for the jury. West v. House, supra, 99 Cal.App.2d 643, 222 P.2d 269.

The judgment is affirmed.

L.A. 23751.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Widow of deceased employee brought proceedings to review order of the Industrial Accident Commission of State of California denying death benefits. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that where employee contracted silicosis in course of his employment, and date of injury was fixed as July 24, 1949, and disability payments and medical expenses were awarded for 240 weeks, and employee died on June 4, 1954, which was about 253 weeks after date of injury, and five weeks later his widow filed application for death benefits, her claim was barred by provision of the Labor Code that proceedings for collection of death benefits may be commenced one year from date of death where death occurs within one year from date of injury, or date of last furnishing of any benefits where death occurs more than one year from date of injury, and that no such proceedings may be commenced more than one year after date of death, nor more than 240 weeks from date of injury.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is a proceeding to review the order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying death benefits to petitioner, who is the surviving wife of Joaquin Ruiz. Labor Code, § 4701. The denial was based on the ground that the claim was not filed within 240 weeks from the date of injury, Labor Code, § 5406, even though that period had elapsed before the time of death. The plain language of the statute sustains the Commission's order and petitioner cannot prevail.

Petitioner's husband was found to have contracted silicosis in the course of his employment; the date of injury was fixed as July 24, 1949, and disability payments and medical expenses were awarded. Thereafter, it was found that the injury resulted in permanent disability of 100 per cent, and that it became permanent and stationary on June 24, 1952. Accordingly, the Commission made an award of permanent disability payments for a period of 240 weeks, and a life pension thereafter. The deceased died on June 4, 1954, which was about 253 weeks after the date of injury. On July 9, 1954, 5 weeks later, petitioner filed her application for death benefits. At the hearing the defense of the statute of limitations was raised. The Commission found that petitioner's "application was filed more than 240 weeks from the date of injury and the claim is therefore barred." Labor Code, § 5406.

Labor Code, section 5406, (Stats.1947, ch. 1034, § 4, p. 2307) provides that proceedings for the collection of death benefits may be commenced "one year from:

"(a) The date of death where death occurs within one year from date of injury; or

"(b) The date of last furnishing of any [compensation] benefits * * * where death occurs more than one year from the date of injury.

"No such proceedings may be commenced more than one year after the date of death, nor more than 240 weeks from the date of injury."

The question presented is the proper application of this section in the light of the time limitations provided in the last paragraph. Petitioner contends that the claim for death benefits may be filed either one year from the date of death or 240 weeks from the date of injury; that she complied with the first alternative in filing her claim within one year after the date of death; that if she also were required to file the claim within 240 weeks from the date of injury, that period had elapsed before the death of her husband occurred (253 weeks after the date of injury), and the death benefit claim would therefore be barred before it ever arose. On the other hand, respondents contend that these limitations do not apply in the alternative, but rather both apply in determining whether or not the claim is timely filed. The clear mandate of the statute supports respondents' position.

The last paragraph of section 5406 unmistakably declares a time restriction that is based on two conditions conjunctively applicable as separated by the word "nor." This conjunction is defined as "introducing the second (and each following) member of an alternative proposition or of a negative proposition expressing reciprocation, and indicating the continuation of the force of a negative in the first member to apply equally to the second (and each following); or not; no more; and not; likewise not;—used: a. Following a negative such as no, not, never." (Webster's New Inter. Dict., Second Edition, Unabridged.) From this definition it plainly appears that the last paragraph of the section means: (1) No proceeding for a death benefit may be commenced more than one year after the date of death; and (2) likewise no such proceeding may be commenced more than 240 weeks from the date of injury.

The governing time restriction was added to the statute in 1947. Prior to that amendment, section 5406 read as enacted in 1937, when the following periods governed the commencement of proceedings for the collection of death benefits: "(a) One year from the date of death, and in any event within—(1) Two years from the date of injury, except as otherwise provided in this section; (2) 240 weeks from the date of injury, where the injury causing death also caused disability which continued to the date of death and for which a disability payment has been made, or agreed to be made, or proceedings for its collection had been instituted within the time limits set forth in section 5405." This section was construed in Bianco v. Industrial Accident Commission, 24 Cal.2d 584, 150 P.2d 806, decided July 25, 1944. There the employee's death occurred on June 11, 1941, from silicosis, which had first become disabling in April, 1939. The widow filed her application December 1, 1941, which was more than two years after the injury but within one year of her husband's death. It was held that the statutory periods were permissible alternatives—either one year from the death or two years from the injury, whichever was the later date—and the widow's claim was therefore not barred. In reaching this decision, the Bianco case expressly disapproved Glavich v. Industrial Accident Commission, 44 Cal.App.2d 517, 112 P.2d 774, decided April 28, 1941, wherein section 5406 in the same form had been applied to bar a widow's claim for death benefits filed within one year from her husband's death but more than two years after the date of his injury. 24 Cal.2d 591, 150 P.2d 806.

From a review of the legislative history of section 5406, it clearly appears that the purpose of the 1947 amendment was to change the existing law as enunciated in the Bianco decision. The majority opinion in the Bianco case recognized that its construction of section 5406 "is fraught with some dangers in respect to fraudulent and stale claims made by dependents long after the injury which ultimately causes death has occurred", but it declared that to be "a matter for the Legislature" to consider. 24 Cal.2d 591, 150 P.2d 810. In accord with this suggestion, the Legislature in 1947 amended section 5406, using language quite different from the prior wording and plainly indicating its intention to avoid permissible alternative time periods for the filing of claims for death benefits by providing: "No such proceedings may be commenced more than one year after the date of death, nor more than 240 weeks from the date of injury." (Emphasis added.) Significantly, no change was made in the statute in its 1937 form following its application in the Glavich case in 1941, and it was only after a contrary construction was placed upon it in the Bianco case in 1944 that the statute was amended. Had the Legislature been satisfied with the statute, as construed in the Bianco case, no change or amendment would have been necessary.

[1-3] Applying section 5406 as it now reads to the facts of this case, it is clear that petitioner's claim for death benefits, having been filed "more than 240 weeks from the date of (her husband's) injury", did not meet the statutory requirement and is therefore barred. It is true, as petitioner argues, that all provisions of the workmen's compensation law should be liberally construed to effect the law's beneficent purposes, Colonial Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 27 Cal.2d 437, 439, 164 P.2d 490, but that does not mean that the Legislature's intent as expressed in the statute can be ignored. Pacific Coast Joint Stock Land Bank of San Francisco v. Roberts, 16 Cal.2d 800, 805, 108 P.2d 439; Shorb v. Barkley, 108 Cal.App.2d 873, 877, 240 P.2d 337; Department of Motor Vehicles California Highway Patrol v. Industrial Accident Commission, 83 Cal.App.2d 671, 677, 189 P.2d 730; Goldberg v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co., 70 Cal.App.2d 472, 476, 161 P.2d 272. Petitioner simply takes the position that the filing of her claim within one year from the date of her husband's death should still satisfy the statute, and that presentation of the claim within 240 weeks from the date of his injury should not be necessary. But such conclusion would amount to a restoration of the law prevailing under the Bianco decision and would require a total disregard of the Legislature's subsequent radical change of the wording of the section. Such change cannot be deemed meaningless and without design. 23 Cal.Jur., § 154, p. 778; People v. Santa Fe Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 28 Cal.2d 675, 685, 171 P.2d 713.

[4, 5] Concededly, as petitioner maintains, if the death benefit claim must be filed within 240 weeks from the date of injury, and if that time has elapsed before the death of the employee, then the death benefit claim is barred before it ever arose. To this point, petitioner cites the general rule that ordinarily a statute of limitations begins to run from the time a cause of action accrues and there is a remedy available. Barlow v. City Council of City of Inglewood, 32 Cal.2d 688, 694, 197 P.2d 721; Irvine v. Bossen, 25 Cal.2d 652, 658, 155 P.2d 9. But this point was precisely the one that was advanced and prevailed in the Bianco case; and following that decision, the Legislature, presumably with knowledge thereof, 23 Cal.Jur. § 159, p. 782; Whitley v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 75, 78, 113 P.2d 449, amended the section as it presently reads. Accordingly, the time limitation appears to be not a normal statute of limitations, but rather to be more in the nature of a qualifying condition in the exercise of any right to death benefits. Diligence in the presentation of the claim, so as not to be guilty of sleeping on one's rights, apparently has no bearing if the specified time provisos are not satisfied. Petitioner claims that the application of the statute so as to cut off any right to death benefits before it accrues would be unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process of law. U.C.Const., Fourteenth Amendment; Cal.Const., art. 1, § 13. However, her right to recover death benefits is wholly statutory, and her constitutional objection has no bearing on the issue.

[6] It thus appears that the Legislature in plain language has declared the governing time limitations, as it has the right to do. There is no ambiguity in the present wording of the section, and it neither requires nor admits of interpretation. Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal. 2d 344, 353-354, 139 P.2d 908. Accordingly, in this case where the bar of the prescribed limitations period was raised, the Commission properly denied relief under the provisions of section 5406 of the Labor Code.

The order of the Industrial Accident Commission is affirmed.

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of The State of California, IN AND FOR the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent, F. Britton McConnell, Real Party in Interest.

L. A. 23641.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Hearing Denied Nov. 23, 1955.

Mandamus proceeding to compel Superior Court to hear action for declaratory relief and injunction which had been brought to prevent Insurance Commissioner from taking over assets of insurance company, but in which Superior Court had refused to issue temporary restraining order to enjoin commissioner from filing statutory application for conservatorship on ground of want of jurisdiction to act until seizure by commissioner. Petitioners filed application for leave to present additional evidence. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that fact that Insurance Commissioner threatened, by application for conservatorship under statute requiring court to grant application upon showing that any of enumerated conditions existed, to take over insurance company for reasons not specified as grounds by statute, did not warrant judicial interference with exercise of commissioner's official duty, and court was without jurisdiction to enjoin commissioner from making such application, and that evidence of insurance company's solvency had no bearing upon issue at hand.

Application for leave to produce additional evidence denied, demurrers to petition for writ of mandate sustained, and order to show cause vacated.

Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 277 P.2d 432, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⚡4

Mandamus ⚡4(1)

Appeal is usual course open to litigant who believes trial court has committed error, but where court disposes of matter before it upon ground that it has no jurisdiction, and thereby precludes decision on merits, mandamus has been issued to compel court to decide issues upon merits.

2. Judgment ⚡570(9)

Dismissal of proceeding or denial of relief on sole ground of lack of jurisdiction is not decision on merits.

3. Insurance ⚡44

Only requirement for judicial action upon application of Insurance Commissioner for conservatorship is his determination that he believes a hazardous condition exists which jeopardizes future of company, and upon application stating those facts, court must issue order for conservatorship. West's Ann.Insurance Code, §§ 16, 1011.

4. Injunction ⚡85(2)

Provisions of Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure that injunction cannot be granted to prevent execution of public statute by officers of law for public benefit, do not bar judicial action where invalidity of statute under which officer is acting is shown or where officer exceeds his powers. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3423, subd. 4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 526, par. 2, subd. 4.

5. Insurance ⚡44

In taking over books and assets of insurance company, whether by application for conservatorship or by summary seizure, if insurance commissioner follows statutory procedure and certifies that certain conditions exist, his action cannot be successfully challenged on ground of excess of authority. West's Ann.Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3423, subd. 4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 526, par. 2, subd. 4.

6. Injunction ⚡118(3)

Court is not vested with jurisdiction to issue injunction by allegation that Insurance Commissioner has abused his discretion or acted in bad faith in taking over books and assets of insurance company by application for conservatorship or by summary seizure. West's Ann.Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3423, subd. 4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 526, par. 2, subd. 4.

7. Insurance ⚡44

Primary purpose for drastic remedy provided by sections of Insurance Code authorizing Insurance Commissioner to take over books and assets of insurance company by application for conservatorship or by summary seizure is to prevent dissipation of assets of company after commissioner has determined that hazardous condition exists. West's Ann.Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013.

8. Injunction ⚡28

Insurance Code clearly indicates a legislative intent to create system to protect public interest in insurance companies, subordinating possible irreparable injury to companies to public interest, and issuance of injunction stopping commissioner's application for conservatorship or summary seizure would defeat purpose of such statutes. West's Ann.Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013.

9. Injunction ⚡28

Fact that Insurance Commissioner threatened, by application for conservatorship under statute requiring court to grant application upon showing that any of enumerated conditions existed, to take over insurance company for reasons not specified as grounds by statute, did not warrant judicial interference with exercise of commissioner's official duty, and court was without jurisdiction to enjoin commissioner from making such application. West's Ann. Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013; West's Ann. Civ. Code, § 3423, subd. 4; West's Ann. Code Civ. Proc. § 526, par. 2, subd. 4.

10. Insurance ☞44

Evidence of insurer's solvency would be relevant in statutory hearing for dissolution of conservatorship. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 1012.

11. Mandamus ☞167

In mandamus proceeding to compel Superior Court to hear action for declaratory relief and injunction which had been brought to prevent Insurance Commissioner from taking over assets of insurance company, but in which Superior Court had refused to issue temporary restraining order to enjoin commissioner from filing statutory application for conservatorship on ground of want of jurisdiction to act until after seizure by commissioner, evidence of insurance company's solvency had no bearing upon issue at hand. EDMONDS, Justice.

G. Kenneth Vaughn is the owner of all of the outstanding capital stock of Financial Indemnity Company, a California corporation licensed to do business as an insurer in this state. The company and Vaughn commenced an action in the superior court seeking declaratory relief and an injunction to prevent the Insurance Commissioner from taking over the assets of the corporation. As ground for justifying judicial interference with the purpose of the Insurance Commissioner, it is alleged that the condition of the company does not come within the statutory conditions allowing him to take charge of its affairs.

On the day after that action was commenced, the commissioner presented in open court an application for conservatorship pursuant to the provisions of section 1011 of the Insurance Code.¹ Vaughn and the company requested the court to issue an order to show cause and a temporary restraining order to enjoin the commissioner from filing his application. The court refused to do so, upon the ground that "it does not have any jurisdiction in such matters until the commissioner files a petition under section 1011 or summarily seizes the company under section 1013² * * *. If the court issued an injunction herein it would * * * [usurp] the discretion exclusively vested in the commissioner to determine and find, in the first instance, whether or not conditions justifying seizure existed."

Vaughn and the company then filed in the District Court of Appeal the present proceeding in mandamus. That court ordered the superior court to show cause why a writ of mandate should not issue requiring the court to proceed to a hearing and determination of the action for declaratory relief and injunction. It also

Section 1011: "The superior court * * * shall, upon the filing by the commissioner of the verified application showing any of the following conditions hereinafter enumerated to exist, issue its order vesting title to all of the assets of such person, wheresoever situated, in the commissioner * * *."

2. Section 1013: "Whenever it appears to the commissioner that any of the conditions set forth in section 1011 exist or that irreparable loss and injury to the property and business of a person specified in section 1010 has occurred or may occur unless the commissioner so act immediately, the commissioner, without notice and before applying to the court for any order, forthwith shall take possession of the property, business, books, records and accounts of such person, and of the offices and premises * * * and retain possession subject to the order of the court. * * *" provided that "pending the hearing of such order to show cause, you are directed to take no action calculated to affect the pendency of said cause except to proceed with the trial thereof."

The Insurance Commissioner, as the real party in interest, noticed a motion to vacate the order to show cause or for modification of it by deleting the portion which prohibited him from filing an application for conservatorship pending the hearing. He also filed a return by way of demurrer, alleging that the petition for mandamus does not state a cause of action because the court has no jurisdiction over the respondent superior court, or the subject matter of the petition. By answer, the commissioner denies specifically and generally each and every allegation except those pertaining to the corporate status of the company, Vaughn's stock interest, the pendency of the action in the superior court and its refusal to act in the matter. As an affirmative defense, he attacks the petition upon the same grounds presented by the demurrer. The superior court demurred to the petition upon the grounds that it does not state facts sufficient to entitle the petitioners to the remedy sought.

Vaughn and the company contend that the commissioner is attempting to apply sections 1011 and 1013 of the Insurance Code in an unconstitutional manner, in that he threatens to take over the company for reasons not specified as grounds by statute. Such action, the argument continues, would deprive the petitioners of their property rights without due process of law. The position of the commissioner and the respondent court is that the writ should be denied because (1) the superior court has passed on the matter and its order is appealable; (2) the pendency of an action for declaratory relief and an injunction does not enlarge the jurisdiction of the court nor bar the commissioner from acting pursuant to section 1011 of the Insurance Code; (3) when an application is filed by the commissioner pursuant to statute, it is the mandatory duty of the respondent court to issue a vesting order; and (4) the courts have no jurisdiction to enjoin State officers from the execution of constitutional statutes for the public benefit.

[1,2] Section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the writ of mandate "must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, in the ordinary course of law". "An appeal is the usual course open to a litigant who believes that the trial court has committed error." Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 366, 217 P.2d 951, 953. However, where the court disposes of a matter before it upon the ground that it has no jurisdiction, and thereby precludes a decision on the merits, mandamus has been issued to compel the court to decide the issues upon the merits. See: Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 78 P. 467; Times Mirror Co. v. Superior Court, 3 Cal.2d 309, 44 P.2d 547; Levy v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.2d 692, 104 P.2d 770, 129 A.L.R. 956. A dismissal of a proceeding or a denial of relief on the sole ground of lack of jurisdiction is not a decision on the merits. See: Hogeberg v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 201 Cal. 169, 182-183, 256 P. 413; Helvey v. Castles, 73 Cal.App.2d 667, 672, 167 P.2d 492. And in Katenkamp v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 696, at page 698, 108 P.2d 1, at page 2, the court said, "If a court is mistaken in its assumption that it does not possess the requisite jurisdiction, mandamus will issue to compel it to assume jurisdiction."

The trial court's refusal to issue the requested order to show cause and temporary restraining order was based squarely upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction. The decisive question, therefore, in the present proceeding is whether upon any theory reasonably to be drawn from the facts stated in the complaint of Vaughn and the company, the commissioner may be enjoined from filing an application for conservatorship.

The purpose of Vaughn and the company is to have the issue of whether grounds for conservatorship exist determined before the commissioner is allowed to take over the company. They assert that if the conditions provided by statute as grounds for taking over the business of an insurer do not exist, an order allowing the commissioner to do so would amount to an application of the provisions of the Insurance Code against them in an unconstitutional manner. This argument assumes that any error in judgment by the commissioner would be a violation of constitutional rights. But as was said in Rhode Island Insurance Co. v. Downey, 95 Cal.App.2d 220, 230-231, 212 P.2d 965, 973, "It is not a requirement of the statute * * *, that such matters not be disputable. The Legislature undoubtedly assumed that in most cases the company involved would dispute the commissioner's contentions, and accordingly provided, in section 1012³ for a full hearing before the trial court, at which the company could show that the conditions claimed by the commissioner did not exist. There is no implied restriction in the statute that the commissioner act only where the existence of the dangerous condition is beyond dispute."

In the Rhode Island case the commissioner obtained an order appointing him conservator. The company sought a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate the order, contending, among other points, that the facts did not justify the commissioner's action. The court refused to issue the writ, saying, "The statute, as construed by the California courts, requires only that the commissioner file a verified application stating that he has found one, or more, of the statutory grounds to exist. 'In making his application under section 1011 of the Insurance Code, the commissioner does not seek a judicial appointment and a judicial ruling that the company is in fact delinquent. By his application the commissioner merely represents that he has found certain conditions to exist and has made his official administrative determination to proceed as authorized by the statute. In obtaining ex parte order, the commissioner is not required to show to the court that the company was in fact in a hazardous condition, but only that he, as a state officer, invested by legislative authority with the power, has so "determined" and "found". * * * Caminetti v. Imperial Mut. L. Ins. Co., 59 Cal.App.2d 476, 487, 139 P.2d 681, 687; emphasis added." 95 Cal.App.2d at pages 230, 231, 212 P.2d at page 973.

The court not only concluded that the issues must be heard in a proceeding brought pursuant to section 1012 but also held that an order made in accordance with its provisions is not a deprivation of due process. "Although the requirements of due process often involve a prior full hearing, it has long been recognized that where public necessity requires, there can be action followed by a hearing. * * *" 95 Cal.App.2d at page 235, 212 P.2d at page 976. Also see: Carpenter v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 324, 74 P.2d 761; State Savings & Commercial Bank v. Anderson, 165 Cal. 437, 132 P. 755, L.R.A.1915E, 675; North American Building & Loan Ass'n v. Richardson, 6 Cal.2d 90, 56 P.2d 1221. "It must be remembered that insurance companies, like banks and building and loan companies, are charged with a public interest, and hence, the price of doing business is the fact that whenever a condition exists which the insurance commissioner feels is hazardous, he may take over the company and the question of whether he was justified in doing so is thereafter threshed out." 95 Cal.App.2d at page 233, 212 P.2d at page 974.

[3] The Legislature has provided a procedure by which the public interest in insurance companies may be protected. The only requirement for judicial action upon the application of the commissioner is his determination that he believes a hazardous condition exists which jeopardizes the future of the company. Upon an application stating those facts, the code pro-

3. Section 1012: "Said order shall continue in force and effect until, on the application either of the commissioner or of such person, it shall, after a full hearing, appear to said court that the ground for said order directing the commissioner to take title and possession does not exist or has been removed and that said person can properly resume title and possession of its property and the conduct of its business."

vides that the court "shall" issue the order for conservatorship. The word "shall" as used in the Insurance Code, is mandatory. Section 16.

[4, 5] Section 3423(4) of the Civil Code and also section 526, par. 2(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure provide that an injunction cannot be granted "to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit." These sections do not bar judicial action where the invalidity of the statute under which he is acting is shown. Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 154 P. 845, or when the officer exceeds his powers. Cowell v. Martin, 43 Cal. 605. However, sections 1011 and 1013 of the Insurance Code have been upheld as valid, Rhode Island Ins. Co. v. Downey, 95 Cal.App.2d 220, 212 P.2d 965, and if the commissioner follows the statutory procedure and certifies that certain conditions exist, his action cannot be successfully challenged on the ground of excess of authority.

In Southern Oregon Co. v. Quine, 70 Or. 63, 139 P. 332, 333, the court said, "We think the law is fixed, beyond cavil, that courts of equity have no power by injunction to restrain a public officer from performing an official act that he is required by valid law to perform. It is not sufficient to clothe the court with jurisdiction to say simply that, unless the court extends its restraining hand, hardships will follow, or irreparable damage will ensue, because the officer delegated to execute such law may act unwisely or injuriously to the party seeking relief. The acts must be such as are without the sanction of a sound law." This statement has been quoted with approval by the courts of this state. See: Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 154 P. 845; Loftis v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.App.2d 346, 353, 77 P.2d 491.

[6, 7] A court is not vested with jurisdiction to issue an injunction by an allegation in the pleadings that the commissioner has abused his discretion or acted in bad faith. The primary purpose for the drastic remedy provided by sections 1011 and 1013 of the Insurance Code is to prevent dissipation of the assets of the company after the commissioner has determined that a hazardous condition exists. To allow a court to delay conservatorship while it determines the motives of the commissioner would as effectively defeat that purpose as to postpone the conservatorship while the existence or nonexistence of the hazardous condition is judicially established. Any dictum in the Rhode Island case to the contrary is disapproved.

In Modern Barber College v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 31 Cal.2d 720, 192 P.2d 916, this court refused to compel, by writ of mandate, the cancellation of charges made against the petitioner for amounts assertedly due under the Unemployment Insurance Act. It was held that judicial review of the collection may be had only after payment under protest. That act provides that no injunction or writ of mandate shall issue to prevent or enjoin the collection of contributions.

In upholding the statute, the court said, "If proceedings which halt the collection of the tax were allowed to be brought before the payments are made, the power would be placed in the hands of employers to so delay the creation of the fund as to frustrate the purposes of the act. It has been expressly declared by this court that these purposes are of great public importance, and that procedural obstacles which would delay or prevent their fulfillment are to be avoided." 31 Cal.2d at page 732, 192 P.2d at page 923.

[8] The Insurance Code clearly indicates a legislative intent to create a system to protect the public interest in insurance companies. The issuance of an injunction would defeat the purpose of such statutes. See Moore v. Superior Court, 6 Cal.2d 421, 424, 57 P.2d 1314. The Legislature has determined that possible irreparable injury to the company must be subordinated to the public interest. See: Rhode Island Ins. Co. v. Downey, 95 Cal.App.2d 220, 212 P.2d 965; North American B. & L. Ass'n v. Richardson, 6 Cal.2d 90, 56 P.2d 1221; State Savings & Commercial Bank v. Anderson, 165 Cal. 437, 132 P. 755, L.R.A. 1915E, 675.

The petitioners have filed an application for leave to present additional evidence.

They claim that an examination of the company's financial condition, recently completed by the Insurance Commissioner, shows that it is solvent. They do not state the purpose for which the evidence is offered, but apparently it is in support of their position that the contemplated application by the commissioner for an order authorizing him to conduct the business as conservator is not to be made upon statutory grounds.

[9-11] For the reasons which have been stated, the petition for mandate presents no tenable ground for judicial interference with the exercise of the commissioner's official duty. Although after an order has been made upon such an application, evidence of the insurer's solvency would be relevant in a hearing conducted pursuant to section 1012 of the Insurance Code, it has no bearing upon the issue in the present proceeding. Upon the record before him, the trial judge was correct in the conclusion that the court was without jurisdiction to enjoin the commissioner from making such application.

The application for leave to produce additional evidence is denied. The demurrers to the petition for a writ of mandate are sustained, and the order to show cause is vacated.

I dissent.

The majority opinion holds that the superior court has no jurisdiction in an action which seeks declaratory relief and an injunction against the insurance commissioner who, it is charged, is threatening to abuse and exceed his statutory power with respect to assuming control over plaintiff insurance company purportedly because it is in an unstable financial condition. It is pointed out that the commission may seize a company if certain conditions exist either with or without a proceeding in court. Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013.

In the action of which the majority says the superior court did not have jurisdiction, the plaintiff alleges in its complaint ample facts to give the court jurisdiction. The complaint must be accepted as true as the question involved is solely whether the action is one in which the court has jurisdiction. It is alleged that the insurance commissioner has been investigating plaintiff since its organization and has claimed that plaintiff Vaughn is not a proper person to hold the stock of the plaintiff and that it was insolvent; that plaintiff is solvent;* that during the commissioner's investigation, his subordinates "exhibited an extreme personal animosity to officers, directors, employees and counsel for plaintiff * * * and both the financial reports and the reports on the conditions of the company have been motivated by bias and prejudice, and a desire to accomplish the removal of G. Kenneth Vaughn and his family from the insurance business"; that as a result of the action of the commissioner and his subordinates and the threat to take the specified action irreparable injury has resulted and will result; that a new and unimpeachable board of directors for plaintiff has been elected and "There is not, and there is no claim by defendants that there is, any hazardous conditions in the management of plaintiff company under present management; no member of the Vaughn family has any control in the management or conduct of the business of said company.

"The financial condition of said plaintiff company is exceedingly strong and its net earnings and policy holders' surplus have, and are, increasing substantially, and the defendants do not and cannot make any claim that the company is not now in a sound financial condition and solvent within the meaning of the Insurance Code. There is no claim that the public, policyholders, or creditors are or will be exposed to any detriment. * * *

"Defendants herein have never afforded to plaintiffs an opportunity to present their case before an impartial tribunal, either administrative or judicial, and have never issued any ruling or order directing plaintiffs to comply with or correct any alleged noncompliance with any provision of the Insurance Code."

The authorities are clear that a person may have declaratory relief and injunctive relief against a public officer when such officer's acts will cause him to be deprived of constitutional rights, or when the officer is acting arbitrarily and outside the scope of the powers given to him by statute when such action will cause irreparable harm to the person. In Brock v. Superior Court, 11 Cal.2d 682, 81 P.2d 931, petitioner, the state Director of Agriculture, sought prohibition to restrain the trial in an action by plaintiffs against defendant director to have him restrained from enforcing the milk control act because he had failed to follow the law establishing the milk control area. This court denied prohibition and found that the trial court had jurisdiction of the action. We stated, 11 Cal.2d at page 684, 81 P.2d at page 932: "In support of their demand for an injunction against the director of agriculture, the plaintiffs allege that the director of agriculture failed to comply with the provisions of the Milk Control Act in the formation of said area and in the establishment of the amended Stabilization and Marketing Plan for the sale of milk and cream within said area.

"* * * The defendant in said action, the director of agriculture, was present both upon the application for a restraining order, and at the hearing of the order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not issue. His contention on these occasions, and his contention now, is that the Milk Control Act is presumed to be valid, and that the defendant as a public officer is presumed to have regularly performed his official duty in the organization of said area and in the establishing of said stabilization and marketing plan, and, therefore, no injunction may be issued to prevent the execution of said statute by him as such public officer without the establishment, after due hearing, of the invalidity of his acts, and that until such hearing and the final determination that his acts are illegal, the courts are without jurisdiction to issue an injunction restraining him from attempting to enforce the statute. * * *

"Petitioner relies upon section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 3423 of the Civil Code. The fourth subdivision of each of these sections provides that an injunction will not lie to prevent the execution of a public statute by an officer of the law for the public benefit. But petitioner concedes, as we understand his position, that if it be determined after a trial that the officer is acting illegally, then it is within the power of the court to restrain his acts. These code sections therefore do not answer our present inquiry.

"* * * The case before the trial court in that instance was precisely like that involved in a recent case decided by this court where we held that as there were issues of fact tendered by the complaint in an injunctive proceeding, the trial court had jurisdiction to try these issues of fact, and that prohibition would not lie to restrain the trial court from issuing an injunction against an officer in an attempt to enforce a public statute, until these issues of fact were determined. Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 550, 55 P.2d 495. In that case our decision upon this point is as follows (page 513): 'In the injunction suit before the respondent court the plaintiffs therein made the claim that the prorate district in which the applicants were purporting to act as officers was never legally formed or organized in that the petition for the formation of said district was never signed by the necessary two-thirds of the lemon producers residing in said proposed district or zone, and therefore the commission had no authority to make its order organizing said district without an election being held therein to pass upon the question of the formation of said district. This claim on the part of said plaintiffs was set forth in paragraph XX of their complaint in which it is alleged, among other things, that "said petition was not signed by two-thirds or more in number of the producers of lemons in California, nor by the owners of two-thirds or more of the producing factors of lemons in California." If that allegation is true, then the district was not legally formed or organized, and if it was not so organized, an injunction against the applicants restraining them from executing the terms of said act would lie. On the hearing of the application for a temporary injunction, an affidavit was filed which purported to deny the allegations of paragraph XX of the said complaint. There is nothing, however, in the record before us to indicate that the respondent court has ever passed upon the issue tendered by the allegations of said paragraph XX. In fact, it would be rather unusual for the court to finally pass upon an issue of fact on an application for a temporary injunction. This issue of fact, however, was presented by the plaintiffs in the injunction suit and the court had jurisdiction to decide it. So far it has never done so. The injunction suit is still in the respondent court, and that court has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all undecided issues of facts presented by the pleadings in such suit. Should it determine that said district was legally organized and that the orders which the plaintiffs in said action seek to restrain are valid and binding upon those to whom they are directed, then it would be the duty of said court to deny the injunction and dismiss the suit. On the other hand, should the trial court find in favor of the plaintiffs in said suit upon the allegations of said paragraph XX, then it would necessarily follow that said orders would have no legal support and the defendants in said suit should be enjoined from enforcing them. For this reason, the application for a writ of prohibition directed to respondents restraining them from proceeding in said action should be denied.'

"We see no reason to recede from the position taken in the decision of that case. It appears to us to be the only reasonable conclusion that can be reached in proceedings of that nature. To hold otherwise would be to tie the hands of the court in cases in which great and irreparable injury might be done private citizens by officers acting under a mistaken belief of their authority."

The same holding prevailed in Brock v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.2d 605, 86 P.2d 805; Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 550, 55 P.2d 495; and Agricultural Probate Comm. v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.App.2d 518, 88 P.2d 253. In the latter case, 31 Cal.App.2d at page 523, 88 P.2d at page 255, the court said: "The second point, that the order of the respondent court violated certain Code provisions, is not well taken, for if the officers were in fact acting illegally, it is, as held in the foregoing case, within the power of the court to restrain their acts. * * * 'To hold otherwise would be to tie the hands of the court in cases in which great and irreparable injury might be done private citizens by officers acting under a mistaken belief of their authority.'" (Brock v. Superior Court, supra, 11 Cal.2d 682,) 81 P.2d 931.

Similarly, in the instant case the superior court had jurisdiction to determine whether the commissioner's threatened action was illegal. There can be no doubt that the injury to plaintiff insurance company will be irreparable if it is taken over by the commissioner. Its credit and standing will be seriously impaired.

The majority opinion states that plaintiff has its relief by an attack on the seizure after it has been accomplished, Ins. Code, § 1012, and that that remedy is exclusive. There is nothing in the Insurance Code which makes it the exclusive remedy as there was in the case of Modern Barber Colleges v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 31 Cal.2d 720, 192 P.2d 916, relied upon by the majority. It must be remembered that plaintiff's action was for declaratory, as well as injunctive, relief and, furthermore, we held in California Physicians' Service v. Garrison, 28 Cal.2d 790, 801, 172 P.2d 4, 11, 167 A.L.R. 306, that "section 1062 of the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provides that the remedy through declaratory relief is cumulative and not restrictive of any other remedy provided by law." The court was there speaking of an action wherein plaintiff sought to have the court declare that the Insurance Code did not apply to its members' business.

I would, therefore, grant the writ of mandate prayed for herein.

BUCKLEY v. CHADWICK.

L. A. 23492.

Supreme Court of California.

Nov. 8, 1955.

On petition for rehearing. For prior opinion see 288 P.2d 12.

Rehearing denied.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

The majority of this court has modified its opinion and denied a rehearing in this case notwithstanding the fact that the petition for rehearing pointed out that never before has an appellate court in this state held that the denial of the right to exercise a peremptory challenge is a mere error in procedure which may be cured by the application of section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution of California and that numerous cases holding to the contrary were not even mentioned in the majority opinion. As counsel for appellant point out in their petition for rehearing there is a long and unbroken line of well considered opinions of this court and the District Courts of Appeal holding squarely that the right to challenge peremptorily is absolute, and not qualified by the necessity of showing injury. This rule was reannounced as late as July 27th, 1951 in the case of People v. Diaz, 105 Cal.App.2d 690, 696, 234 P.2d 300, 304, (hearing denied by this court without dissenting vote) where the District Court of Appeal said: "The denial of the right of peremptory challenge cannot be said to be a mere matter of procedure. The right is absolute. People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 535, 93 P. 99. It is a substantial right. It has been said that it is one of the chief safeguards of a defendant against an unlawful conviction and that the courts ought to permit its freest exercise within the limitation fixed by the legislature. People v. Edwards, 101 Cal. 543, 544, 36 P. 7. As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U.S. 68, 7 S.Ct. 350, 30 L.Ed. 578, 580, experience has shown that one of the most effective means to free the jury box from persons unfit to be there is the exercise of the peremptory chal- lenge. The right may not be abridged or denied. Arbitrary abridgment or denial of the right runs counter to principles vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of a constitutional right of trial by jury." (Emphasis added.)

Numerous other decisions, quoted in the decisions cited in People v. Diaz, supra, reiterate as a constitutional dogma that under our jury system, the right to peremptory challenge is absolute and an "inseparable and inalienable part of the right of trial by jury guaranteed by the Constitution." "

The majority of the court has recognized this principle in theory, but has just as effectively denied it in practice.

Upon the authority of People v. Estorga, 206 Cal. 81, 273 P. 575 and People v. Hickman, 204 Cal. 470, 268 P. 909, 270 P. 1117, this court has qualified the right and requires an "affirmative showing" of bias or prejudice. In neither of the above cited cases was a party deprived of a peremptory challenge. These two cases can therefore be no authority or precedent for the holding of this court.

In applying the provision of section 4½, Article VI, of the California Constitution, which applies to procedural defects, and not to errors of substantive law, this court has in effect overruled a number of precedents of this court holding directly to the contrary, that the provisions of section 4½, Article VI, California Constitution, do not apply where the right to peremptory challenge has been abridged.

In People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, at page 547, 246 P. 62, at page 67, the court, referring to Article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution, declared: "It was never intended by this provision of the Constitution to take from the defendant in a criminal action his fundamental right to a jury trial or in any substantial manner to abridge this right. People v. Wismer, 58 Cal.App. 679, 688, 209 P. 259."

In People v. Wismer, 58 Cal.App. 679, 209 P. 259, after the defendant had exercised all of his peremptory challenges, he was compelled to accept a juror who was disqualified by reason of actual bias. The court held, 58 Cal.App. at page 687, 209 P. at page 263: "Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution has no application to the situation presented here. The right of trial by jury is fundamental—a right which came to us from the common law and as such guaranteed by the Constitution—and inseparably connected therewith (indeed, it is of the very essence thereof) is the right to a trial by a jury consisting of unbiased and unprejudiced persons."

In People v. Bennett, 79 Cal.App. 76, at page 91, 249 P. 20, at page 25, the court stated: "And it should always be remembered that, in the trial of a criminal case, any act or action of a trial court which must necessarily have the effect of denying to the accused a trial by a fair and impartial jury will not be excused or mitigated by the terms of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. The right of trial by jury is fundamental."

In People v. O'Connor, 81 Cal.App. 506, 254 P. 630, the defendant was denied the right to exercise the number of peremptory challenges to which he was entitled under the statute. It was contended that section 4½ of Article VI applied. The court said, 81 Cal.App. at page 520, 254 P. at page 635: "As generally defined, 'procedure' includes in its meaning whatever is embraced by the three technical terms, pleading, evidence and practice. 32 Cyc. 405. Had there been no denial of the exercise of any peremptory challenges, we seriously question whether this section has any application to the cause before us. This section must refer to pleading and procedure, as authorized by the Codes. Thus, to make it applicable to the pleadings, had there been any defects in the informations not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, as accorded by law, then, and in that case, the error should be held harmless. Likewise, if the court omitted to follow the procedure embodied by the Codes for the arraignment and trial of the defendants upon the informations filed against them and had committed some error in so doing, which did not affect the substantial rights of the parties, then such error in procedure would likewise be held harmless, but, it cannot reasonably be held that section 4½ of article 6 is so broad in its meaning as to permit the trial court to disregard the usual and ordinary procedure in the trial of a cause and adopt a new and entirely different manner from that recognized by law. Such a course is not a mistake in procedure, it is a substitution of procedure. What would excuse a mistake in procedure would not and could not be held to allow the creation of a course unprovided for by law. Mistake is one thing; a substitution is an entirely different thing." (Emphasis added.)

It is abundantly clear from the above cited authorities that section 4½ of Article VI, since it relates to procedure, has no application where the right to peremptory challenge has been interfered with. Yet, the majority here, without citation of authority in support of its position holds that simply because "the jurors were polled and were unanimous in their verdict" the error in denying appellant his right to exercise a peremptory challenge was cured by section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution. The majority arrives at this conclusion even though it concedes that the evidence produced on behalf of appellant was amply sufficient to support a verdict and judgment in his favor.

There can be no question whatsoever that, so far as appears from the face of the majority opinion, the conclusion that no miscarriage of justice resulted was not based on a review of all of the evidence in the case but solely on the ground that there was no affirmative showing that any juror who served was biased or otherwise unfit. Of course, it is obvious from a consideration of the authorities cited in my dissenting opinion heretofore filed in this case that such a showing would be virtually impossible in view of the law relating to the unimpeachability of verdicts. But the majority does not attempt to meet this argument, but blindly invokes the provisions of section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution because the jury was unanimous in its verdict in favor of defendant.

In so holding, it is obvious that the majority do not appreciate the significance of the right to a peremptory challenge. This challenge has always existed in our law and has a very salutary purpose. It enables the litigant to remove from the jury box a prospective juror who has failed to disclose his true mental state and who may possess deep seated prejudices against the litigant or his case which the prospective juror will not admit on voir dire examination. The right to remove such a prospective juror without disclosing the reason therefor, is a basic fundamental right guaranteed by the statutes of this state and is known and recognized by all trial lawyers to be one of the most important safeguards against the selection of those for jury duty who are disqualified because they possess a state of mind adverse to the party exercising the challenge which cannot be disclosed by voir dire examination. The assumption of the majority that one prejudiced juror could not bring about a unanimous verdict against a party in the face of satisfactory evidence in his favor when he has been denied the right to challenge the prejudiced juror, is not borne out by either theory or practical experience. Those who have had experience in the trial of jury cases appreciate the importance of eliminating from juries those who have preconceived notions as to what result should be reached regardless of the evidence, and many tales have been told and more remain untold of how one or two overzealous jurors have brought about a verdict against the weight of the evidence. In this connection I cannot refrain from repeating the warning I so often heard from my venerable father that one rotten apple will spoil the whole barrel. While this was applied to an occasional bad boy in the community, it is just as applicable to jurors or other small groups.

It is traditional in our judicial system that the jury selected to try a case should be fair and impartial. The Legislature has endeavored to prescribe a system for the selection of juries which will as nearly as possible guarantee to litigants a jury composed of fair and impartial persons. This court has held unanimously in this case that the system provided by the Legislature for the selection of juries was not followed in this case. That there was a substantial depart-ture from the system so prescribed there can be no question. Such being the case, the plaintiff was not accorded the type of jury trial guaranteed by the laws of this state. The majority concedes that this was error. There is only one way to cure this error and that is to grant plaintiff a new trial. To do otherwise is to deny to plaintiff the equal and exact justice to which he is entitled, by the verdict of a jury impartially selected, which Thomas Jefferson declared to be one of the principles which "form the bright constellation which has gone before us." (First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1801.)

Application of Rayford MEDLIN
For a Writ of Habeas Corpus.

Cr. 5515.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 7, 1955.

Habeas corpus proceeding. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that since the petitioner had been legally committed and continued to be mentally ill, ordered to show cause theretofore issued would have to be discharged and petition for writ of habeas corpus denied.

Order accordingly.

Habeas Corpus ¶62

Where habeas corpus petitioner's claim that he had asked clerk to procure attorney to represent him and that clerk of court had failed to do so was rebutted by clerk's affidavit, which was filed together with return to show cause order, and in the return it was stated that the habeas corpus petitioner had been re-examined subsequent to filing of petition and found to be mentally ill, order to show cause was discharged and petition for writ of habeas corpus denied.

Louis Most, Beverly Hills, for petitioner.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James D. Loeb, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

On August 27, 1953, a petition was filed in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles by Louis F. Acosta, Deputy Sheriff, alleging that he believed Rayford M. Medlin to be mentally ill and in need of supervision; that the said Rayford M. Medlin was then held in the Los Angeles County Jail, Booking No. 282688 on a charge of Suspicion of Extortion and that the said Louis F. Acosta had a letter from Dr. Marcus E. Crahan, Senior Jail Physician, which stated in part that the story said defendant gave to the examiner had a delusional trend and his ideations appeared to be abnormal and irrational, that it was felt he should be given a period of observation in the Psychopathic Ward and such disposition made as deemed advisable and indicated by the Psychopathic Court.

That an Order for the Examination or Detention of the said Rayford M. Medlin at the Psychopathic Ward of the Los Angeles County General Hospital was made by the Honorable George A. Dockweiler of the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles on August 27, 1953 and on August 28, 1953 the same judge ordered him to appear for hearing and examination in Department 54 of the Superior Court on September 1, 1953 at 9:30 a. m.; that a Certificate of Medical Examiners was signed and filed by doctors J. G. Staub and F. A. Buell, stating that they had examined Rayford M. Medlin on August 28, 1953 and made a tentative diagnosis of paranoid psychotic reaction with recommendation for supervision, treatment and care at the Norwalk State Hospital.

That thereafter the Judgment of Mental Illness and Order for Care and Hospitalization was made and Petitioner, Rayford M. Medlin, was committed to said Norwalk State Hospital on September 1, 1953, where he is now confined.

On September 14, 1955, petitioner filed with this court a petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus, seeking his release on the ground that his confinement was illegal in that while held for observation in the Psychopathic Ward of the General Hospital of Los Angeles County, and when arraigned in Department 54 of the Superior Court, "I asked the Clerk of court to contact an attorney for me. The Clerk of court stated that he would contact an attorney to represent me. However, the Clerk of court failed to contact an attorney to represent me." This court issued an order to show cause directed to Robert E. Wyers, M. D., Superintendent, Metropolitan State Hospital at Norwalk, California, to appear and show cause why the writ prayed for should not issue.

In his return to the aforesaid order to show cause, respondent Superintendent and Medical Director alleged that petitioner was confined in said state hospital pursuant to the commitment by said superior court as above set forth. With said return there was also filed an affidavit of L. L. Solomon, Deputy County Clerk of Department 54 of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, wherein the affiant stated:

"That at no time on or before September 1, 1953, the date on which petitioner's sanity hearing was held in Department 54 of the Superior Court did the petitioner contact the affiant; that at no time on or before September 1, 1953 did petitioner request the affiant to procure an attorney for petitioner; that at no time on or before September 1, 1953 did affiant agree to procure an attorney for petitioner."

In his aforesaid return the Superintendent and Medical Director of the Metropolitan State Hospital further set forth, "That on September 20, 1955 Rayford Medlin was before the Medical Staff of this hospital and was again diagnosed as being mentally ill; that it is my opinion as Superintendent and Medical Director of the Metropolitan State Hospital that said Rayford Medlin continues to be mentally ill and should be confined in a State institution for care and treatment."

Since petitioner was legally committed and continues to be mentally ill it follows that the order to show cause heretofore issued should be discharged and the petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus denied. It is so ordered.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION of the State of California, Jansen Cement Company and Industrial Indemnity Company, Respondents.

Civ. 8822.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 1, 1955.

Workmen's compensation proceeding. The Industrial Accident Board awarded benefits on basis of 26 per cent total disability, and the employee petitioned for review. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence sustained finding of 26 per cent total disability.

Award affirmed.

1. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1935

Where the Industrial Commission heard medical evidence as well as employee's own testimony, in the absence of any showing other than employee's statement that commission failed to consider evidence relating to nature of his injury and his age and occupation in determining his permanent disability rating, commission was presumed to have made its workmen's compensation decision on all the evidence. Labor Code, § 4660(a).

2. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1724

The Industrial Accident Commission can find from the evidence a percentage of disability less than the percentage allowed for "slight" spinal impairment as shown in the permissive schedule adopted by commission pursuant to the workmen's compensation law. Labor Code, §§ 4660(b), 4662.

3. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1724

Where the Industrial Accident Commission was confronted with divergent views as to extent of loss of function of employee's back, commission could make a determination within the range of the evidence as to the degree of disability. Labor Code, § 4660(b).

4. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1653

In workmen's compensation proceeding, evidence sustained Industrial Accident Commission's finding that injury to employee's back caused permanent disability which was 26 per cent of total. Labor Code, §§ 4660(a, b), 4662.

Joseph C. Lavelle and Frances Newell Carr, Sacramento, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Daniel C. Murphy, San Francisco, for Industrial Accident Commission.

Mento, Buchler & Littlefield, Sacramento, for Jansen Cement Co.

PEEK, Justice.

Petitioner seeks review and annulment of an order of the respondent commission awarding him benefits for permanent disability which the referee found to be equal to 26 per cent of total.

His first contention is that the commission did not follow the provisions of Labor Code, § 4660(a), in determining his permanent disability rating; that is, it failed to consider the nature of the physical injury, the occupation of the injured employee and his age at the time of injury as regards his diminished ability to compete in an open labor market. His second contention is that the commission did not follow the schedule of percentage ratings adopted for spinal impairment resulting in permanent disability, which schedule provides as follows:

Slight	30%
Moderate	50%
Severe	100%

In support of his first contention he argues that the medical reports demonstrated additional elements of disability which were not considered, such as taut hamstrings, traumatic arthritis, back pain, ache and fatigue of the limbs, defect in the reflexes and sensory changes, and that no consideration was given to the fact that he would be unable to continue his regular employment in manual labor.

[1] The question presented here is quite similar to one which was before the court in Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 33 Cal.2d 89, 199 P.2d 302. There it was held that the commission "is presumed to have made its decision on all the evidence." 33 Cal.2d at page 92, 199 P.2d at page 305. Here the medical evidence as well as petitioner's own testimony posed for determination all of the elements noted by petitioner. In the absence of any showing other than his own statement that the commission failed to consider such evidence, the rule noted in the case above cited must control. Furthermore here, as in that case, the petition for a rehearing before the commission made the same points and argument as are now made and the petition was denied.

As the respondent commission comments in its answer, the determination referred to in subsection (a) of Labor Code, section 4660, will of necessity be arbitrary to a degree, and no one can determine with nicety exactly how much an injured employee should receive for the permanent loss, or loss of use, of a particular member of his body. This is illustrated by the provisions of section 4662 which provide that except as to certain enumerated cases, the determination and extent of permanent disability shall be determined by the commission "in accordance with the fact."

To assist the commission in this regard, and to maintain as much uniformity as possible, the Legislature has authorized it to adopt a schedule for the determination of percentages of permanent disability. Section 4660(b), Labor Code. It is therein provided that, "The commission may prepare, adopt, and from time to time amend * * *" such a schedule and that it shall be "prima facie evidence" of the percentage of disability to be attributed to each injury covered by the schedule.

[2] The use by the doctors of phrases such as "slight to moderate limitation of motion in low back", "considerable limitation of back motions", and "rather doubtful that he will return to manual labor", and the findings of the referee and conclusions of the commission that the percentage of permanent disability was less than the percentage allowed for "slight" impairment as shown in the schedule cannot be given the weight which petitioner would accord to such terms. In other words, if the permissive schedule adopted by the commission were to be followed literally, which is the effect of petitioner's argument, then any employee with an impaired spine could be rated only at 30, 50 or 100 per cent of total disability.

[3, 4] Here again as in the Liberty Mutual case the commission was confronted with divergent views as to the extent of loss of function of petitioner's back, a difficult task under the most favorable circumstances. Necessarily, said the court, 33 Cal.2d at page 93, 199 P.2d at page 306, such a task "involves some measure of conjecture and compromise by the finder of fact as certainly would occur in the mental processes of a so-called expert witness." Thus when the commission is confronted with such divergent views "it may make a determination within the range of the evidence as to the degree of disability." Here two of the physicians expressed doubt that petitioner would return to manual labor although one believed he could perform some types of labor. These opinions appeared to be based not only upon his impaired spinal function, but also upon their opinion that petitioner had little incentive to return to manual labor and would rather seek other work as was suggested by their referral of him to the Vocational Rehabilitation Bureau.

The award is affirmed.

CITY OF FONTANA, a City of the Sixth Class, County of San Bernardino, State of California; Henry Younge, Chief of Police, and M. W. Leetzow, R. L. Gazvoda, Mrs. Vera Wyatt, Jack Bullk, Eugene Conlon, duly elected and serving Council for said City, Respondents.

Civ. 5086.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Proceeding for writ of mandate to compel reinstatement of subordinate police officer in sixth class city. The Superior Court, of San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., entered judgment of dismissal, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that a motion adopted by the city council and entered in its minutes concurring an action of chief of police in dismissing petitioner was sufficient, to effectuate discharge where there were no restrictions or limitations provided by law as to method of discharge and city had no civil service, merit, or personnel system.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨184(1), 185(3)

Under Government Code sections providing that city council may appoint such subordinate police officers or employees as it deems necessary and providing that council shall fix compensation by ordinance and that such officers and employees hold office during pleasure of city council, there is no requirement that appointment or termination of service of officers as employees be by resolution or ordinance. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 36505, 36506.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨184(1)

In cities of sixth class, police officers may be appointed by city council or they may be appointed by chief of police, with approval of city council, and in neither instance, is it required that appointment be made by resolution adopted by city council. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 36505, 36506, 36808, 38630, 38631.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨185, 185(3)

Subordinate police officers in city of sixth class may be dismissed at any time, and a motion adopted by city council of city of Fontana, entered in its minutes, that council concurred in action of chief of police in dismissing a police officer was sufficient and it was not necessary that dismissal be by resolution or ordinance or that council initiate original proceedings to dismiss such officer, where city had no civil service, merit or personnel system. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 36505, 36506, 36808, 38630, 38631.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨185(3)

The fact that police officer in city of sixth class was appointed by means of resolution did not require that his dismissal be by resolution. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 36505, 36506, 36808, 38630, 38631.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨185(4)

Under statute providing that city council may hold closed sessions to consider dismissal of officer or employee, unless such officer or employee requests a public hearing, action of city council in adopting motion for dismissal of police officer was not rendered insufficient by alleged fact that meeting was not open to public, notwithstanding other statute providing that city council meetings shall be public. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 36808, 54953, 54957.

T. L. DeBord, Barstow, for appellant.

Henry F. Rager, Fontana, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

By a petition for a writ of mandate, filed on July 26, 1954 the petitioner sought reinstatement as a police officer for the city of Fontana. A demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, and an amended petition was filed. A demurrer was again sustained with leave to amend, and the petitioner filed notice of his election to stand on the amended petition. A judgment of dismissal was then entered, and this appeal followed.

So far as material here, the petition alleged that Fontana is a city of the sixth class; that petitioner was employed as a police officer for said city on October 21, 1952, by "Resolution No. 44"; that said Resolution No. 44 is still in effect and has not been rescinded; that petitioner was summarily discharged by the chief of police of said city on January 22, 1954; that a "closed hearing" was held on February 2, 1954, for the purpose of determining whether the action of the chief of police in discharging the petitioner was justified; that the action taken at this meeting did not purport to be an original action by the city council, but was for the purpose of satisfying the public demand and to ratify and approve the prior action of the chief of police; that the petitioner's salary was paid up to and including February 2, 1954; that on July 15, 1954, the petitioner made demand upon the chief of police and the city council to reinstate him to his position and to certify and approve his payroll from February 2; and that said demand has been refused.

A copy of Resolution No. 44 was attached to the petition with a certificate that it was adopted by the city council at a regular meeting on October 21, 1952. It is headed "A Resolution of the City Council * * * Authorizing the Employment of Police Officers." It states that it is necessary and convenient that officers be employed for the city police department. It then "authorizes" for such employment five named persons, including this petitioner.

The minutes of "a regular meeting" of the city council held on February 2, 1954, were also attached to the petition. These minutes recite that one councilman "moved that the Council concur in the action of the Chief of Police in his dismissal of (this petitioner) on the evidence given", and that the motion was seconded by another councilman. After setting forth some of the discussion which followed, the minutes recite that the motion to approve the action of the chief of police was passed and adopted by a vote of three to two.

Briefly stated, the appellant admits that his continued employment was at the pleasure of the city council, but contends that since he was appointed by a formal resolution his employment could be terminated only by a formal resolution adopted by the city council "rescinding" his employment under Resolution No. 44; that the power to rescind Resolution No. 44 could not be delegated to the chief of police; that since the chief of police had no authority to rescind a formal resolution of the city council his action, in discharging the petitioner, was ultra vires and void; that the act of the chief of police being void could not be ratified by the city council; that the only way the petitioner could be removed from his position is by an original act of the city council rescinding and cancelling his appointment under Resolution No. 44; that the city council took no such original action; and that the action taken by the city council on February 2 could not be considered an original action for the further reason that it was not a public meeting, as required by section 36808 of the Government Code.

[1-3] Section 36505 of the Government Code provides that the city council shall appoint the chief of police, and may appoint such other subordinate officers or employees as it deems necessary. Section 36506 provides that the city council shall fix the compensation of all appointive officers or employees by resolution or ordinance. It then provides that "Such officers and employees hold office during the pleasure of the city council." While these statutes require that the compensation of such employees shall be fixed by resolution or ordinance, there is no such requirement with respect to their appointment or the termination of their service. Section 38630 provides that the police department of a sixth class city is under the control of the chief of police. Section 38631 provides that the chief of police of such a city may appoint police officers subject to the approval of the legislative body. It thus appears that the city council may appoint police officers or that they may be appointed by the chief of police, with the approval of the city council. In neither instance is it required that such appointments must be made by a resolution adopted by the city council. In view of the statutory provision that such employees hold office during the pleasure of the city council, it naturally follows that they may be dismissed at any time, in the absence of restrictions or limitations provided by law. No restriction as to the manner in which the discharge of such employees shall be expressed appears in these statutes. A motion adopted by the city council and entered in its minutes was certainly sufficient for that purpose.

[4] The fact that the appellant happened to be appointed by means of a resolution, although one was not necessary, is not controlling. This probably occurred because this new city, incorporated on June 25, 1952, made the appointment of five police officers in the same resolution in which it declared the necessity that such officers be employed. The action taken by the city council on February 2, 1954, did not purport to, and did not, repeal or rescind Resolution No. 44, or any part thereof, and there was no occasion or necessity for doing so. It was merely a method of meeting a subsequent development and terminating the appellant's employment, which the city council has a right to do without using the precise language of a formal resolution. Moreover, even if it could be assumed that a resolution was necessary in this particular instance, a motion adopted by the city council and entered in its minutes would be a substantial compliance with that requirement. Dixon v. La Guardia, 277 N.Y. 84, 13 N.E.2d 450.

Nothing is alleged in the petition, or appears in the record, which would remove the appellant from the effect of these general statutes. The respondents state in their brief that at all times here involved the city had no Civil Service, Merit or Personnel system with respect to its employees. In his reply brief the appellant does not deny this, but states that this fact does not appear in the record since the amended complaint did not allege that there was no civil service or personnel system in effect. The amended complaint did not allege that there was such a system in effect, but it was incumbent on the appellant to allege sufficient facts to show that he was entitled to the relief demanded. Under the facts alleged, the appellant was not entitled to that relief in the absence of a further showing that some existing limitation or restriction on the city's right to discharge him would prevent his dismissal at that time. He refused to further amend, and the court was justified in acting accordingly.

[5] The appellant makes some further contention that the action of the city council on February 2, 1954, was not sufficient because that meeting was not an open and public meeting, as required by section 36808 of the Government Code. Assuming that this was a closed meeting, and if it be further assumed that some meeting was necessary, Section 54953 provides that city council meetings shall be open and public "except as otherwise provided in this chapter", and Section 54957 permits a closed session to consider the dismissal of an officer or employee, "unless such officer or employee requests a public hearing."

The facts alleged in the petition would not have supported a finding that the city's power of dismissal was not legally exercised. Keeley v. City of Modesto, 36 Cal. App.2d 254, 97 P.2d 468; Chambers v. City of Sunnyvale, 56 Cal.App.2d 438, 132 P.2d 849; Hackler v. Ward, 105 Cal.App.2d 615, 234 P.2d 170.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial and from the judgment entered upon the jury's verdict of guilty of violating section 288 of the Penal Code.

Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the People (respondent) the facts are that on July 2, 1954, defendant, a 64-year old man, committed rape upon the person of an 8-year old girl who made no outcry or complaint at the time of the offense nor until a vaginal infection was discovered on July 7, 1954, at which time she was examined by a physician.

The act took place in a toilet on the back porch of the home in which defendant and the victim both lived and was accomplished in the presence of a two-year old girl who had accompanied the victim to the toilet.

Appellant urges that the victim was incompetent to act as a witness; that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict and that the verdict was based on passion and prejudice.

The question of the competence of a child to testify is governed by Section 1880, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows:

"The following persons cannot be witnesses:

* * * * *

"2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly."

[1-3] The right to make the determination as to the competence of a child under ten rests with the trial judge and where, as here, he examines the child for competence and thereafter testimony is received without objection,

"* * * any objection to the witness' competency will be deemed to have been waived and cannot be considered for the first time on appeal. (People v. Singh, 182 Cal. 457, 484, 188 P. 987; People v. Collins, 5 Cal. App. 654, 658, 91 P. 158; People v. Horowitz, 70 Cal.App.2d 675, 696, 161 P.2d 833; Cf., People v. Evans, 63 Cal.App. 777, 782, 220 P. 309.)

"In view of the fact that defendant failed to object in the trial court to the prosecuting witness' testimony on the ground that she was not a competent witness, under the above stated rule he has waived the right to urge in this court that it was error for the trial judge to permit her to testify." People v. Aleshire, 90 Cal.App.2d 506, 509, 203 P.2d 569, 571.

[4-7] Appellant's attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict resolves itself into an argument that the child's testimony was inherently improbable, and was the result of coaching rather than a relation of true facts. This contention is not a matter which should be determined by this court in the absence of a positive showing of abuse of power by the trial judge or jury. There is no such showing here. Merely because the circumstances of a crime are bizarre or unusual does not render testimony to that effect inherently improbable; the testimony must be of such a nature that it is unbelievable upon its face or is physically impossible. People v. Lindsey, 90 Cal.App.2d 558, 563, 203 P.2d 572. Appellant urges that the lack of outcry at the time of the act alleged renders the testimony inherently improbable. He overlooks, however, the physician's testimony to the effect that such an act might not cause such great pain to an 8-year old girl as to cause her to cry out. Whether or not the witness' testimony was the result of coaching or was a true relation of facts was a question for the jury. People v. Aleshire, supra.

The jury and the trial judge resolved the considerable conflict in the evidence against appellant. There is no evidence of any passion or prejudice in the record.

The order and the judgment appealed from are affirmed.

Civ. 8861.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Proceeding to review findings and order of Industrial Accident Commission denying award of death benefits. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that finding and conclusion that death from myocardial infarction due to coronary occlusion did not arise out of or in course of employment as lead mechanic by Division of Highways were supported by substantial evidence.

Order affirmed.

1. Workmen's Compensation ☞1418

That referee and Industrial Accident Commission rejected report of one medical expert, which would have sustained award of death benefits, and accepted contrary opinion of another expert was not ground for reversal of order denying compensation.

2. Workmen's Compensation ☞1396

Opinion of a medical expert based on hypothetical statements of the facts in the record is competent evidence in workmen's compensation proceedings.

3. Workmen's Compensation ☞1704

The weight to be accorded opinions of experts is a question for Industrial Accident Commission.

4. Workmen's Compensation ☞1939

Finding of Industrial Accident Commission cannot be disturbed by reviewing court, if such finding is supported by any evidence or reasonable inference.

5. Workmen's Compensation ☞1939

In reviewing action of Industrial Accident Commission, the function of courts is to determine whether the evidence, if believed, is substantial and supports the findings of Commission.

6. Workmen's Compensation ☞1519

Finding and conclusion of Industrial Accident Commission that death of lead mechanic employed by Division of Highways as a result of myocardial infarction due to coronary occlusion did not arise out of and in course of employment and hence was not compensable were supported by substantial evidence.

This is a proceeding to review the findings of the Industrial Accident Commission that the death of Leaton G. Foster did not arise out of and in the course of his employment and the consequent order denying benefits to petitioners.

The facts, which are not in substantial dispute, may be summarized as follows:

The decedent, Leaton G. Foster, was a lead mechanic working for the Division of Highways at Camp 39 in Modoc County. He died of myocardial infarction due to coronary occlusion on January 9, 1954.

During the month of December, 1953, and up to date of death the decedent had worked consistently overtime. Part of this evidently due to the absence of his co-mechanic, Mr. Wallace, for the first thirteen days of December. The work from December to date of death was described by Mr. Wallace as routine. There was no rush work. Mr. Wallace performed most or all of the heavy and outside work. Decedent had a prior back injury and had to avoid heavy lifting. The maintenance shop had proper mechanical equipment available for the handling of heavy loads. Extra help was available if needed but none was requested by decedent. Nowhere in the evidence is there an indication that the decedent was under any emotional or physical strain. There is no evidence of strain or exertion just prior to his death.

On January 9, 1954, the only work to be performed in the shop was the replacement of tracks on a caterpillar. This was being done by Mr. Wallace.

On the morning of January 9, 1954, the decedent arose at his usual time, ate his usual breakfast, his outward appearances were normal, he had no complaints. He went to the shop office adjoining the maintenance shop, arriving before the usual starting time of 7:30 a. m. He was engaged in paper work at his desk when Mr. Wallace arrived at 7:20 a. m. A conversation ensued between the decedent and Mr. Wallace. Decedent did not show any outward signs of distress, he did not complain of physical distress.

At 7:30 a. m. Mr. Wallace began work on the caterpillar, leaving decedent in the office with the paper work. Mr. Wallace recalls that while under the caterpillar he heard some one at the welding bench and heard sounds similar to those made in preparing a welding torch. These sounds were of only a few minutes' duration. A short while later he thought he heard his name called. After another interval he heard his name called and went into the office. He found the decedent in the office reclining on a seat used as a couch. Overalls were on the floor at one end of the couch, crumpled as if they had just been stepped out of. The decedent was in obvious distress and was taken to his house, which is at the camp, then to the hospital, where he died that same day.

There was no medical history of a heart condition but the report of Dr. Salvatore Lucia who had treated decedent on several occasions over a period of years stated: "It is my candid opinion that the work in which Mr. Foster engaged and the circumstances under which it was consummated directly contributed to his demise, as is clearly shown by the details of his last illness."

Dr. Charles Wallace, a doctor who was not acquainted with decedent, made a report based upon the study of the testimony and of certain documents submitted to him which described decedent's final illness and the duties of his employment. This physician's report concluded with the statement:

"In my opinion, there is no shred of evidence that his job was in any way responsible for his death. In the first place, his kind of work can not be said to contribute to the fundamental disease, coronary arteriosclerosis. Nor could the back injury have caused or even aggravated such an abnormality. Secondly, assuming that he had coronary arteriosclerosis, there is nothing to support the thesis that his work precipitated the fatal attack or coronary occlusion. There are instances when unusual and extraordinary physical activity or severe and exceedingly upsetting emotional upheaval may be said to precipitate occlusion of previously diseased arteries, but certainly neither situation was evident here."

It is apparent that the medical evidence is in sharp conflict and petitioners seek to overcome this by contending that the referee did not give proper consideration to the report of Dr. Lucia who was more familiar with the physical condition of decedent than was Dr. Wallace. They argue that the evidence clearly establishes that the decedent's death did arise out of and did occur in the course of decedent's employment, and that the medical evidence of Dr. Lucia substantiates the proposition that the type of work and the prolonged working hours required of the decedent were the precipitating factors which brought on the heart attack which resulted in his death.

[1-3] While petitioners' arguments are persuasive and the evidence of Dr. Lucia would no doubt have sustained a compensable award if the referee and the Commission had accepted it, the rejection of it and the acceptance of a contrary opinion from another expert is not ground for reversal by an appellate court. For as stated in Nielsen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 220 Cal. 118, at page 123, 29 P.2d 852, at page 854: "The opinion of experts based on hypothetical statements of the facts in the record is competent evidence. The weight of such evidence is for the commission's determination."

The referee in recommending that the petition for reconsideration be denied stated:

"In view of the evidence presented, which in the opinion of this Referee did not establish that applicant was doing more than a minimum amount of work, namely, paper work, on the date of his death, January 9, 1954, it is felt that the applicants did not establish that the decedent sustained a disabling heart condition as a result of his employment such as would entitle them to an award of death benefits. There is no definite showing that the decedent had performed work in the shop on the date of his attack. As a matter of fact, the direct testimony by Mr. William W. Wallace was to the effect that He was performing the only actual work being conducted in the shop on that day. The only possible inference that decedent had done any mechanical work on January 9, 1954, would be based upon the statement of Mr. Wallace that he heard sounds in the shop which continued for a few minutes and believed that the same had emanated from the welding bench located in the maintenance shop; that the sounds were similar to those made by a person preparing a torch. Other than the noise heard by the witness, the decedent was stated to have called to the witness and had been found in the office of the shop at about 8:00 A.M., or an hour and a half after the start of the work day.

"It is true there is a conflict in the medical reports as to the cause of death. In the opinion of this Referee the medical report of Dr. Wallace is the most reasonable medical opinion in view of the testimony concerning the activities of the decedent on January 9, 1954."

[4, 5] It is well established that "if there is any evidence, whether direct or by reasonable inference, which will support the finding of the commission, a reviewing court has no power to disturb it. Mercer-Fraser Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 40 Cal.2d 102, 114, 251 P.2d 955. The function of the court on review of the action of the commission is to determine whether the evidence, if believed, is substantial and supports the findings." Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 115 Cal.App.2d 684, 692, 252 P.2d 649, 654.

[6] We are satisfied that there is substantial evidence to support the findings and conclusion of respondent commission that the death of Leaton G. Foster did not arise out of or occur in the course of his employment.

The order denying an award is affirmed.

All conflicts must be resolved in favor of respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold verdict if possible, and verdict will stand if there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted to support it, and the same rule applies in review of findings of a judge.

4. Partnership ☞336(3)

In action by deceased partner's widow and daughter against surviving partner for accounting for profits allegedly derived from use of patent owned jointly by partners, evidence supported finding that surviving partner had not derived profit from patent other than that accounted for. WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Primarily, this is an appeal by plaintiff executrix from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County in an action by her to enforce an accounting by the surviving partner of her deceased husband. The other parties and other purposes of the action will not be discussed or considered except in connection with issues to which they are pertinent.

Respondent George W. Shaver is the surviving partner of Clarence Sibert, deceased, and will hereafter be referred to as "respondent". He has adopted as his statement of facts and "first answer to appellant's brief" a detailed opinion filed by the trial court and set forth in respondent's appendix to his brief.

The facts, as stated by the trial court, occupy 11 pages of the printed appendix to respondent's brief. Few references to the record are given in support thereof. The court's findings occupy six pages of the Clerk's Transcript and contain many long lists of numbers referring to paragraphs of pleadings found true or untrue. Respondent says in his brief that appellant's "statement of facts must be ignored as not correct". Each party has called the court's attention to the failure of the other to comply with certain rules on appeal and urged that therefore the brief of the other should be disregarded. From the reading and consideration of the Clerk's and Reporter's Transcripts, 380 pages of briefs, and numerous, varied and lengthy exhibits, including files and reporter's transcripts in prior actions, we realize that it is a difficult case to state, either clearly or briefly, and we are convinced that both appellant and respondent have made honest attempts to present the matters which they believe should be considered by this court. Consequently, we will not here discuss infractions of the rules on appeal by either party, but will proceed to consider the appeal upon its merits.

Clarence Sibert (hereinafter referred to as "Clarence") died intestate October 8, 1937, leaving his widow Rena, who was then recovering from a nervous breakdown, and their daughter Mary Jane, then a minor. Respondent is the husband of Clarence's sister and the two families were intimate friends.

In 1935, Clarence was employed as a jewelry manufacturer and respondent was employed as a salesman of market and restaurant equipment. Respondent told Clarence there was a need for a shoestring potato cutter and both, as partners, began working evenings, weekends and other spare time to devise one. Many models were made, tested, bent or broken and abandoned. Designs were repeatedly changed and improved, and new models made and tested. June 10, 1936, their application for letters patent was filed and manufacture and sale of the cutters was begun. In September 1936, the patent claims were rejected as lacking in novelty, all claims being covered by prior expired patents. The application was subject to amendment. In November 1936, the partnership business was moved to larger quarters but continued to be a spare time project. Prior to December 1, 1936, more than 60 cutters had been sold at $35 each. February 8, 1937, as partners, respondent and Clarence filed with the County Clerk a certificate that they were doing business under the fictitious firm name of S & S Specialty Company. June 14, 1938, a patent was issued in the joint names of Clarence and respondent, on a single combination claim, described in the amendment filed after Clarence's death but based upon a model devised with his assistance.

On August 1, 1938, respondent filed with the State Board of Equalization a statement and secured from them a certificate that he individually was doing business under the name of S & S Specialty Company; that the old S & S Specialty Company, which formerly consisted of George W. Shaver and Clarence E. Sibert, ceased as of the day before.

On or about August 25, 1952, after the judgment next cited had become final, citation under section 571 of the Probate Code required respondent, as surviving partner, to render an account. He caused notice of dissolution of the partnership to be filed with the County Clerk, ceased business under the name of "S & S Specialty Company" and published notice that the patent would be sold on September 25, 1952.

On the same day, August 25, 1952, Shaver Specialty Company began doing business at the same location, with the same stock and equipment, the same employees, the same product, and the same customers.

In the instant action, the testimony of respondent's expert witnesses placed the value of the patent at $97.20, $157.20, $300 and $500, and the court found the value of the pending application at the time of Clarence's death to be $97.20. January 24, 1948, respondent alone applied for a new combination patent. According to respondent's own testimony, at least 10,000 cutters had been sold at from $17.50 to $35 each prior to that date. From 1936 to 1948, the handle of each cutter bore the imprints "Keen Kut Shoestring" and either "Pat. Pend." or the number of the patent issued to Clarence and respondent. From 1948 to the time of the trial of the instant action, each handle bore the imprints "Keen Kut Shoestring" and the number of respondent's new patent.

We deem it unnecessary to detail the facts constituting the claimed fraud on the part of respondent in obtaining from Rena and Mary Jane a purported assignment to him for the reason that rescission of the assignment has been adjudged by the Superior Court of Los Angeles in Action No. 564,297, by judgment dated April 9, 1951, affirmed June 20, 1952, in 111 Cal.App.2d 833, 245 P.2d 514, and hearing thereon denied by the Supreme Court August 14, 1952. In that action it was found that "At the time of his death Sibert was the owner of record of a half interest in and to the invention covered by said application for Letters Patent and Shaver was the owner of record of a similar one-half interest, but each of such ownerships was subject to an agreement of the parties that the invention should be an asset of said partnership. At the time of his death Sibert was the owner of a one-half interest in said partnership." It was then adjudged that " * * * in 1934 Clarence E. Sibert and George W. Shaver formed an equal partnership under the name, then or subsequently adopted, of S & S Specialty Co., for the creation of the invention covered by said Letters Patent and for the manufacture and sale of said invention, which partnership was in existence at the time of the death of Clarence E. Sibert; that said partnership has not been and the affairs of said partnership have not been wound up and settled by George W. Shaver, the surviving partner; that said partnership is the equitable owner of said Letters Patent and said invention and Rena C. Sibert and Mary Jane Cashin and George W. Shaver are ordered and directed to do everything necessary to vest in said partnership the record ownership of said Letters Patent and said invention;". Shortly before the trial of the instant action, the parties had formally transferred record ownership of the patent to the partnership.

By said judgment, it was further ordered "That said partnership and the affairs thereof be wound up and settled by said George W. Shaver, as the surviving partner, and that George W. Shaver account to the Estate of Clarence E. Sibert, Deceased, and to Rena C. Sibert, as the administratrix thereof, under the supervision and direction of Department 5 of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles (being the probate department in which the administration of said estate is pending) for the interest of Clarence E. Sibert in said partnership and in all profits thereof and in all profits realized by Shaver from the operation of the business conducted under the name of S & S Specialty Co. and by the use of the assets of the partnership from the date of the commencement of the partnership to the date of the winding up and settlement of the affairs of the partnership;".

The court, in its memorandum opinion in the instant action adopted by respondent as his "first answer" to appellant's opening brief, demonstrates mathematically that as of the time of his death Clarence Sibert's interest in the partnership was $206.40, that the average capital used in the business over 14.8 years after his death was $50,000 or more; that the total profits for the accounting period was $555,965.92, of which 22.8% or $126,760.22 is attributable to the use of capital; that Sibert's $206.40 interest represents .00412 of the average total capital employed; that the portion of profits which may be attributed to the use of his capital is therefore $522.25; that, however, only 60% of the business was attributable to the use of the patent and therefore only 60% of the profits, or $444.79 could possibly be attributable to Sibert's interest in the patent; that respondent had paid to appellants for the assignment (heretofore rescinded) $305, on which simple interest for the time retained by appellant is $341.60, which provides an equitable offset of $646.60, leaving appellant indebted to respondent in the sum of $126.85.

The Court, in his said opinion, states further that:

"We think that under the circumstances the equitable offset heretofore mentioned should be allowed and the account settled as showing nothing due plaintiffs from the profits of the Shaver family's business.

"However, if the precedent heretofore set in these proceedings is broken and just one question of fact is decided in favor of the defendants, the same decision can be arrived at without reference to equity."

The finding in this regard is as follows:

"That no profits were ever made by the partnership dissolved by the death of Clarence E. Sibert, in the business of said partnership either before or after its dissolution, and that said business sustained an operating loss of $87.20 prior to dissolution, all of which was paid by the defendant George W. Shaver from his own funds; that prior to the death of Clarence E. Sibert said deceased withdrew his entire capital contribution to said partnership and at the time of his death had no interest therein by way of capital contribution; that at said time defendant George W. Shaver had an unreturned capital contribution therein amounting to $200, together with credit for payment of operating loss hereinbefore mentioned, in the amount of $87.20, making a total credit due to said George W. Shaver in the sum of $287.20. That at the time of dissolution the business of said partnership had no good will of any value and its only asset was the patent application referred to in the pleadings herein, which was then of a value of $97.20, and the total capital of the partnership as of said date, including the patent application and the invention represented thereby, was $297.20. That after payment to said George W. Shaver of said sum of $287.20, representing his contribution to capital and payment of operating loss, there would have remained a net surplus available for division between the partners amounting to $10, of which each partner would have been entitled to $5, had there been a winding up and settlement of the affairs of said partnership at that time. That in the absence of such winding up and settlement, the interest of said George W. Shaver in said partnership property and assets was in the sum of $292.20 and the interest of said Clarence E. Sibert therein was $5."

The court further found "that the only use made by the defendant Shaver of said patent was to print its number on the handle of the slicer, until January 24, 1948, when he made a substantial change in design and applied for a new 'combination' patent, which was later issued and is the property of the defendant Shaver and not the property of said original partnership and in which none of the plaintiffs have any interest".

It was also found that as affecting his own rights, respondent "was not guilty of any fraud save and except such as may have become established" by the judgment in the former action, and as to the other respondents "there was no fraud on the part of defendant George W. Shaver either in connection with the acquisition of the interest of the plaintiffs Rena C. Sibert and Mary Jane Cashin in and to the patent or invention nor in connection with anything that said George W. Shaver did prior thereto or thereafter."

Judgment was rendered that defendants George W. Shaver and his wife Glennie Shaver are the owners of certain real and personal property involved herein, and "That defendants George W. Shaver, George W. Shaver, Jr., and Glennie Shaver, are the owners as partners of that certain business known as the Shaver Specialty Company, conducted at 6121 South Western Avenue, in the city of Los Angeles, State of California, together with the good will, stock in trade, equipment, machinery, tools, supplies, books, records, and other property of every kind and description, located at said address or used in connection with said business, as well as all outstanding debts or moneys due to or on account thereof.

"Second: That plaintiffs, and each of them, have no right, title, interest or claim in and to any of the real or personal property hereinbefore described and that the title of defendants therein as hereinbefore respectively set forth is hereby quieted against any and all claims of plaintiffs.

"Third: That all orders heretofore made in the matter of the administration of the estate of Clarence E. Sibert, deceased, restraining or purporting to restrain the sale of any property whether described herein or not, and more particularly that certain order made in said proceeding on the 30th day of September, 1952, restraining the sale of U. S. Patent No. 2130375, are hereby dissolved.

"Fourth: That the order heretofore made in this action appointing R. E. Allen Receiver is hereby vacated and set aside and said Receiver discharged.

"Fifth: It is ordered that all right, title and interest of George W. Shaver and of the estate of Clarence E. Sibert, deceased, together with all right, title and interest of the partnership formerly consisting of George W. Shaver and said Clarence E. Sibert doing business under the fictitious name and style of S & S Specialty Company, in and to U. S. Patent No. 2130375 be sold by defendant George W. Shaver, as the surviving partner, in the manner provided by law for sales upon execution, except that 30 days notice in writing of the time and place of sale shall be given to plaintiffs Rena C. Sibert, as Administratrix of the estate of Clarence E. Sibert, deceased.

ed, Rena C. Sibert and Mary Jane Cashin; and George W. Shaver or any of the parties to this action, as well as other persons, may be purchasers; that from the proceeds thereof, after payment of expenses of sale, there shall first be deducted and paid to said George W. Shaver the sum of $287.30, representing the return of his contribution to capital and operating loss of said partnership; and the balance remaining, if any, divided equally between said George W. Shaver and Rena C. Sibert, as Administratrix of the estate of Clarence E. Sibert, deceased. The Court reserves jurisdiction to set aside or confirm such sale upon motion made by the purchaser or any of the parties to this action within ten (10) days thereafter, but unless such application shall be made within such period the said sale shall be and become final and conclusive upon the parties thereto and upon all parties to this action."

From such judgment, plaintiffs prosecute this appeal. In their opening brief appellants state that the substantive questions presented are:

"1. Does the evidence support the finding of the trial court that Shaver has fully, fairly and in good faith accounted to the Sibert Estate and that such accounting shows nothing due to any of the plaintiffs from any of the defendants?

"2. Was the trial court justified in determining that the profits attributable to the use by the defendants of the deceased partner's interest in the dissolved partnership should be determined under the provisions of Section 15042 of the Corporations Code, notwithstanding the plaintiff's contentions (a) that neither said Section 15042 or any other section or sections of the Corporations Code are by their terms applicable to the facts of this case, even if it be assumed that the defendant had not been guilty of fraud in continuing the business of the partnership, and (b) notwithstanding the plaintiff's contention that Shaver as the surviving partner, was a trustee and that, having violated his duties as trustee by fraudulently continuing the business of the partnership for his own benefit, he should be required to account in the manner required of trustees who have fraudulently used the assets of the trust for their own benefit, and (c) notwithstanding the provisions of the Willis judgment (in the former trial) requiring Shaver to account 'for all profits realized by Shaver from the operation of the business conducted under the name of S & S Specialty Co., and by the use of the assets of the partnership from the commencement of the partnership to the date of the winding up and settlement of the affairs of the partnership?'

"In seeking an answer to this question, the court will have in mind the further finding by Judge Willis that Shaver had not wound up the affairs of the partnership.

"3. Was the trial court justified in determining that Glennie and George Junior might acquire interests in the Sibert-Shaver partnership business without giving any consideration therefor and hold that interest and the product thereof unaffected by the trustee status of Shaver as a surviving partner and unaffected by Shaver's fraudulent violation of that trust? And what additional obligations would arise from knowledge on the part of Glennie from the outset and on the part of George Junior somewhat later, that Shaver was such a trustee and that he had so violated his trust?"

It is at once apparent that appellants' attack upon the findings is grounded on the claim that they are not supported by the evidence, and, as a necessary corollary, that the findings do not support the judgment.

[1,2] When a judgment is challenged on the ground of "insufficiency of the evidence" an appellate tribunal must resolve every doubt and conflict in favor of the judgment in order to give it validity. It is not the function of an appellate court to reweigh the evidence or draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the trial court. Nor will an appellate court pass upon inconsistencies in testimony, but it will presume that the trial court has reconciled and accounted for, to its own satisfaction, all inconsistencies present in the testimony.

[3] The applicable rule is thus stated in In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689, 690: "In reviewing the evidence * * * all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the verdict if possible. It is an elementary * * * principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court." (Italics added.) (Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 1935, 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184.)"

[4] And this rule governs in a review of the findings of a judge the same as when considering a jury verdict. We have painstakingly examined the voluminous record before us in this case, including the reporter's transcript containing 992 pages, and the clerk's transcript of 178 pages, together with some 58 exhibits. This action is essentially one of fact and the evidence is highly conflicting, but upon the foregoing view of the law we cannot hold that any essential finding in this case is unsupported.

Appellants rely strongly on the judgment entered in the previous action tried before Judge Willis, and which judgment was affirmed on appeal. Sibert v. Shaver, 111 Cal. App.2d 833, 245 P.2d 514.

It is appellants' contention that respondent herein George W. Shaver made no attempt to comply therewith and exerted every effort to evade the mandate thereof. In the instant action, the court determined otherwise. The views of the trial court in that regard are set forth in its memorandum opinion, as follows:

"Within five days after the judgment became final Shaver made a bona fide attempt to comply with it. He ceased all activity under the name of S & S Specialty Company, closed his books and ordered a certified public accountant to prepare an account as of that date, filed and published notice of dissolution of the original partnership and notice to creditors, published notice of time and place of sale of the patent, executed an assignment of his one-half interest of record in the patent to the dissolved partnership, and requested the administratrix to execute a similar assignment covering the deceased's one-half interest of record therein. She made no reply to this request, and on September 30, 1952, procured an order from the Probate Court enjoining the sale of the patent and requiring Shaver to account to the estate for all profits made in his business.

"Being already in preparation, an account was filed on November 10, and as a result of hearings had between that date and January 28, 1953, supplemental accounts were filed furnishing all additional information requested by the administratrix. This accounting appears to have been an honest one, in which original book entries were adequately distinguished from estimates and subsequent charge-backs made by the accountant, in support of an accounting theory employed by him to show an assumed situation in which the Sibert estate had a continuing interest in the business as found by the court in the prior action. No changes were made in the original books which were kept on the basis of sole ownership by the Shaver family."

The court directed an accounting from October 8, 1937, the day of Sibert's death, to August 23, 1952, when, as the trial judge further observed in his memorandum opinion, "Shaver did everything in his power to wind up the business of the original partnership as ordered by the court, but was prevented from doing so by the action of the administratrix in refusing to join in an assignment of the patent to the partnership, as ordered by the court in the prior action, and procuring a restraining order against the sale of it."

No useful purpose would be served by further review of the testimony. Suffice it to say that, with voluminous and highly conflicting evidence before it, the trial court weighed that evidence, reconciled and accounted for to its own satisfaction, the inconsistencies therein contained. Since there was substantial evidence to support the conclusions arrived at in the court below, it is not the function of an appellate tribunal to substitute its judgment for that of the trier of facts.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hearing Granted Dec. 21, 1955.*

Suit to enjoin county board and others from acting under contract for lighting of a state highway. The Superior Court, Shasta County, Albert F. Ross, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. Judgment affirmed.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This appeal involves the question of the power of a special road maintenance district to expend public funds to light state highways.

The Board of Supervisors of Shasta County, by ordinance dated January 26, 1953, created Shasta County Special Road Maintenance District No. 1, embracing an unincorporated area of Shasta County. The board acted pursuant to the provisions of Section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code, the relevant portions of which are as follows:

"The board of supervisors may form special road maintenance districts in subdivided areas of the county wholly outside of incorporated cities. Formation of said districts may be ordered by the board of supervisors when in their opinion additional road funds are necessary to properly maintain roads in specific areas of the county."

Some years before this ordinance was passed there existed in Shasta County three unincorporated local communities known as Central Valley, Project City and Pine Grove. These communities are traversed by state highways 99 and 209 and these communities and their adjacent areas were included in the boundaries of the road maintenance district. Several years before the maintenance district was formed, these unincorporated areas had formed voluntary unincorporated associations for the purpose of lighting the highways and streets in these communities. The Pacific Gas & Electric Company had installed a lighting system for the use and convenience of these areas, a major portion of the installations being located in the state highway areas after permission first acquired from the Department of Public Works. This system had been used for lighting, but the method of paying the Pacific Gas & Electric Company for its services, through collections made by and among the members of the unincorporated associations, proved unsatisfactory. That was the situation when the board of supervisors created the special road maintenance district. Having so created it, the board on behalf of the county entered into a contract with the Pacific Gas & Electric Company calling for the operation of the lighting system at district expense. The system continued to be owned by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and the county agreed to pay a certain charge for current consumed and service afforded in lighting the area.

Plaintiff, respondent herein, brought this action against the county, the members of the board of supervisors, the auditor of the county and the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, contending that the contract was unlawful, that the expenditure of any public funds pursuant to the terms thereof would be an illegal expenditure. He sought a permanent injunction prohibiting the expenditure. The cause was tried and the trial court found that the principal portion of the system lay within the rights of way of state highways 99 and 209; that the primary purpose and function of the system was to light the sections of said highways which lay within the boundaries of the maintenance district. The trial court also found that the maintenance district had been created for the sole purpose of providing street lighting within its boundaries, which street lighting was to be financed by county funds. We may note here that there is nothing in the ordinance creating the district which bears out the court's findings as to its sole purpose. Legally, the district is a road maintenance district and has all of the powers, and may serve all of the purposes, of road maintenance within its boundaries as that term is defined in the statutes, which statutes include street lighting as part of road maintenance. The trial court further found that the contract between the county and the Pacific Gas & Electric Company providing for the financing of street lighting of portions of state highways out of county funds was for that reason null and void and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction forbidding the carrying out of said contract as involving in major part the unlawful disbursement of public funds. Judgment to that effect having been entered, the defendants appeal.

The parties all agree that the appeal raises the single question as to whether a board of supervisors, as the legislative body of a county, may provide street lighting for portions of state highways lying in an unincorporated area of its county through the medium of a special road maintenance district created pursuant to the provisions of section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code.

In order to resolve the question thus presented we think it is necessary to consider the comprehensive legislative plan appearing in the Streets and Highways Code for the construction, maintenance, operation and control of public roads and ways. The Streets and Highways Code was first enacted in 1935. Stats.1935, ch. 29. It was declared to be an act to establish a streets and highways code, thereby consolidating and revising the law relating to public ways and all the appurtenances thereto. The first twenty-nine sections contain general provisions, definitions and other topics. Pertinent to this case are sections 24 and 25. Section 24 defines the term "State highway" as meaning any highway which is acquired, laid out, constructed, improved or maintained as a state highway pursuant to constitutional or legislative authorization. Section 25 defines the term "county highway" as meaning any highway which is laid out or constructed as such by the county, laid out or constructed by others and dedicated or abandoned to or acquired by the county, or made a county highway in any action for the partition of real property or otherwise pursuant to law. Pertinent also is section 27, which defines "maintenance" as follows:

"* * * '[M]aintenance' includes:

"(a) The preservation and keeping of rights of way, and each type of roadway, structure, and facility, in the safe and usable condition to which it has been improved or constructed, but does not include reconstruction or other improvement.

"(b) The necessary provision for special safety conveniences and devices.

"(c) The general utility services such as roadside planting and weed control.

"(d) The special or emergency maintenance or repair necessitated by accidents or by storms or other weather conditions, slides, settlements or other unusual or unexpected damage to a roadway, structure or facility.

"(e) Such illumination of streets, roads, highways and bridges which in the judgment of the body authorized to expend such funds is required for the safety of persons using the said streets, roads, highways and bridges."

The section concludes as follows:

"The degree and type of maintenance for each highway, or portion thereof, shall be determined in the discretion of the authorities charged with the maintenance thereof, taking into consideration traffic requirements and moneys available therefor."

Leaving the general provisions, the code next contains Division 1—devoted to state highways; Division 2—devoted to county highways; and, Division 2.5—devoted to city streets. In division 1 it is declared by section 90:

"The department [Department of Public Works] shall have full possession and control of all state highways and all property and rights in property acquired for state highway purposes. The department is authorized and directed to lay out and construct all state highways between the termini designated by law and on the most direct and practicable locations as determined by the commission."

Section 91 provides:

"The department shall improve and maintain the state highways, including all traversable highways which have been adopted or designated as state highways by the commission, as provided in this code."

Chapter 2 of the division describes "The State Highway System" and declares that: "The highways described in this chapter are state highways." Streets and Highways Code, § 230. Article 3 of that chapter contains a complete legislative designation of the state highway routes, and sections included in the article describe the various routes by giving the course and termini thereof. Without going further, it can be said that the first division of the Streets and Highways Code contains legislative recognition of and provision for a comprehensive system of state highways as distinguished from county highways and city streets, all of which state highways are declared to be under the full control and in the possession of the Department of Public Works.

Division 2 of the code concerns itself with county highways. Generally speaking, it vests the control and possession of county highways in the boards of supervisors of the several counties. Section 940 says: "Boards of supervisors shall have general supervision, management, and control of the county highways." Section 941 declares that: "Boards of supervisors shall by proper order cause those highways which are necessary to public convenience to be es-published, recorded, constructed, and maintained in the manner provided in this division."

[1-3] We think it apparent from a consideration of the various provisions in the Streets and Highways Code that the legislature has set up a comprehensive legislative plan governing construction, maintenance, control and possession of public ways; that it has classified these ways and has given to the several public agencies jurisdiction over the classifications. It has set up a system of state highways, the full possession, control, and duty to maintain which it has given to the Department of Public Works. It has provided for a system of county highways within each of the counties and has given to the various county boards of supervisors the right and the duty to control, possess, maintain and construct them. Finally, we think it is apparent that, as a part of the legislative plan, none of the several agencies may encroach upon the domain of another except where the legislature has specifically provided that it may. We think, therefore, that a board of supervisors, having created a special road maintenance district, has thereby gained no control and no right to possess, or to in any sense maintain, any section of a state highway. We think that there is nothing in the legislative plan that permits a board, having created such a district, to maintain any portion of a state highway by lighting the same any more than it can maintain such portion by doing any of the other things included within the statutory definition of the word "maintenance". As a corollary, we think that a board of supervisors, having no power to maintain any portion of a state highway, cannot expend public funds for that purpose.

We find further authority for what we have said in certain decisions of the Supreme Court. In Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, 36 Cal.2d 553, 559, 225 P.2d 522, 526, in a wrongful death action against the City of Los Angeles, arising out of an automobile accident on a portion of a state highway within the city limits, the Supreme Court, in holding that no relief could be had against the city, said:

" * * * The state department of public works has 'full possession and control' of all state highways, Streets and Highways Code, § 100, including 'State highways within cities'. Streets and Highways Code, § 204. Such highways are therefore 'under its jurisdiction' within the meaning of section 465 of the Vehicle Code. The duty to place and maintain the traffic signs and signals required by that section is expressly placed on the state department of public works. Moreover, it is that department only that determines the degree and type of maintenance including 'safety conveniences and devices' for each state highway. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 27, 100. It follows that state highways are not within the jurisdiction of local authorities to control or maintain, and are therefore not 'in their respective jurisdictions' under section 465 of the Vehicle Code."

See also Whalen v. Ruiz, 40 Cal.2d 294, 253 P.2d 457, wherein the Supreme Court held that a railroad company had no such authority as to warrant its making structural changes in the highway deck of a bridge which was part of a state highway. The court held that the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works over state highways is exclusive. The Supreme Court said further in Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 36 Cal.2d at page 559, 225 P.2d at page 526, discussing the effects that would flow from a division of control, including responsibility over state highways and the maintenance thereof:

"To hold that a state highway, which the state department of public works has 'full possession and control of,' and for which that department determines the degree and type of maintenance, including safety conveniences and devices, is 'in (the) respective jurisdictions' of local authorities would not only create a direct conflict between the two Codes, but would lead to anomalous and unreasonable results. Both subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 465 provide that the respective agencies 'shall place and maintain' the required traffic control devices. If two or more agencies had the same mandatory duty, confusion would result when they sought to discharge their duties over the same highway, and the uniformity sought to be achieved by the state highway system would be defeated. See, Atlas Mixed Mortar Co. v. City of Burbank, 202 Cal. 660, 663, 262 P. 334. Moreover, the placement and maintenance of traffic signs and signals is only a part of the general duty to maintain streets and highways in a safe and usable condition. Whether or not there is need for warning signs or signals will frequently depend on what other steps may be taken to render the highway safe and usable. In the present case, for instance, posting a warning sign would be only one of several means that might be adopted to apprise motorists of the curve ahead. Proper maintenance might eliminate the danger altogether, so that no warning would be necessary. It would be unreasonable to conclude that the Legislature intended that the limited part of maintenance involving the placement and maintenance of traffic signs and signals should be treated differently from the problem as a whole."

It is suggested that the Highway Lighting District Act, Div. 14, Part 4, Sections 19000-19312, Sts. & H.Code, which does authorize a lighting district to be formed with power to construct and maintain a lighting system to illuminate public highways, including state highways, within the district, is a legislative recognition that the possession and control of state highways is not, as to lighting, exclusive in the department. Such districts are formed by petition, election, and order. The board of supervisors, after the district is formed, is granted authority to adopt and carry out a plan for a "street lighting system" * * * by means of street lights which are set upon poles or suspended in the air." It is declared, section 19002, that the act provides an alternative system for making the improvements authorized by Part 14, which part of the code authorizes the formation of lighting districts of various kinds. We think nothing in this legislation was intended to war against the comprehensive plan for control, possession and maintenance of highways which appears in the code. On the contrary, this legislation, and other enactments such as that governing encroachment permits, section 117, Sts. & H.Code, contracts for proportionate sharing of construction expense, section 130 et seq., and the like, emphasize that, except where so expressly authorized, there shall be no overlapping of jurisdiction.

There are contentions by way of argument advanced by the appellants which we have not herein specifically treated. We think, however, that what we have said is sufficient to dispose of the single question posed by this appeal.

For the reasons we have given, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Civ. 8510.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Action to quiet title to land. Defendants, who filed cross-action for reformation of deed, claimed title to easement, and sought to quiet title of easements: The Superior Court, Tehama County, Curtiss E. Wetter, J., entered judgment quieting plaintiffs' title to land, and adjudged that defendants were owners of the easements in question and plaintiffs appealed from latter portion of judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Peck, J., held that where a party to a quiet title action shows an equitable right to have the legal title conveyed to him, the court in the exercise of its chancery powers may grant the proper relief.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇨433(4)

In action to quiet title, where the pleadings put in issue a mutual mistake of the parties in framing and executing partition deeds, parol evidence was admissible.

2. Partition ⇨9(1)

Partition deeds must be read and construed together as a single instrument in the light of the circumstances attending the execution in order to carry into effect the intent of the parties.

3. Quietling Title ⇨49

Where a party to a quiet title action shows an equitable right to have legal title conveyed to him, the court in the exercise of its chancery powers may grant the proper relief. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 738.

4. Quietling Title ⇨46

The court may finally determine as between the parties in a quiet title action all of the conflicting claims regarding any estate or interest in the property.

5. Partition ⇨8

Where cotenants by an exchange of deeds partitioned property and endeavored to reserve certain rights of way as driveway over the property so divided, the fact that mutual deeds were executed by the cotenants and each partition deed was not signed by all cotenants did not render the deeds ineffective to create the intended easement.

6. Quietling Title ⇨43

In action to quiet title, since there was an obvious mistake in the deed, which mistake was put in issue by the pleadings, and since the validity of the agreement was in dispute, evidence on issue as to whether or not defendants were bona fide purchasers when they acquired their property was properly admitted. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1856.

7. Estoppel ⇨92(3)

Where cotenants partitioned property by exchange of mutual deeds and endeavored to reserve certain rights of way as driveways over the property so divided, cotenants' successors in interest could not rely on right of way given their grantors and refuse to honor right of way reserved to the other cotenants by deeds which arose out of the same transaction.

Pugh & Webster, Red Bluff, for appellants.

Rawlins Coffman, Red Bluff, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

Plaintiffs sought to quiet their title to certain land in Tehama County, alleging that defendants claimed certain easements thereon. Defendants' cross-complaint admitted their claim and set forth two causes for affirmative relief. The first sought reformation of the deed by which they claimed title to the easements in question, and the second prayed that their title to the easements be quieted. The judgment of the court quieted plaintiffs' title and further adjudged that defendants were the owners of the easements in question. Plaintiffs now appeal from the latter portion of that judgment.

The record shows that on January 6, 1948, one Clendenning and his wife conveyed to defendants an undivided one-half interest, and to K. W. Dayton and his wife, the predecessors in interest to and grantors of the plaintiffs, the remaining one-half interest of the property here in question. On July 26, 1948, by an exchange of deeds defendants and the Daytons partitioned said property and endeavored to reserve certain rights of way as driveways over the property so divided. To obtain descriptions of the property from which to prepare the deeds, they secured the services of a land surveyor who, at the trial, testified to the instructions given him and the intentions of the parties as expressed to him. The defendants as well testified concerning the arrangements between themselves and the Daytons and produced a memorandum made at that time. Thereafter the Daytons sold their portion of the land to the plaintiffs by deed dated February 6, 1950. The deeds of July 26, 1948, by which the Daytons conveyed to the defendants their portion of the land contained a clause reserving a strip of land 40 feet in width across the property for a driveway. The easements assumed to have been created by the 1948 deeds have been in continual use by the Daytons, the defendants and the plaintiffs, together with the patrons of the businesses of each party since that date. Through error in the course call of the description, the particular reservation here in issue described a right of way over property other than that here involved. The essence of the surveyor's testimony was to the effect that the call should have read 82° 40' east instead of 89° 40' west. The subsequent deed of February 6, 1950, by which the Daytons conveyed their property to plaintiffs described the rights of way reserved by reference to the original deed.

Plaintiffs' first contention is predicated upon the primary rule in quiet title proceedings that one can recover only upon the strength of his own title rather than upon the weakness or lack of title in his adversary. They argue that findings I and II insofar as they purport to find in accordance with the evidence submitted by defendants that they are the owners of the easements in question, could find support in the record only if the deed was reformed.

[1-4] Where, as here, the pleadings put in issue a mutual mistake of the parties in framing and executing partition deeds, parol evidence is admissible. Booth v. Stow, 38 Cal.App. 191, 175 P. 705. Such deeds must be read and construed together as a single instrument in the light of the circumstances attending the execution in order to carry into effect the intent of the parties. 68 C.J.S., Partition, § 9, b, p. 16; Drake v. Tucker, 43 Cal.App. 53, 184 P. 502. Furthermore, where a party to a quiet title action shows an equitable right to have the legal title conveyed to him, the court in the exercise of its chancery powers may grant the proper relief under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Noyes v. Huffman, 41 Cal.App. 676, 183 P. 284. And, finally, as the court said in Hendershott v. Shipman, 37 Cal.2d 190, at page 194, 231 P.2d 481, at page 483, "It is now well settled that the court may finally determine as between the parties in a quiet title action all of the conflicting claims regarding any estate or interest in the property."

[5] In their second contention plaintiffs urge preliminarily that the purported partition by the defendants and the Daytons of their common property was not effective to create the intended easement therein, since each partition deed should have been executed by all four of the cotenants rather than by the separate deeds of the Daytons and defendants. In other words defendants only owned an undivided interest in the property and hence they could not create an easement in the common estate against their cotenants. We again refer to the rule heretofore noted that under circumstances where the partition is made by mutual deeds they must be read together and construed as a single instrument in order to carry into effect the intent of the parties. The case of Drake v. Tucker, heretofore cited, presented a factual situation not wholly unlike the one now before the court. There the court in construing mutual deeds relative to certain riparian rights held that since both deeds were admittedly part of the same transaction, they had to be construed together. Viewing the present situation in light of the evidence and circumstances surrounding the transaction, a like conclusion must prevail here.

[6, 7] Plaintiffs' final contention is that the court erred in admitting evidence on the issue as to whether or not they were bona fide purchasers when they acquired their property. Defendants in answer to plaintiffs' contention state that since there was an obvious mistake in the deed, which mistake was put in issue by the pleadings, and since the validity of the agreement was in dispute, under the provisions of section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such evidence was proper admitted. The trial judge who viewed the premises, in his memorandum of decision, noted that the deed from the Daytons to plaintiffs referred to the obvious error in the description; that plaintiffs had camped on or near the property prior to their acquisition thereof; that they had acquired a motel within a short distance of the property and established their residence there at or about the same time; that the evidence showed the property was used for fishing camps, docking facilities and small businesses; that to facilitate the use of the property as such, plaintiffs' predecessors had built a roadway along the reserved strip; and that plaintiffs could not on the one hand rely upon a right of way given their grantors and not honor a right of way reserved to the defendants by the deeds which arose out of the same transaction. Furthermore plaintiffs, according to the testimony, acknowledged the existence and use of the easement in question.

The judgment is affirmed.

Nov. 9, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of pimping. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Burdette J. Daniels, J., entered judgments and order denying motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Prostitution ⇨4

Evidence sustained conviction for pimping. Pen.Code, § 266h.

2. Criminal Law ⇨1170½(1)

In prosecution for pimping, introduction by prosecution during direct examination of prosecutrix, of letter, which prosecutrix had written to a policeman, and which stated that testimony given by her at preliminary examination was untrue, and which was contrary to her testimony at the trial, in order to permit prosecutrix to explain her motive in writing letter on direct examination instead of waiting until defendant introduced letter on cross-examination, was not prejudicial error. Pen.Code, § 266h.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James D. Loebl, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Chew Doon Chan was accused of four violations of section 266h, Penal Code (pimping) in that he did on four separate dates live and derive support and maintenance, in whole or in part, from the earnings of Patricia Louise Grow as a prostitute and solicited and received compensation therefor from her. It was alleged that he had previously been convicted and had served a term of imprisonment for the crime of receiving and transporting opium. He was convicted on all counts and the court found that he had not suffered the alleged prior conviction. Motion for new trial and application for probation were denied and sentences were imposed to run concurrently with each other. The appeal is from the judgments and the order denying motion for new trial. The grounds of appeal are errors of law and insufficiency of the evidence.

[1] The claim of insufficiency of the evidence does not require extended discussion. The opening brief of the appellant contains a statement of the testimony of the prosecutrix. A summary of that testimony as related by defendant clearly shows that the witness testified to facts constituting the elements of the offenses. She testified that she had come from San Francisco with one Caliva; she met appellant and he suggested her going to work for him as a prostitute; they picked up another girl named "Kitty" and went to defendant's home; they discussed the prices for prostitution; they went to a hotel and later Chan took the girls to a motel on July 22. Thereafter prosecutrix worked as a prostitute for defendant until August 11; she earned as a prostitute and turned over to defendant $504 and received back from him $252; each time she paid him money defendant would make a notation on a card and in a telephone memorandum book; Kitty worked with her during all this time. Later prosecutrix asked to be taken into custody by the police because of her fear of defendant. Another witness testified that in September he had a conversation with Chan concerning Miss Grow in which Chan mentioned that he wanted to put Miss Grow to work as a prostitute outside of town and wished the witness to supervise her work. The People introduced in evidence a book taken from defendant's premises at the time he was arrested. A Chinese-English interpreter testified that there were ten entries in the book in symbols, each consisting of a date in July and an amount of money; these totaled $504 and there was another entry "$252." On another page there were eight entries of sums of money under dates August 1 to August 10. There was testimony that when an officer took the book defendant said it was a grocery list. Defendant admitted knowing the prosecutrix, admitted having discussed prostitution with her, and asserted that she asked him to solicit for her and that he refused. He also admitted having rented quarters in the motel. He was an itinerant waiter and cook in Chinese restaurants. There was no evidence that his earnings in that employment were adequate for the support of his family. It was a reasonable inference that he derived support and maintenance, in part, from the girl's earnings. So much the worse for him if he engaged in pimping free from the urge of extreme financial distress. Although there was no direct evidence of solicitation by defendant, the circumstantial evidence was such as to create a strong inference that the men who visited prosecutrix were sent to her by the defendant. There is no merit whatever in the claim of insufficiency of the evidence to prove the offenses charged.

[2] During the direct examination of the prosecutrix there were produced by the defendant two letters written by the prosecutrix, one to the defendant apologizing for having made charges against him and the other to a Los Angeles policeman stating that the testimony she had given at the preliminary examination was untrue. Defendant objected to the introduction of the letter to the policeman; the objection was overruled and the ruling is assigned as error. Defendant argued that the letter was introduced to impeach the witness without any showing of surprise on the part of the prosecution. It was also argued that the letter was offered to rehabilitate the testimony of the witness, and that whatever the purpose the procedure was irregular and prejudicial. The letter was not offered either to impeach or rehabilitate the testimony of the witness. Anticipating that the defendant would introduce the letters in cross-examination, the People offered them in order to give the witness an opportunity to explain her motive in writing them. Ordinarily the defendant would have produced the letters in the course of cross-examination and upon redirect examination the witness would have been permitted to state her reasons for writing them. Inasmuch as the letters were contradictory of her testimony at the trial and were favorable to the defendant we do not see that the defendant suffered any prejudice through being deprived of the opportunity to use the letters in the course of the cross-examination. Moreover, the letters themselves took on added significance favorable to the defendant from the fact that the witness testified that she wrote them merely as a favor to defendant and not as a result of any other inducement. Defendant was accorded a fair trial and his appeal is without merit.

The judgments and order are affirmed.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This petition for habeas corpus is based on the contention that petitioner was convicted by the use of illegally secured evidence. There is no allegation that the point was raised before the trial court or on appeal. The sole contention is that the use of such evidence denied to petitioner "due process" of law. In People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, the Supreme Court was careful to point out that the rule involved was a rule of evidence and not a rule of constitutional law. See 44 Cal.2d at page 440, 282 P.2d at page 908. If this determination is to be questioned, it should be in the Supreme Court and not in an intermediate appellate court that is bound by Supreme Court determinations. Under the circumstances, habeas corpus may not be used to re-litigate the issue.

The petition for habeas corpus is denied.

Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16456.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 31, 1955.

Hearing Granted Dec. 28, 1955. *

Action by city against limousine and bus service operators to enjoin them from operating on street within city airport and to obtain damages for such operations contrary to exclusive license and concession granted by city board of port commissioners to another limousine service. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Donald K. Quayle, J., entered judgment in favor of two defendants, and city appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that commissioners did not have power to dedicate road as public street under common-law doctrine of dedication by implication, in view of fact that board did not follow formal proceedings for opening of public street as provided for by city charter.

Judgment reversed with directions.

* Opinion vacated 296 P.2d 333.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨1011(1)Dedication ⇨45

Question whether there has been a common-law dedication of a road as a public street is one of fact, and generally, rule that decision of trial court based upon substantial though conflicting evidence is binding on appeal applies.

2. Dedication ⇨13

Board of Port Commissioners did not have power to dedicate road as public street under common-law doctrine of dedication by implication, in view of fact that Board did not follow formal proceedings for opening of public street as provided for by charter.

3. Dedication ⇨20(1), 44

Under California law, common-law dedication of road as public street or highway by informal implied offer by owner informally accepted by public through user may be made, and both offer and acceptance may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

4. Dedication ⇨20(2)

An actual intent and offer to dedicate may be inferred from owner's long acquiescence in public use of property under circumstances which negative idea that the use was under a license.

5. Dedication ⇨41

Long continued adverse use may establish against owner a conclusive presumption of dedication.

6. Dedication ⇨20(2)

Even under rule that actual intent and offer to dedicate may be inferred from owner's long acquiescence and public use of property under circumstances which negative idea that use was under a license, the actual offer of dedication by offeror legally entitled to make the dedication is required.

7. Dedication ⇨13

Unless specifically restricted, municipality may make actual offer of dedication of land owned by it just as a private owner may, and manner in which such offer can be made will be the same in either case except insofar as mode to be used by municipality is restricted by law.

8. Dedication ⇨13

Mode of dedicating property as public street, as prescribed by municipal charter, is measure of power to dedicate, and dedication made in disregard of such mode would be unenforceable.

9. Municipal Corporations ⇨646

Exclusive mode of opening public streets in port area is prescribed in Oakland city charter provision pertaining thereto.

10. Adverse Possession ⇨8(1)

Title by prescription cannot be acquired against municipality or subdivision of state in land reserved for or devoted to some specific public use. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1007; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1238, subd. 20; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 50470.

11. Dedication ⇨39

Fact that city defended its right to make exclusive contract with limousine airport service on ground that city operated airport in proprietary, not governmental, capacity would not preclude city from asserting, in defense to argument that airport street had been dedicated to public use, that title by prescription could not be acquired against municipality in land reserved for or devoted to some specific public use. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1007; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1238, subd. 20; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 50470.

12. Automobiles ⇨71

Where Public Utilities Commission had granted defendant a certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing him to operate a passenger stage service for transportation of nonscheduled airline passengers from city airport to certain other points over and along the most appropriate public streets and highways between such points, superior jurisdiction of commission would not prevent city from giving exclusive franchise to another to perform such services, in view of fact that commission had not found that the airport road was a public street or determined that service authorized by commission would have to take place over such road. Public Utilities Code § 1033; West's Ann.St.Const. art. 12, § 23.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the City of Oakland (hereinafter called the City), from a judgment in favor of defendants Stelzner and McCoy in an action for an injunction and damages instituted by the City in relation to the operation by defendants of limousine or bus services from and on the Oakland Municipal Airport (hereinafter called the Airport), and their solicitation on the Airport of patronage for said services, allegedly in contravention of certain ordinances and regulations of the City and its Board of Port Commissioners (hereinafter called the Board), and of the exclusive license and concession granted by the Board for said services at the Airport to Fialer's Limousines, Inc. (hereinafter called Fialer's). A preliminary injunction which had been granted was vacated.

The court's findings of fact and conclusions of law are in part to the following general effect.

The City of Oakland owns the Airport, and it operates it through the Board in its proprietary capacity. Earhart Road is the principal roadway within the Airport passing the main buildings among which are the International Terminal Building, hangars and installations, and has been paved and provided with curbs by the Board. Since 1927 the main part of this road, specifically described in the findings, has been used generally by the public with the knowledge and without objection from the Board, which at no time took any action to terminate such general use. The Board has in that manner dedicated it to the public use under the common-law doctrine of dedication by implication and it is now a public street. It has not been dedicated in any formal manner. An unnamed side road of Earhart Road along the southwesterly side of the International Terminal Building and a parking and turning area in back of said building, together by the court called Area B and delineated on a map, has been used since 1947 for ground transportation service for passengers of non-scheduled airlines and the vehicles transporting these passengers for hire had access to that Area B only by revocable permits of the Board and its agents. This Area B has not been dedicated to public use either formally or by implication.

The agreement between the City in its proprietary capacity and Fialer's, granting the latter an exclusive license for certain transportation services for hire commencing November 1, 1951, is valid except insofar as it purports to accord Fialer's exclusive rights with respect to the part of Earhart Road found to be a public street. The following ordinances allegedly violated by defendants were found to be valid ordinances regulating the use of airport property held by the City in its proprietary capacity but not applicable to the public part of Earhart Road:

Port Ordinance No. 641 of January 10, 1949 among other things prohibiting the use of the Airport as a base for the carrying for hire of passengers or for any other commercial purpose without license from the Board or its Port Manager.

Port Ordinance No. 786, of September 24, 1951, prohibiting solicitation of patronage for any taxicab, limousine or airline bus service within the Airport or entering the Airport for such purpose, except when so authorized by contract.

Port Ordinance No. 835 of November 3, 1952 adding to Port Ordinance No. 812, Section 2.1 prohibiting the operation of any vehicle or bus from the Airport unless with the approval of the Board and on its condition and terms.

Section 106 of Council Ordinance No. 3083 C.M.S. of May 31, 1949 prohibiting the operation or leaving of a vehicle on private property without the express permission of the owner.

Since November 1, 1951 nobody but Fialer's has been entitled to solicit patronage for or to engage in the transportation of persons on or from the Airport in airline motor buses, taxicabs or limousines except that defendants may operate on the portion of Earhart Road found to be a public street.

Defendant Stelzner provided transportation with one limousine from March 21, 1946 to January 8, 1953, defendant McCoy with one bus from some time in 1947 to January 1953. Prior to November 1, 1951 defendants used Area B in operating their vehicles. On that date their permits were revoked and thereafter they used the portion of Earhart Road found to be a public street only. Both defendants are duly licensed by the City to operate a limousine carrying passengers for hire on the public streets of the City, which include the public portion of Earhart Road.

On January 23, 1951 defendant McCoy was granted by the Public Utilities Commission a certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing him to operate a passenger stage service for the transportation of nonscheduled airline passengers from the Airport to certain points in Oakland and San Francisco and to Treasure Island over the most appropriate streets between the points authorized. On rehearing a petition of Fialer's to vacate said order was denied and the order affirmed. Said certificate is unambiguous and authorizes defendant McCoy to use the most appropriate public streets and highways between the points authorized including the part of Earhart Road found to be a public street. Defendant McCoy is under a duty to provide a ground transportation service in accordance with the certificate obtained.

Within a year prior to the commencement of the action defendants have not committed any of the acts prohibited in the ordinances mentioned herein except on the portion of Earhart Road which is a public street. They have within that period not violated said ordinances, not interfered with the exclusive contract between the City and Fialer's or with the City's duty to provide adequate ground transportation at the Airport, not trespassed upon property in the Airport held by the City in its proprietary capacity and not created any nuisance there after November 1, 1951.

Appellant's primary contention is that no part of Earhart Road is a public street but that in its entirety it is a private road within the Airport. The City has all power over it which the Court conceded to it with respect to the Airport property held in the City's proprietary capacity. The defendants have not cross-appealed and do not attack any of the findings or conclusions of law. They do not claim more extensive rights than those recognized in the judgment, to wit the right to operate their limousine or bus services on such portion of the airfield as is a public street. Whether the part of Earhart Road involved has or has not become a public street is therefore the crucial question.

[1, 2] Appellant urges both that the evidence does not support the finding that the Board by implication dedicated Earhart Road to be a public street and that the Board lacked power so to dedicate it. Whether there has been a common law dedication is a question of fact (15 Cal.Jur.2d 387) and the general rule that the decision of the trial court based on substantial though conflicting evidence is binding on appeal applies. Diamond Match Co. v. Savercool, 218 Cal. 665, 667, 24 P.2d 783. In this case it may well be that from the absence of all restriction on the use by the public of Earhart Road, including operation of scheduled Key System buses over it, pursuant to a certificate of public convenience and necessity of the Public Utilities Commission and from the lack of any reservation of private right by the Board an inference of an intent to dedicate as a public street could reasonably be drawn, notwithstanding the fact that the purpose for which the City uses the Airport property, to wit as a terminal for extensive air transportation together with numerous connected installations and enterprises, requires the daily use of its main roadway by thousands of persons who come as licensees or invitees of the City and whose presence for the purposes of the Airport itself cannot be considered evidence of an intention or offer to dedicate it as a public street. However, we need not decide this point because we have concluded that the Board lacked power to dedicate Earhart Road in the manner found, by acquiescence in public use, without following the formal proceeding for opening of public streets provided for by section 218 of the Oakland City Charter to be stated hereafter.

[3-5] A common law dedication as a public street or highway by an informal implied offer by the owner informally accepted by the public through user is in general recognized in California and both offer and acceptance may be proved by circumstantial evidence. The function of the user by the public and the acquiescence therein by the owner in showing an offer of dedication as a public street or highway was recently analyzed in Union Transp. Co. v. Sacramento County, 42 Cal.2d 235, 240 et seq., 267 P.2d 10, and was there found to be twofold: (a) an actual intent and offer to dedicate may be inferred from the owner's long acquiescence in a public use of the property under circumstances which negative the idea that the use was under a license, (b) a long continued adverse use may establish against the owner a conclusive presumption of dedication. This latter effect of the user is in the character of prescription and the intent and offer of dedication may be constructive only.

[6] For the actual offer of dedication referred to in (a) an offeror legally entitled to make the dedication is required. See Neil v. City of Glendale, 106 Cal.App. 553, 557, 289 P. 877; whether the same capacity or authority is required with respect to the constructive dedication mentioned subd. (b) is more doubtful. See Schwerdtle v. County of Placer, 108 Cal. 589, 593, 41 P. 448; Gray v. Magee, 133 Cal.App. 653, 662, 24 P.2d 948.

corporation the mode is restricted by law, Constitution or charter. In 10 McQuillin, supra, p. 106 et seq., it is stated in general: "The legislature may prescribe the method by which the power to sell or lease or otherwise dispose of property shall be exercised, and, if applicable, the method so provided must be substantially followed. In like manner, compliance should be had with an applicable method of sale, lease or other disposition or [sic] property prescribed by a charter, or ordinance." The same rule is stated with respect to the vacating of public roads in County of San Diego v. California Water & Telephone Co., 30 Cal.2d 817, 823, 186 P.2d 124, 175 A.L.R. 747, where also an analogous rule as to contracts for the sale of municipal property is mentioned. In Miller v. McKinnon, 20 Cal.2d 83, 88, 124 P.2d 34, 37, 140 A.L.R. 570, the following general rule is quoted from Los Angeles Dredging Co. v. City of Long Beach, 210 Cal. 348, 353, 291 P. 839, 842, 71 A.L.R. 161: "It is * * * settled that the mode of contracting as prescribed by the municipal charter, is the measure of the power to contract; and a contract made in disregard of the prescribed mode is unenforceable." We hold that the same principle applies to voluntary dedication of municipal property to be a public street.

[9] In our case an exclusive mode of opening public streets in the Port Area is prescribed in section 218 of the Oakland City Charter, supra, which reads:

"Sec. 218. Whenever the Board shall determine that it is necessary to open, close, improve, alter or vacate a public street, or part of a public street within the 'Port Area,' a certified copy of the resolution so determining such necessity shall be filed by the Board in the office of the City Clerk, whereupon the City Manager and the City Council shall initiate and carry to completion the proceedings necessary to effect said proposal."

The word "whenever" in this section indicates that the mode prescribed is exclusive, the repeated use of the word "shall" in describing the procedure, that it is mandatory. Section 217 moreover prevents the City of Oakland or the Council from performing any of these acts mentioned in section 218 without the cooperation of the Board, a provision of less importance in this case as dedication by the Board was found. It is undisputed and found at least by implication that Earhart Road has not been opened as a public street in the manner prescribed by section 218, supra. Even if the Board should have had the intention and had made the implied offer to dedicate Earhart Road as a public street without substantially following the procedure of section 218, such offer would have been invalid and ineffective.

[10] It could be argued that the creation of an easement of public street by adverse user by the public as mentioned above subd. (b) without an actual intent or offer to dedicate by the City or any of its agents is not the opening of a public street by the Board or the City, but an adverse imposing of such burden to which section 218, supra, does not apply. However, such creation would be one by prescription, and no title by prescription can be acquired against any municipal corporation or subdivision of the State, at least not in land reserved for or devoted to some specific public use. (2 Cal.Jur.2d 507, § 10). In Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co. v. State, 18 Cal.2d 169, 172, 114 P.2d 331, 332, the Supreme Court quotes from Richert v. City of San Diego, 109 Cal.App. 548, 553-554, 293 P. 673, 676, as follows: "Where land held by the state or any of its subdivisions has been actually reserved for or dedicated to some specific public use, there can be no adverse holding thereof which can give title to the adverse claimant." In Bartholomew v. Staheli, 86 Cal.App.2d 844, 857, 195 P.2d 824, 832, it is stated quoting from People ex rel. State Board of Harbor Com'rs v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 P. 878;

"* * * "It is immaterial where the title—that is, the record title—is held, whether by the state at large, or by a county, or by some municipal department or other official body. There can be no adverse holding of such land which will deprive the public of the right thereto, or give title to the adverse claimant, or create a title by virtue of the statute of limitations. The rule is universal in its application to all property set apart or reserved for public use, and the public use for which it is appropriated is immaterial. The same principles which govern the adverse holding of a street, a public square, a quay, a wharf, a common, apply to the adverse holding of a schoolhouse. The public is not to lose its rights through the negligence of its agents, nor because it has not chosen to resist an encroachment by one of its own number, whose duty it was, as much as that of every other citizen, to protect the state in its rights." This rule has been often repeated in the opinions of this court. (Citing numerous California authorities.)" (Italics added by District Court of Appeal).

The rule was applied to the acquisition of an easement by prescription in Reclamation Dist. No. 833 v. American Farms Co., 209 Cal. 74, 81, 285 P. 688. With respect to public and municipal corporations the rule is contained in section 1007 of the Civil Code without even the restriction to land devoted to a public use. (2 Cal.Jur. 2d 512, § 14.) However, the use as an airport, here involved, is at any rate a public use which excludes the acquisition of rights by prescription also independent of section 1007, supra. The right of local public agencies to acquire and use property for airports, the right to levy taxes to raise funds for that purpose and the powers of the agency in connection with airports are regulated in section 50470—'74 of the Government Code. Section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure mentions, subd. 20, Airports as one of the "public uses" for which the right of eminent domain may be exercised.

The above principle is mainly applied to prevent the acquisition by prescription of private rights of specific persons in property devoted to a public use, but we are of opinion that it applies also to the acquisition of an easement of public street. The public as a whole place the control over lands devoted to a public use in the hands of certain agents (in this case the Board and the Council); those who use a roadway over such public lands are only a small segment of the general public. Such small segment should not have the power to assume control and give part of the property a use that may be injurious to the one to which the land was originally devoted and which was expressly entrusted to certain chosen or appointed agents, even if these agents were remiss in protecting said trust. Compare for a somewhat similar reasoning Union Transp. Co. v. Sacramento County, supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 244, 267 P.2d 10.

[11] Respondents contend that the City cannot rely on the above rules of public law in contesting their right to use Earhart Road as a public street because it defends its right to make the exclusive contract with Fialer's on the ground that it operates the Airport in proprietary and not in governmental capacity. We do not agree. The principle on which the City claims a right to make an exclusive transportation contract at the Airport is stated as follows in Ex parte Houston, Okl.Cr. App., 224 P.2d 281, 292. "To us it appears reasonable that the power to acquire and operate a proprietary function implies all necessary power to operate it efficiently. This thought was advanced in the Florida case of Miami Beach Airline Service v. Crandon, 159 Fla. 504, 32 So.2d 153, 155, 172 A.L.R. 1425, 1430. And there the court said: 'When a governmental entity is authorized to exercise a power purely proprietary, the law leans to the theory that it has full power to perform it in the same efficient manner as a private person would do.'" In the latter case this principle was used to uphold an exclusive contract of the same kind as that of Fialer's. It was evidently followed by the trial court in this case and is not attacked by respondents. It does not, however, follow from the recognition of the principle that a municipality acting in proprietary capacity must be allowed the powers necessary to perform it efficiently and to be free from restrictions which impede its efficiency that it must also be free from restricting provisions which do not impede its specific function, like the one restricting the manner in which it may open public streets over its lands or that it cannot rely on rules advantageous to it like the one protecting it against the acquisition of prescriptive rights by third parties. Section 218 of the Oakland Municipal Charter does not contain any restrictions indicating that it does not apply to opening of streets over lands devoted to a public use of proprietary character, and the rule excluding acquisition of prescriptive rights against municipalities at most excepts lands not devoted to any public use, either governmental or proprietary in character.

[12] Our conclusion that Earhart Road on the above grounds has not become a public street is decisive of the appeal. The certificate of public convenience and necessity of respondent McCoy orders him to conduct his operations "over and along the most appropriate public streets and highways between the points authorized." Respondent McCoy urges the superior jurisdiction of the Public Utility Commission over the bus and limousine services on Earhart Road (Section 23, Art. XII of the California Constitution; Section 1033 of the Public Utilities Code) on the basis only that Earhart Road is a public street. The order does not contain any finding that Earhart Road is a public street, or any decision that the authorized service "from the Municipal Airport" must take place over Earhart Road. It is not contended that the Public Utilities Commission has any power of regulation over private roads and no constitutional or code provision gives it such power. Compare Kuhn v. Ferry and Hensler, 91 Cal.App.2d 805, 809-810, 206 P.2d 1.

Our holding that Earhart Road has not been shown to be a public street requires reversal of the judgment appealed from but does not necessitate a new trial.

The judgment is reversed with directions to amend the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment in accordance with the opinion herein expressed.

Civ. 16404.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 2, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action by overtaken motorist against owner and driver of overtaking truck for injuries sustained when truck struck rear of motorist's automobile after motorist had stopped for stop sign. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Byrl R. Salsman, J., entered judgment on verdict for owner and driver, and motorist appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for jury.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇨136(14)

Negligence is usually a question of fact but may be one of law depending upon circumstances of the particular case.

2. Negligence ⇨136(8, 9)

In absence of conflicts in evidence or inferences to be drawn therefrom, question of existence of negligence becomes one of law.

3. Automobiles ⇨245(15)

In action by overtaken motorist against owner and driver of overtaking truck for injuries sustained when truck struck rear of motorist's automobile after motorist had stopped for stop sign, question whether, after truck driver allegedly saw motorist start up, he was justified in assuming that motorist would continue and in moving truck forward without determining whether motorist had again stopped was one of fact for jury.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(81)

In action by overtaken motorist against owner and driver of overtaking truck for injuries sustained when truck struck rear of motorist's automobile after motorist had stopped for stop sign, question whether motorist, who knew there was a vehicle immediately behind him, was justified in making second stop at stop sign without regard to whether other vehicle had started to move was for jury.

5. Automobiles ⇨245(2, 67), 246(39, 58)

Where, in personal injury action arising from collision between automobile and truck, reasonable inference could be drawn either way upon issue of truck driver's negligence and motorist's contributory negligence, question was not one of law, and giving of instructions to jury on the subject was proper.

6. Automobiles ⇨150

Generally, it is negligence, as matter of law, for motorist to fail to look ahead before proceeding.

7. Negligence ⇨16

Degree of care required in watching movements of a particular machine depends upon facts and circumstances existing at time and place of accident.

8. Automobiles ⇨146

Motorist is required to use that degree of care which would be required of a reasonably prudent driver under similar circumstances.

9. Trial ⇨255(10), 264

Where issue of contributory negligence had been raised by the pleadings, plaintiff had duty to give court instructions on such subject at opening of trial, and, if it later developed that evidence did not justify giving of such instructions, plaintiff could have requested court to disregard them. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 607a.

10. Appeal and Error ⇨216(2)

Ordinarily, before appellant can complain of lack of an instruction, he must have made request that charge be made more specific or have asked for qualifying instructions.

11. Evidence ⇨98

Party who asserts affirmative of an issue must carry burden of proving it, and, if evidence is evenly balanced on any issue, jury must find against party asserting the affirmative of such issue.

12. Appeal and Error ⇐216(2)

If plaintiff, in negligence action, desired more specific instructions on subject of burden of proof and on burden of proving contributory negligence, it was plaintiff's duty to so inform the court, and, plaintiff, who failed to do so, would not be heard to complain of instructions given. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 607a.

BRAY, Justice.

In an action for damages for personal injuries the jury brought in a general verdict in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment entered thereon.

Questions Presented.

1. Was there any evidence of contributory negligence to support the court's instructions on that subject?

2. If contributory negligence was an issue, did the court err in failing to instruct specifically concerning the burden of proof on that issue?

Evidence.

The accident occurred about 7 o'clock on a dark but dry evening in January at the intersection of Stockton and Polhemus Avenues in San Jose. At the southeast corner of the intersection there is a small island, to the right of which a feeder lane curves into Polhemus from Stockton for the use of vehicles intending to proceed easterly on Polhemus and into the underpass which is located immediately east of the intersection. This lane is 15 feet wide and at the point where it connects with Polhemus there is a stop sign and a white line on the pavement. Traffic entering Polhemus by this lane does so at approximately a 30 degree angle. The white line and stop sign are approximately one-third of the distance down the slope of the underpass.

The only witnesses to the accident were plaintiff and defendant Hill, the driver of defendant corporation's truck. With the exception of the question of whether plaintiff's car came to a second unexplained stop after having begun to move ahead into the underpass or when struck by defendant's truck was at the original stopping point, there is practically no conflict in the evidence. Plaintiff testified that as he approached the intersection from the south and was about 300 to 400 feet therefrom, he noticed in his rear view mirror the lights of a vehicle following him "quite a ways back." He gave a right hand signal, turned into the lane and stopped at the stop sign. He then saw a car coming down Polhemus from his left and waited for it to cross his path. He could see in the glare of his rear view mirror the lights of the vehicle behind him. He said, "* * * just as I got ready to—the car passed, I stopped a few seconds to let the car pass, I had my car in low gear, so I was just getting ready to stop and all at once something came behind me and—well, it hit me pretty hard, and my neck flew back and my face flew down somewhere, I don't know where, and all I remembered, I was under the underpass." He then said that he was at a dead stop and had not moved ahead at all before being hit.

Defendant Hill testified that when he first saw plaintiff's car it was stopped with the front end at the white line. Defendant stopped his truck some 5 or 8 feet behind plaintiff's car. After he had stopped and while he was watching plaintiff's car it began to move ahead. Defendant then turned to look to his left up Polhemus to see if there was any approaching traffic. There was none. As he was turning to look he let his foot off the clutch and the truck started forward. When he turned his eyes towards plaintiff's car it had stopped and he was unable to prevent his truck striking it in the rear. After the collision the front of plaintiff's car was stopped 3 to 5 feet beyond the white line.

1. Contributory Negligence.

[1-5] The sole question on this issue is whether there was any substantial evidence from which the jury could have found that plaintiff was contributively negligent. If there was it was proper to give the instruction on that subject. If there was not, it was improper. See Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183. Plaintiff contends that the fact that defendant knew plaintiff's car was in front of him and started his truck forward while looking to the left was negligence and the sole proximate cause of the accident as matters of law, and, likewise, that as a matter of law even if plaintiff started up and stopped as claimed by defendant, plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. We do not agree with either contention. Negligence, while usually a question of fact, may be a question of law. Whether it is the latter depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. If there is no conflict in the evidence or in the inferences to be drawn therefrom, the question becomes one of law. But here there is not only a conflict in the evidence but in the inferences that may be drawn therefrom. Whether under the circumstances of this case a vehicle driver, seeing the car ahead of him start up and looking to the left to see if there are cars approaching which would cross the paths of both and seeing none, is justified in assuming that the car ahead of him will continue on and in starting his vehicle without determining that the other vehicle has not stopped, is a question of fact for the jury. Likewise, the question of whether the driver of a vehicle stopped at the type of intersection here and knowing there is a vehicle immediately behind him starting to enter a clear intersection is justified in suddenly stopping without regard to whether the other vehicle has started to move, is likewise a jury question. As to both questions a reasonable inference could be drawn either way. Therefore the question is not one of law, and the court properly instructed on the subject and left it to the jury to decide.

[6] Generally it is negligence as a matter of law for the driver of a car to fail to look ahead before proceeding. However, here the defendant observed the car ahead of him starting forward and that there was nothing coming on Polhemus to cause that car to stop. As said in 7 Cal.Jur.2d p. 14: "Since it is manifestly impossible for one driving along a street to look in both directions at the same time, it ordinarily should be left to the jury to determine in each case what amount of vigilance would be required to constitute care. Usually, looking only in one direction without ascertaining whether the other direction is clear may be found to be a violation of duty. But if the driver looks first in one direction and then in the other, and sees no oncoming traffic that might affect his operations, the question of his due care should be left to the trier of the facts." Whether the fact that the first car started ahead was an invitation to defendants' truck to proceed and whether under the circumstances here, particularly the peculiar angle at which the lane debouches into the underpass and the necessity for a vigilant watch of the street ahead and to defendant's left, defendant had the right to assume, where there was no traffic to cause the lead car to stop, it would not do so, was a jury question. As said in 7 Cal.Jur.2d 14, supra: "Although the duty of ordinary care may not be satisfied in all cases by looking only once in a certain direction, ordinarily the question whether the driver should have looked or listened a second or third time before starting to cross the intersection, * * * is one of fact for the determination of the jury as one upon which ordinary minds may differ."

[7, 8] "The degree of care required in watching the movements of a particular machine depends upon the facts and circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident" and a driver is required to use that degree of care, only, which would be required of a reasonably prudent driver under similar circumstances. Samuelson v. Siefer, 62 Cal.App.2d 320, 325, 144 P.2d 879. See also Dieckmann v. Signorini, 47 Cal.App.2d 481, 118 P.2d 319, where it was held that whether a driver approaching an intersection and intending to make a left turn was negligent in not again looking to his rear after having looked some 360 feet from the intersection was a jury question.

2. Burden of Proof.

[9-12] While plaintiff offered no instruction upon the subject, he contends that the trial court's instruction on the burden of proof was not sufficient and that the court should have instructed in so many words that the burden of proving contributory negligence was on the defendant. The court on its own motion gave the usual general instruction that the party who asserts the affirmative of an issue must carry the burden of proving it and that if the evidence were evenly balanced on any issue the jury must find against the party asserting the affirmative of that issue. While the court gave a brief definition of contributory negligence, stating that one who is guilty of such may not recover from another for the injury suffered, it did not refer to the subject again, although on two occasions, in addition to considerable instruction on the question of negligence of the defendants, it specifically stated that a verdict should be rendered against the defendants if their negligence appeared. In Abelseth v. City and County of San Francisco, 129 Cal.App. 552, 19 P.2d 53, it was held that an offered instruction that the burden of proving contributory negligence rested on the defendants should have been given because a substitute instruction on the subject was not given. Here, however, the court did give an instruction on the burden of proof which covered the subject generally. If plaintiff desired a more specific instruction he should have offered it. As he points out in his brief, section 607a Code of Civil Procedure requires counsel, "before the first witness is sworn," to deliver to the court "all proposed instructions to the jury covering the law as disclosed by the pleadings." Here, the issue of contributory negligence was raised by the pleadings, so that it was plaintiff's duty to give the court instructions on that subject at the opening of the trial. If it had developed that the evidence did not justify the giving of such instructions the plaintiff could then request the court to disregard them. We see no reason why the rule stated in Ornales v. Wigger, 35 Cal.2d 474, 478, 218 P.2d 531, should not be applied. "Ordinarily, before an appellant may complain of the lack of an instruction, he must have made a request that the charge be made more specific, or ask for qualifying instructions." The instruction given by the court was a correct one as to the definition of contributory negligence. Likewise the instructions on burden of proof were correct. If plaintiff desired them to be made more specific it was his duty to so inform the court. (See cases cited in 24 Cal.Jur. 796, and 10 Cal.Jur. 10 Yr.Supp. 659.) In Ramos v. Service Bros., 118 Cal.App. 432, 5 P.2d 623, 624, it was held that if the appellant desired a definition of the words "preponderance of evidence" used in the court's instructions it was appellant's duty to offer an instruction on the subject. To the same effect, concerning "prima facie evidence", see Hamm v. San Joaquin, etc., Canal Co., 44 Cal.App.2d 47, 111 P.2d 940, 947; "along the shoulders of the highway", Mecham v. Crump, 137 Cal.App. 200, 204, 30 P.2d 568, 570; and "highest degree of care and diligence", Bezera v. Associated Oil Co., 117 Cal.App. 139, 144, 3 P.2d 622, 623. See also Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., 212 Cal. 36, 44, 297 P. 884, where the instruction given by the court on the doctrine of last clear chance failed to include one of the elements usually in such instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 5052.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Nov. 3, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action to recover for injuries sustained by girls' soft ball team's chaperone when she was struck, while assisting girls in pregame warm-up, by ball thrown by team member. The Superior Court, Orange County, Robert Gardner, J., granted a motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that in view of the only evidence in the record with respect to negligence, the court had been justified in finding that plaintiff had assumed the risk naturally involved in taking her position on the field of play.

Affirmed.

1. Theaters and Shows ⇨6(18)

The risk of being struck by batted or thrown balls is one of natural risks assumed by spectators attending ball game.

2. Theaters and Shows ⇨6(37)

To exempt girls' soft ball team's chaperone from effect of assumption of risk rule with regard to injuries sustained when she was struck by ball thrown by team member during a "warm-up" period preceding a game, there would have to be substantial evidence of negligence on part of team member involved.

3. Evidence ⇨5(2)

It is well known that in warm-up period preceding ball game balls are batted and thrown about, that several balls may be in use at the same time, and that there is usually a large amount of general activity.

4. Theaters and Shows ⇨6(37)

In action to recover for injuries sustained by girls' soft ball team's chaperone when she was struck while assisting girls in pregame warm-up, by ball thrown by team member, there was no such substantial evidence of negligence on part of team member involved as would be sufficient to exempt chaperone from effect of assumption of risk rule.

5. Theaters and Shows ⇨6(37)

In action to recover for injuries sustained by girls' soft ball team's chaperone when she was struck, while assisting girls in pregame warm-up, by ball thrown by team member, there was no such substantial evidence of negligence on part of team manager in failing, if he did, to instruct members of team to shout warning when anyone was in way, as would exempt chaperone from effect of assumption of risk rule.

6. Master and Servant ⇨6

In action to recover for injuries sustained by girls' soft ball team's chaperone when she was struck, while assisting girls in pregame warm-up, by ball thrown by team member, there was insufficient evidence of agency, employment, or right of control over activities of team member involved, or team coach, to have justified holding liable for chaperone's injuries the manufacturing corporation whose name appeared on blouses of team members or the nonprofit charitable corporation through which the manufacturer indirectly contributed to support of team.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff on July 24, 1952, while she was on a baseball field acting as chaperone for a girls' soft ball team, known as "The Pirates." During a "warm-up" period, preceding a game, a member of this team threw a ball which struck the plaintiff on the head. This action was based on the theory of respondeat superior, it being claimed that the four defendants sponsored and had the right to control this team. A motion for a nonsuit was granted, and the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment which followed.

The complaint alleged that each of the four defendants, Nutrilite Products, Inc., Nutrilite Foundation, B. P. Kids, Inc., and Boys' Club of Buena Park, is a corporation with its principal place of business in Orange County; that on July 24, 1952, these corporations owned and operated a baseball team in the vicinity of Buena Park known as "The Pirates", one of whose players was Bessie Baker; that on said day Bessie Baker was the agent and employee of these four corporations and was acting within the scope of said agency and employment; that on said day the plaintiff was present at a certain school playground, at which place this team was to engage in a baseball game; that on said day Bessie Baker negligently and unlawfully threw a baseball; that these defendants negligently and unlawfully trained, managed and controlled the activities of Bessie Baker; and that as a direct and proximate result of such negligence said baseball hit and struck the plaintiff's head, causing the injuries complained of.

B. P. Kids, Inc. was a nonprofit corporation which promoted youth activities in Buena Park. Among other things it sponsored some ten or twelve soft ball teams for children from 10 to 18 years of age. These teams were managed by Raymond Thomas, who was Director of Recreation for B. P. Kids, Inc. and whose salary was paid from its general fund. B. P. Kids, Inc. is now defunct and has no assets, its successor being the Boys' Club of Buena Park. Nutrilite Products, Inc. is a manufacturing corporation which had made charitable contributions to the Nutrilite Foundation, a nonprofit charitable corporation. Nutrilite Foundation also had received donations from other individual donors. B. P. Kids, Inc. received contributions from Nutrilite Foundation and also from other sources, including the Community Chest, local merchants, Knotts Berry Farm, a newspaper, and various individuals. B. P. Kids, Inc. also carried on various activities to raise money for its general fund, including dancing and other forms of entertainment. Nutrilite Foundation had at times been the largest single contributor to the B. P. Kids, Inc.

One of the teams sponsored by B. P. Kids, Inc. was "The Pirates", a soft ball team for girls under the age of 18 years. Blouses worn by the players on this team had the word "Nutrilite" sewed on the back. These blouses were ordered by Mr. Thomas under instructions from the board of directors of B. P. Kids, Inc., which consisted of fifteen members. This action was taken by that board in appreciation of the amounts contributed by Nutrilite Foundation to youth activities. The money to pay for these uniforms came from the general fund of B. P. Kids, Inc., and the board of directors of B. P. Kids, Inc. had not requested or received any authorization from Nutrilite Foundation or Nutrilite Products, Inc. to put the word "Nutrilite" on these blouses.

The plaintiff was secretary and treasurer of the Orange Empire Girls Soft Ball League, in which "The Pirates" were playing. She testified that Mr. Thomas acted as coach for the team and that she acted as chaperone, going with the girls to the games and seeing that they did not get into trouble. On this occasion, she went into the outfield with a group of seven or eight girls to whom balls were being batted for the purpose of "warming up". Her job as chaperone was on a voluntary basis. It was not usually her custom to assist the girls in warming up, and on this occasion she was not requested to do so. The balls were being batted from a position along the first base line to the girls who were some 100 or 110 feet distant in the outfield. A ball was hit and the plaintiff saw it caught by Miss Baker. The plaintiff testified that after seeing Miss Baker catch the ball she looked around to see if there was another ball coming from some other direction. About that time Miss Baker threw the ball back toward the batter, and the ball struck the plaintiff. Miss Baker testified that it was the custom when she got a ball that was knocked to the outfield in these warm-ups to throw it back toward the batter; that this is what she did on this occasion; that besides Miss Mann there were seven or eight of "us girls" between her and the batter; that when she threw she intended the ball to go over the heads of these girls, intending it to land between where the girls were and the batter; that the ball, however, went up in the air at an angle and then came down; and that she knew that the plaintiff was in the direction in which she was throwing, but did not know that the plaintiff would "happen to be in the particular place she was". The plaintiff testified that she had played soft ball since she was eight years old and was familiar with the game; that it was customary for a team to warm up before a game; that she knew that balls would be batted around and thrown around during a warm-up; that she did not know that a ball would be thrown so close as to endanger her, because she had been taught that a warning such as "ball up" should be yelled before a player threw a ball to the batter; that she had heard the girls on this team give such a warning, "not every one of them, but the majority of them"; and that Miss Baker did not give such a warning. She also testified that she knew that when balls were thus being batted out the balls would be thrown back in; that she was standing about in a line between Miss Baker and the batter when this ball was thrown; that she knew that Miss Baker would throw the ball back; and that she turned her head away after she saw her catch the ball. Miss Baker testified that she had been a member of this team for two months and had never been told to give such a warning before throwing a ball. Mr. Thomas testified that "The Pirates" was the only girls' team that had "Nutralite" on their uniforms; that he had told the girls that when another person was in the way the ball should be thrown on a direct line, about ten feet high and with as little arc as possible; that the girls usually yelled "heads up" or "watch out" when they saw that anyone was in the way; and that he could not recall having instructed them to do so.

The appellant contends that the evidence does not show, as a matter of law, that she assumed the risk; and that there was sufficient evidence of the existence of a relationship of sponsor or employer between the Nutralite defendants and "The Pirates" team to require the question of respondeat superior to be submitted to the jury. With respect to the assumption of risk the appellant concedes the usual rule relating to a spectator or participant, as found in such cases as Quinn v. Recreation Park Ass'n, 3 Cal.2d 725, 46 P.2d 144, and Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club, 99 Cal.App.2d 484, 222 P.2d 19, but argues that these rules are not applicable here since this case is based on the negligence of a player and the doctrine of respondeat superior. It is argued that one does not assume the risk of another's negligent conduct, citing Bee v. Tungstar Corp., 65 Cal.App.2d 729, 151 P.2d 537; Muskin v. Gerun, 46 Cal.App.2d 404, 116 P.2d 105, and Martin v. Clinton Const. Co., 41 Cal.App.2d 35, 105 P.2d 1029, 106 P.2d 629, and also that the appellant cannot be charged with assumption of the risk since she did not know that a ball would be thrown so close to her as to become a danger. It is argued that the appellant was unaware of her peril; that the injury occurred during a warm-up period rather than an actual game; that Miss Baker was negligent in attempting to return the ball from a position twelve feet to the rear of the appellant without giving a warning, and in attempting to throw the ball in a manner which she knew exposed those in front of her to an unreasonable risk of harm; and that the appellant was justified in expecting that a warning would be given before the ball was thrown. It is argued that a distinction is to be made between the intent and the result; that in any game a certain margin of error is expected; that it is expected that the intent of the player will be to attempt to perform his feat without creating an unreasonable risk to others; that if the intent is proper the error will not be one of negligence, but if the intent is one which may be considered an improper exercise of care and reckless disregard of the safety of others, the error amounts to negligence; that the testimony justifies the inference that Miss Baker intended to throw just over the heads of the girls to a spot in front of the batter, which she had been trained to do; that this constituted negligence; that knowing the likelihood of inaccuracy a reasonable method of returning the ball would have been to intend to throw it in a high arc well over the heads of those in between the thrower and the batter; and that the evidence was sufficient to require the submission of the issues of negligence and assumption of the risk to the jury. With respect to the liability of Nutrilite Products, Inc. and Nutrilite Foundation, it is argued that the evidence shows that these corporations had the right to control the activities of B. P. Kids, Inc., whether or not they exercised that right; that one of the owners of Nutrilite Products, Inc. had taken a large part in securing for Mr. Thomas his job as director of recreation for B. P. Kids, Inc.; that certain officers of Nutrilite, Inc. attended meetings of the board of directors of B. P. Kids, Inc. during 1952; that having the word "Nutrilite" on the uniforms used by "The Pirates" team was of great benefit to Nutrilite Products, Inc. by way of advertising; and that the appellant's grandmother testified that Mr. Thomas had told her that one of the officers of Nutrilite Products, Inc. had agreed to furnish the uniforms on the condition the word "Nutrilite" would be put on them. It is argued that this case is similar in principle to the case of Bonetti v. Double Play Tavern, 126 Cal.App.2d Supp. 848, 274 P.2d 751.

[1] The general rule is well established that the risk of being struck by batted or thrown balls is one of the natural risks assumed by spectators attending a ball game, in the absence of a sufficient showing that ordinary care was not exercised by the management. The rules established in that connection should be much more applicable where the injured person goes on the field of play and is, in effect, in the position of a participant. The appellant here assumed such a position with full knowledge of the natural and inherent risks involved. The situation here differs materially from that in Bonetti v. Double Play Tavern, 126 Cal. App.2d Supp. 848, 274 P.2d 751, where the victim was an outsider, there was a strong showing of negligence, and adequate proof of agency.

[2-4] Conceding the usual rule that one does not assume the risk of another's negligent conduct, substantial evidence of such negligence is required in such a case as this. We find no substantial evidence of negligence on the part of Miss Baker which would be sufficient to exempt the appellant from the effect of the assumption of risk rule. There is no evidence that she attempted to throw this ball in a manner which she knew exposed those in front of her to an unreasonable risk of harm, and all of the evidence is to the contrary. We see no material difference because this accident occurred during a warm-up period rather than an actual game. It is well known that in such a period balls are batted and thrown about, several balls may be in use at the same time, and there is usually a large amount of general activity. In a warm-up, as in a game, balls are thrown quickly and with speed and, inevitably, they do not always follow the path the thrower intended. All of these facts were well known to the appellant, who concedes that in such a case the intent of the player is of the greatest importance, that a certain margin of error is to be expected, and that if the intent is proper the error will not be one of negligence. There is no evidence that the intent of Miss Baker on this occasion included any reckless disregard for the safety of others. There is a conflict as to whether she caught the ball or chased it on the ground, and as to how far behind the appellant she was when the ball was thrown, and the only inference justified by the evidence is that she acted in good faith and honestly attempted to return the ball toward the batter in the usual manner. This is the normal and usual conduct to be expected in such a case and, as usual in a ball game and more frequently in a warm-up, such balls have to be thrown over the heads of other participants. While there is evidence that a warning was sometimes called out before returning such a ball this was not always done, and there is no evidence that Miss Baker should have known that it was necessary in this instance. A warning would have been unnecessary if the ball had gone as she intended it to do. The appellant testified that she saw Miss Baker catch the ball and, knowing that it would be thrown back, turned her head in another direction. Miss Baker returned the ball, as the appellant knew she was expected to do, and the evidence indicates merely that an unintentional error occurred, the sort of mistake which naturally and frequently occurs in any ball game or warm-up.

[5] In view of all the circumstances it cannot be held that negligence appears on the part of Thomas, as an agent of B. P. Kids, Inc. in failing, if he did, to instruct the members of the team to shout a warning when anyone was in the way. He had instructed them to throw the ball about ten feet high in such a case, which would be sufficient in the ordinary case, and this is in accord with the usual and well-known practice. Quick play is expected, if not essential, in a warm-up period, a warning would not be necessary except in unusual cases and, viewed as a whole, we cannot regard the evidence as sufficiently substantial to have supported a finding of negligence. It may be observed, however, that in any event any possible finding of negligence would have applied only to the defendant B. P. Kids, Inc. as the employer of Thomas. It rather conclusively appears from the record that the appellant is not interested in obtaining any judgment against B. P. Kids, Inc., and that there is no evidence which would support a judgment against the Boys' Club of Buena Park. In view of the only evidence in the record with respect to negligence, the court was justified in finding that the appellant assumed the risk naturally involved in taking her position on this field of play.

[6] With respect to Nutrilite Products, Inc. and Nutrilite Foundation, we find no evidence in the record which would have supported a finding that Miss Baker was an agent or employee of these corporations, or that either of these corporations had the right to control the activities of B. P. Kids, Inc. or, in turn, of Mr. Thomas or of Miss Baker. Aside from one piece of hearsay there is no evidence that either of these corporations had anything to do with the placing of the name "Nutrilite" on these uniforms, and there is no evidence that the presence of that name gave them any right of control. If, as argued, the evidence justifies the inference that they must have known that this had been done and that they derived some advertising value therefrom, this was not sufficient to show that a right of control existed. The evidence conclusively shows that neither of these corporations furnished or paid for these uniforms. While there was evidence that Nutrilite Foundation was a substantial contributor to the civic program carried on by the B. P. Kids, Inc. it was only one of such contributors, and the fact that certain persons connected with these corporations at times took an interest in the civic activities being conducted by B. P. Kids, Inc. shows no more than a commendable interest on the part of those individuals in the youth activities of the community. All of these factors taken together fall far short of showing such a right of control over the activities of B. P. Kids, Inc., or of Miss Baker, as would be necessary in order to impose liability upon these corporations for anything that here occurred, under the doctrine of respondeat superior. If the contrary were to be held, under such facts as here appear, it would be unsafe for any individual or corporation to make contributions to any such charitable work or to permit any expression of appreciation coming from the recipients of the favor thus conferred. The evidence received was not sufficiently substantial to require the court to submit these various issues to the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant Franchise Tax Board in an action brought to recover franchise taxes paid by plaintiff under protest. The franchise taxes so paid are attributed to George F. Getty, Inc., a Delaware corporation, hereinafter generally referred to as the taxpayer. Appellant, Pacific Western Oil Corporation, another Delaware corporation, is the successor in interest to the taxpayer.

The taxes relate solely to income received by the taxpayer and a predecessor corporation, Getty, Inc., at their offices in Jersey City, New Jersey, from intangible assets (stocks, bonds and notes) located outside of California. The controversy centers around the propriety of including, in the measure of the franchise tax imposed by California, income received by the taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., and its predecessor, Getty, Inc., from these various intangible assets. The income was included in the measure of the franchise tax because, according to the commissioner's contentions, the commercial domicile of the taxpayer and of Getty, Inc., was in the State of California and the security holdings of these corporations were related to and useful in the business activities carried on by them in this state. The issues presented by the appeal relate primarily to the location of the commercial domicile of the taxpayer and of Getty, Inc., and the relationship of their security holdings to their operations in the production and sale of petroleum.

The appellant, Pacific Western Oil Corporation, is a Delaware corporation which on May 31, 1946, succeeded by merger to the assets and liabilities of George F. Getty, Inc., the taxpayer. George F. Getty, Inc., was formed under the laws of the State of Delaware on December 30, 1936. This corporation succeeded under an agreement of consolidation to the assets and liabilities of three corporations, namely: George F. Getty, Incorporated, a California corporation; George F. Getty Oil Company, a Delaware corporation; and George F. Getty Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation. On August 31, 1937, George F. Getty, Inc., also succeeded by merger to the assets and liabilities of Getty, Inc., a Delaware corporation.

Director Meetings Before and After Merger

For many years prior to June of 1936, all the meetings of stockholders and directors of the corporations which were parties to the consolidation were held in California. Between the latter part of June, 1936 and the date of consolidation, meetings of stockholders and directors of George F. Getty Oil Company and George F. Getty Petroleum Corporation were held in the State of New Jersey. In the case of George F. Getty, Incorporated, such meetings were held in California until the date of consolidation on December 30, 1936. In the case of Getty, Inc., the meetings of shareholders and directors were held in California during the period March 1, 1934, through June 4, 1936. After June 26, 1936, to the date of the merger on August 31, 1937, the meetings of stockholders and directors of Getty, Inc., were held in New Jersey. The meetings of the directors and stockholders of taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., were held in New Jersey during the period here in controversy.

In the period between January 1, 1936, and June of 1936, Mr. Emil Kluth, who resided in California, was president of Getty, Inc., and of the three corporations which were consolidated to form George F. Getty, Inc. During June of 1936, Mr. Kluth was succeeded as president of all of the companies, except George F. Getty, Incorporated, by Mr. Harold Rowland who resided in New Jersey. Mr. Kluth remained president of George F. Getty, Incorporated, until the date of the consolidation in December of 1936.

Income from Intangibles

The source of the intangible income here involved was primarily dividends on stock held by George F. Getty, Inc., and Getty, Inc., in various oil companies. In addition, a portion of the income was received as a result of sales of Tide Water Associated Oil Company stock and Pacific Western Oil Corporation stock and from the sale of Pacific Western notes. Finally, a portion of the income consisted of interest on Pacific Western Oil Corporation notes and interest on German bonds. The income from intangibles for the period 1937 through 1939 was as follows:

Dividends	$2,061,332.50
Interest	327,911.26
Profit on sales of stocks and notes	351,078.11
Making a total of	$2,740,321.87

The dividends were received primarily from Tide Water Associated Oil Company and Pacific Western Oil Corporation. Additional dividends were received from Minnehoma Oil & Gas Company and Richfield Oil Corporation.

How the Intangibles Were Acquired

On December 31, 1939, George F. Getty, Inc., held 372,454 shares of Tide Water Associated Oil Company stock. All the shares of Tide Water Associated Oil Company stock held by George F. Getty, Inc., were received at the time of its formation from its predecessor corporation, George F. Getty, Incorporated, or from Getty, Inc., at the time of its merger with the taxpayer on August 31, 1937. Neither the taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., nor Getty, Inc., purchased any shares of Tide Water Associated Oil Company stock in the years 1937, 1938 and 1939. No shares of Tide Water Associated Oil Company stock had been purchased by George F. Getty, Incorporated, after January 1, 1934. Getty, Inc., had not acquired any shares of Tide Water stock after June 25, 1935. On December 31, 1939, George F. Getty, Inc., held 679,019 shares of Pacific Western Oil Corporation stock. Of these shares, approximately

6,200 were purchased by George F. Getty, Inc., in the period June 7, 1939 to August 31, 1939. All of the remainder of the Pacific Western stock was acquired by George F. Getty, Inc., from George F. Getty Oil Company upon the consolidation on December 30, 1936, or from Getty, Inc., upon the merger of August 31, 1937, or from Minnehoma Oil & Gas Company on its liquidation in December of 1938. None of the shares received from George F. Getty Oil Company, Getty, Inc., or Minnehoma Oil Company had been purchased by any of these corporations after March 20, 1935. George F. Getty, Incorporated, a predecessor corporation, had acquired 643,664 shares of stock of Minnehoma Oil Company in February of 1933 and 2,270 shares of Minnehoma Oil & Gas Company stock in April of 1934. Upon the consolidation, George F. Getty, Inc., succeeded to these shares of Minnehoma stock. No additional Minnehoma stock was acquired by George F. Getty, Inc., during the period here in controversy. In 1937, George F. Getty, Inc., received a small amount of Richfield Oil Corporation stock which produced a total of $259.50 in dividends. This stock was received in satisfaction of a claim of a predecessor corporation against Richfield Oil Corporation. All the German bonds held by George F. Getty, Inc., were received from Getty, Inc., at the time of the merger on August 31, 1937; of the 666,000 German bonds held by George F. Getty, Inc., on December 31, 1939, approximately 18,000 were acquired by Getty, Inc., during the period here in controversy. George F. Getty, Inc., owned stock in two other corporations, Santa Fe Investment Company and the Getty Realty Corporation. No income derived from either of these corporations is here in controversy. George F. Getty, Inc., received 200,000 shares of stock in the Santa Fe Investment Company from J. Paul Getty on July 27, 1938, in exchange for a $236,420 note of Pacific Western Oil Corporation. Getty Realty Corporation, a New York corporation, was organized by the taxpayer to own and operate the Hotel Pierre in New York City. George F. Getty, Inc., purchased 500 shares of Getty Realty Corporation stock on October 11, 1938 for $50,000. This represented all the outstanding stock of Getty Realty Corporation. In 1938 the taxpayer loaned Getty Realty Corporation $2,-310,100.

Payrolls and Employees

In 1937 taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., had 496 employees, of whom an average of 463 were employed in California; out of a total payroll of $1,066,638.53, California employees received $993,933.72. During the period here in controversy, George F. Getty, Inc., had four employees in the New Jersey office of that company. These were Mr. Rowland, Mr. Krug and two secretaries. These employees in the New Jersey office worked for a number of other corporations as well as for George F. Getty, Inc.

Records

At the Los Angeles office of George F. Getty, Inc., the assistant secretary of that company and five other employees were engaged in keeping the accounting records of the taxpayer. The general ledger of the company and the detailed accounting records with relation to oil and gas production were kept at the Los Angeles office. The financial and operating statements of the taxpayer were prepared in the Los Angeles office and forwarded to New Jersey. The annual reports were prepared by the assistant secretary in the Los Angeles office. Each of the offices of the taxpayer kept its own records of cash, receipts, and disbursements which were sent to Los Angeles to be collated and entered into the final operating statement. The accounting records kept by the New Jersey office of the taxpayer consisted of the cash receipts and disbursements book, the stock records of the company, and a record of activities relating to the investments and financing of the company.

Salaries of Officers

During 1939, Mr. Rowland received a total salary of $6,770, of which $6,415 was paid to him as vice-president, treasurer, and director of Pacific Western Oil Corporation, and $255 was paid for his work as president and director of the taxpayer. He also received $100 as vice-president and director of Mission Corporation. During 1939, Mr. Emil Kluth, vice-president of the taxpayer, received a total salary of $11,300, of which half was charged to the taxpayer and half to Pacific Western Oil Corporation. Mr. H. M. Macomber, another vice-president of the taxpayer, received a total salary of $9,700, of which $6,466.62 was charged to Pacific Western Oil Corporation and the remainder was charged to the taxpayer.

Oil Business in California

During the year 1937, the oil, gas, and gasoline sales of the taxpayer in California amounted to $1,425,659.23, while sales in other states amounted to $258,716.46. In 1938, California sales of the taxpayer were $1,533,061.05; sales in other states were $231,101.41. In 1939, the taxpayer's sales in California amounted to $1,435,517.95; sales in other states totaled $232,761.54. In 1937, Getty, Inc., made sales of oil, gas, and gasoline in the sum of $161,696.77; all of its sales were made in California. In 1937, the taxpayer produced a total of 2,181,043 barrels of oil, of which 1,810,660 were produced in California. In 1938, its total oil production was 2,095,648 barrels, of which 1,789,559 barrels were produced in California. In 1939, the total oil production of the taxpayer was 1,959,113 barrels, of which 1,657,470 were produced in California.

Fixed Assets

At the time of the formation of the taxpayer in December of 1936, the total net fixed assets of the corporation in California were valued at $592,166.81. On December 31, 1939, the value of the net fixed assets in California was $1,236,406.19. The value of net fixed assets in other states was $499,066.17 on December 31, 1936, and $534,002.13 on December 31, 1939. At the time of the merger, the value of the oil properties of Getty, Inc., in California was $234,418.87, and in other states, $2,681.04.

Oil Income

The taxpayer claimed net losses on its California Franchise Tax returns for 1937 and 1938; and reported a net income of $26,244.02 on its 1939 return. However, the revised net income to be attributed to California for franchise tax purposes, by virtue of the taxpayer's oil operations during the period here involved, was as follows:

For 1937	$304,577.01
For 1938	185,721.20
For 1939	152,214.67

Returns

The federal income tax returns of George F. Getty, Inc., for the years 1937, 1938, and 1939 were filed in Los Angeles, California. By Section 536, Subdivision 2, of the Internal Revenue Code, these returns are to be made to the collector of the district in which is located the principal place of business of the corporation.

Taxes by Other States

No other state than California has attempted to impose a tax on, or measured by, the income from intangibles here in controversy. (In this connection, it should be stated that the taxpayer contends this factor is the by-product of an exemption clause in the New Jersey franchise tax laws which enabled the corporation to be exempt from New Jersey taxes; and that it does not mean that because no tax was collected by New Jersey, that state thereby indicated in any way that the same income here taxed could not properly be taxed by New Jersey save for the express exemption.) Neither the taxpayer nor Getty, Inc., paid ad valorem property taxes to any state on the intangibles here in controversy.

Business in State of Creation

The taxpayer did not engage in any business activities in Delaware, the state of its creation, at any time during the period December 30, 1936 to and including December 31, 1939. Likewise Getty, Inc., did not engage in any business activity in Delaware at any time during the period January 1, 1937 to and including August 31, 1937, the date of its merger with the taxpayer.

Ownership of Taxpayer's Stock

Mr. J. Paul Getty owned all the stock of the taxpayer, either individually or as a trustee. During the years 1937, 1938 and 1939, the legal domicile of Mr. J. Paul Getty was in California, but he leased, and when not traveling, lived in a penthouse in

New York City and used the corporate offices in New Jersey.

There is no substantial disagreement between the parties hereto as to the existence of the foregoing facts. The controversy centers around inferences which may be drawn from those facts. The trial court found that the taxpayer and Getty, Inc., had their "commercial domicile" in California during the tax period; that the stockholdings of the taxpayer and Getty, Inc., in other oil companies were connected with the taxpayer's and Getty, Inc.'s petroleum business and were useful in advancing the interests of the taxpayer and Getty, Inc., in the petroleum business. The trial court therefore concluded that inclusion of the income from the intangibles owned by the taxpayer and Getty, Inc. during the taxing period in the measure of the franchise tax assessed against the taxpayer was valid and that the taxpayer was entitled to no relief in this action.

The concept of a commercial domicile of a corporation has been recognized in this state in the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. McColgan, 68 Cal.App.2d 48, 156 P.2d 81. In that case, income which the Southern Pacific Company, a Kentucky corporation, received from intangible assets was included in the measure of the tax imposed on the company under the provisions of the California Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act, St.1929, p. 19, § 1 et seq. as amended. There the court determined that the Southern Pacific Company, although not incorporated in California, had a "commercial domicile" in this state and also determined that California had the power to tax income received by the Southern Pacific Company from its intangible assets. The statutory provisions which the court construed in the Southern Pacific Co. case were, for the purposes of this case, the same as those in effect during the greater part of the period here involved. Although the statute was amended during the tax-paying period here in controversy, those amendments do not affect the applicability of the rule of Southern Pacific Co. case to the issues presented in this case.

In the Southern Pacific Co. case, the taxpayer contended that income from its intangibles could not legally be a part of the measure of its tax, under the California Franchise Tax Act, because such income was produced by the taxpayer's stockholding activities and investment activities in connection therewith, which activities, in turn, constituted a separate business from its operations otherwise; and that, therefore, New York, though not the state of its incorporation, was yet its "commercial domicile" with respect to such activities. Here, the taxpayer contends that its activities in respect of its intangibles constituted a separate business from its petroleum business and that not Delaware, the state of its incorporation, but New Jersey, where it maintained offices and where its directors met and where its intangible assets were physically held, was its "commercial domicile" with respect to such activities. Conversely, the taxpayer insists that its petroleum business conducted in California and for most of the tax-paying period also in the mid-continental field, was a business separate and apart from its intangible assets activities. The holding in the Southern Pacific Company case is not challenged as a rule of law. The contention of the taxpayer is that the rule has no application under the facts disclosed by the record here. Says the appellant: "* * * [T]his appeal, as did the trial court's determination below, depends upon the factual inferences, the ultimate findings of facts and the legal conclusions to be made from such inferences and findings in a record where there is no real dispute as to the detailed facts."

Appellants claim it conducted an investment business. In support of its claim that, during the taxing period involved, taxpayer was engaged in a separate business, distinct from its oil production business, consisting of the handling, the investing, and the managing of its intangible assets, taxpayer points to the following matters appearing in the testimony:

At the time of its organization, taxpayer acquired oil properties in the State of California carried on its books at $592,166.81 and oil properties in other states carried on its books at $499,066.17, or a total of $1,091,232.98. Current assets were valued at $882,880.62, prepaid and deferred charges at $34,353.61 and total investments were carried on its books at $8,355,871.39. These investments included the following:

	Book Value
316,000 shares Pacific Western Oil Corp.	$2,130,493.57
337,700 shares Tide Water Associated Oil Co.	2,240,545.00
645,934 shares Minnehoma Oil & Gas Co.	1,614,835.00
Notes of Pacific Western Oil Corp.	2,391,997.82
Stock Purchase Options	45,000.00

For purposes of the consolidation, a valuation was made of the various assets as of December 30, 1936. This valuation reflected a total value of $4,500,000 for all the oil properties in California and other states, as compared with a total value of $21,913,216.32 for the intangibles. On August 31, 1937, taxpayer acquired by statutory merger all the assets and liabilities of Getty, Inc., a Delaware corporation, qualified to do business in New Jersey and California. At the time of the merger, Getty, Inc., carried on its books California oil properties at a net cost of $234,418.87 and oil properties outside of the State of California at $2,681.04, or a total of $237,099.91. In addition, it had current assets of $63,319.03 and investments which it carried on its books at a cost of $2,779,956.26. A valuation of these assets for the purpose of the merger showed the oil properties of Getty, Inc., were worth $237,099.91, as compared with a value of $7,331,905.66 for the investments. As of the date of the merger, the oil properties of George F. Getty, Inc., in all states were valued at $5,500,000.00, while the investments were valued at $23,166,324.04. For some time prior to 1936, predecessor corporations of the taxpayer had concluded that it was much more advantageous for them to expand by acquiring securities and possible control of other corporations than to put their money into actual oil operations. In furtherance of this decision, they had started out by acquiring control of Pacific Western Oil Corporation and were making investments in Tide Water Associated Oil Company and Mission Corporation. After acquiring a substantial block of Tide Water Associated Oil Company, directly and through Mission Corporation, they had endeavored with Mission Corporation to obtain influence in the management of that corporation. This developed into a proxy fight early in 1936 which was lost. Such predecessor corporations concluded that in order to protect and enhance their investment in Tide Water Associated Oil Company and to carry on their other investment activities, it was essential to remove the principal office from California to the East, inasmuch as the headquarters of Tide Water was in New York, the bankers they had to do business with were in New York, and most of the stockholders in Tide Water were located east of the Mississippi River. They decided to engage a Wall Street firm of attorneys and enlist the assistance of New York bankers in an endeavor to assert a larger influence on Tide Water to protect and enhance their investments in that company. They decided it made good business sense to move to the East so that the general head office would be close to the pulse of the activities in their expanding program. Accordingly, in March, 1936, the predecessor corporations of the taxpayer established their executive office and headquarters at 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, New Jersey, across the river from New York City and within five minutes commuting time on the Hudson Tube. On June 26, 1936, the directors of Getty, Inc., adopted a resolution establishing 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, New Jersey, as "the principal office of this company outside of the State of Delaware". At the same meeting the directors changed the by-laws to provide that meetings of the stockholders of the corporation be held at the New Jersey office and elected Harold L. Rowland, a resident of the State of New Jersey, as President in place of Mr. Kluth. The directors passed at this meeting a resolution authorizing the California officers to handle "the operation of this corporation's oil properties in California", but providing that they should have no power, without the express direction and approval of the head office in New Jersey, to (a) acquire new leases, (b) execute contracts, or (c) sell any oil except "spot oil". At the first meeting of the board in New Jersey, Harold L. Rowland, Millard F. Tompkins, Jr., and Charles F. Krug, Jr., all residents of New Jersey, were elected directors of the company while Mr. Rowland was elected President and Mr. Krug was elected Secretary and Treasurer.

Authority was also given to various persons, all located in the East, to handle brokerage accounts and to arrange for loans. The by-laws provided that board meetings and stockholders' meetings were to be held at the New Jersey office. From the inception of the taxpayer and throughout the years 1937, 1938 and 1939, the business activities carried on, in or from the Jersey City, New Jersey, office by the taxpayer included the following: Holding of all directors' and stockholders' meetings; activities in connection with the purchase and sale of securities, the collection of dividend and interest income and profits from the sale of securities; the obtaining of financing; activities in connection with enhancing and protecting of taxpayer's investments. In summation, appellant points out that during the years 1937, 1938, and 1939 the purchases, sales, loans, etc., as described, all in the New Jersey office, amounted to total transactions of more than $7,000,000.00 and resulted in capital gains of more than $300,000.00.

Neither the taxpayer, nor Getty, Inc., was a California corporation; and neither was a New Jersey corporation. Both were incorporated under the laws of Delaware, and neither at any time here material, conducted any business operations in that state. Thus the domiciliary status of both corporations with respect to the State of Delaware was no more than a paper status.

With the foregoing evidence before it, the trial court made the following findings of fact:

That the three corporations, George F. Getty, Incorporated, George F. Getty Oil Company and George F. Getty Petroleum Company, which were consolidated to form the taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., were primarily interested and engaged in the petroleum business for many years immediately prior to the consolidation of these corporations. By far the greater portion of their business affairs and activities were carried on and managed in, and protected by, the State of California. Throughout the period December 30, 1936 to and including December 31, 1940, the taxpayer George F. Getty, Inc., was engaged in business in the State of California. Throughout the period December 30, 1936 to and including December 31, 1939, among all the states in which it carried on business activities, the taxpayer George F. Getty, Inc., received the greatest protection and benefits from the State of California. In that state were kept the principal accounting records of the taxpayer. Throughout the critical period the taxpayer was primarily and principally engaged in the petroleum business and was not engaged in the investment business. Throughout the same period, by far the larger portion of the activities of the taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., were carried on, conducted, managed, and controlled by the taxpayer in the State of California. On, and after, May 1, 1938, the effective date of an agreement with the Skelly Oil Company, the taxpayer had no employees engaged in oil production activities outside of California. The corporations in which the taxpayer held stock (outside of the Getty Realty Co.) were connected with the petroleum business of said taxpayer and these stockholdings were useful to the taxpayer in advancing its petroleum business. The taxpayer permanently held stock in other corporations in the petroleum industry in order to advance its interests in the petroleum industry and did not acquire stock for the purpose of trading in shares; no substantial sales of stock were made by the taxpayer. The holding of stock in other corporations engaged in the petroleum business was useful to the taxpayer in providing a proper and sufficient marketing outlet for its petroleum products. The activities of the taxpayer in the petroleum industry were not managed or controlled by the New Jersey officers of taxpayer, but were managed and controlled by the California officers. The taxpayer during the critical period engaged in no business activities in the State of Delaware. Neither Delaware nor New Jersey, nor any other state, collected or levied a property tax on the intangibles of the taxpayer, nor did any state other than California collect or levy any tax on the income or measured by the income received by the taxpayer from these intangibles. Finally, the court found that throughout the tax period the commercial domicile of the taxpayer, George F. Getty, Inc., was in California; that said taxpayer did not have a commercial domicile either in the State of New Jersey or in the State of Delaware, or in any other state than California; and that throughout the period the principal place of business of the taxpayer was in California.

It is not seriously contended that if the record furnishes support for the fact findings of the trial court hereinbefore related, then those findings justify and support the conclusions of law and the judgment which has been appealed. Respondent, contending that the factual support is sufficient, states the following summary of facts:

The commercial domicile of the taxpayer was in California during the tax period because: (1) The revenue from sales of gas, oil and gasoline in California was many times greater than the revenue derived from sales in all other states combined. (2) The value of the fixed assets of the taxpayer in California were several times the value of fixed assets in other states. (3) Throughout the period here in controversy between 90% and 99% of the employees of the taxpayer were performing their services in California. (4) The income from intangibles here in controversy has not been taxed by any state other than California. (5) The day to day management of the oil, gas, and gasoline production and sales activities of the taxpayer was carried on in California. (6) Payments in connection with the maintenance and operation of plaintiff's petroleum business were made from its Los Angeles office, including payrolls. (7) The principal accounting records of the taxpayer were kept in California. (8) The predecessor corporations which were consolidated to form the taxpayer were managed and controlled in California and their principal activities were carried on in this state. (9) The taxpayer did not carry on any business activity in Delaware, the state in which it was incorporated. (10) The taxpayer filed its federal income tax returns in California (such returns under the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code must be filed in the district where the taxpayer has its principal place of business or principal office or agency). (11) Mr. J. Paul Getty, who held all of the shares of the corporation either individually or as a trustee, had his legal domicile in California during the years 1937 to 1939 inclusive. (12) The directors of the taxpayer followed a practice of ratifying the completed acts of the California officers of the corporation with respect to oil production activities rather than directing the California officers in advance with respect to the procedures they should follow. In 1939, in its annual report, the taxpayer stated: "The principal transactions for the year 1939 were in connection with direct oil operations." The same report pointed out that in 1939 the taxpayer realized a 17.8% profit on its direct oil operations as opposed to a 6.1% return on its other investments; throughout the tax period California was the center of oil production activity of the taxpayer as is shown by the record of oil production, in barrels, hereinbefore stated. The net oil, gas and gasoline sales of the taxpayer during the tax period in California totaled about 4,500,000 barrels, while such sales in other states during that period totaled about 750,000 barrels. During the period January 1, 1937 through August 31, 1937, the net income of Getty, Inc., from sales of oil, gas and gasoline was $161,696.77, all of which was realized from sales made in California.

[1,2] From an examination of the entire record, we are satisfied that the factual findings of the trial court all find substantial support therein. And of course when we say this, we are deciding this appeal for the reason that, as heretofore noted, the parties do not dispute but that if the trial court's findings are supported by the evidence then the judgment appealed from must be affirmed. There is no doubt but that there is in the record much that supports the trial court's findings and there is also much that militates against those findings. But this situation of the record does not aid or comfort the appellant.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Harold LLOYD, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

R.K.O. PICTURES, Inc., Respondent.

California Pictures Corporation, et al., Defendants.

Civ. 20959.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 31, 1955.

Action for breach of contract against three defendants. All of the defendants demurred. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., sustained the demurrer of one defendant without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that where plaintiff had originally entered into contract with one defendant whereby in consideration for his services in a photoplay he was to be given star billing, and publicity, and where contract was later assigned, complaint, alleging that assignee had given written assurance to plaintiff that the terms of contract would be faithfully kept and performed, and that plaintiff had relied on said written assurance which was not kept, with result that value of plaintiff's name in motion picture industry had diminished stated a cause of action.

Judgment reversed with instructions to overrule demurrer and allow reasonable time to answer.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨917(1)

On appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a complaint, the allegations of the complaint must be regarded as true.

2. Pleading ⇨1

Perfection in pleading is no more expected or required than in other realms of endeavor.

3. Assignments ⇨131

Where plaintiff originally entered into a contract with one defendant whereby in consideration for his services in a photoplay, he was to be given star billing and publicity, and where contract was later assigned, complaint, alleging that assignee had given written assurance to plaintiff that the terms of contract would be faithfully kept and performed, and that plaintiff had relied on said written assurance which was not kept, with result that value of plaintiff's name in motion picture industry had diminished, stated a cause of action.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨863

Upon an appeal from a judgment sustaining demurrer to the complaint it is not necessary to determine which, if any, of plaintiff's theories may bear fruit.

5. Estoppel ⇨85

The promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise.

6. Estoppel ⇨107

Where plaintiff originally entered into a contract with one defendant whereby in consideration for his services in a photoplay, he was to be given star billing and publicity, and where contract was later assigned, complaint, alleging that assignee had given written assurance to plaintiff that the terms of contract would be faithfully kept and performed, and that plaintiff had relied on said written assurance which was not kept, with result that value of plaintiff's name in motion picture industry had diminished, sufficiently pleaded facts from which promissory estoppel could arise.

Fendler & Lerner, Beverly Hills, and Harold A. Fendler; Robert Haves, Beverly Hills, of counsel, for appellant.

Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp, and George Benedict, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

On September 10, 1945, a contract was entered into between the Lloyd Corporation, plaintiff's assignor, and the defendant California Pictures, for the services of Harold Lloyd in a photoplay later known as "Mad Wednesday". On the same day, in connection therewith, Harold Lloyd contracted with Lloyd Corporation to furnish to California Pictures "artistic and stellar services", the agreement provided that plaintiff must "receive star billing and screen credit, advertising credit, and publicity credit as star" of the photoplay.

According to plaintiff's complaint, California Pictures agreed with Lloyd Corporation to be bound by the contractual undertakings of the Lloyd Corporation to Harold Lloyd, and expressly agreed to "give and guarantee the giving, directly and personally to the plaintiff, Harold Lloyd, of star billing and screen credit, advertising credit, publicity credit, and exploitation credit as the star" of the photoplay. These obligations were made binding on California's successors, assigns, licensees, distributors and exhibitors. Plaintiff Harold Lloyd guaranteed performance by Lloyd Corporation, agreed to complete the picture and gave California the right to use plaintiff's name, likeness and voice in connection with the photoplay.

It is further alleged that in return for such guarantee and undertaking, California

Pictures agreed on behalf of its successors or assigns, that it would "mention the name of Harold Lloyd as star on the positive prints of, and in all paid advertising and publicity thereafter issued in connection with the production or distribution of said motion picture photoplay". It is alleged that plaintiff, and plaintiff's assignor, Lloyd Corporation, fully performed all obligations under the contracts.

The complaint avers that California released the film in 1947 through United Artists, at which time all contractual obligations were complied with by California. However, the film was withdrawn from release prior to December 1, 1947, and was not again publicly shown until October 10, 1950, after respondent RKO Radio Pictures took over distribution of the picture. It is alleged that about December 13, 1947, California Pictures entered into a written security contract with the defendant Hughes Tool Company which agreed to pay certain debts of California; that as a part of such agreement California assigned the photoplay "Mad Wednesday" to Hughes as security, with rights of distribution, "subject to the duties and obligations of said rights and contracts assigned as aforesaid".

The complaint, as amended, alleges that on November 10, 1950, defendants Hughes and RKO "confirmed by letter agreement in writing a previous and pre-existing oral agreement entered into prior to October 11, 1950, wherein and whereby Hughes granted to R.K.O." world-wide distribution rights to the photoplay, "upon substantially the same terms and conditions as those contained in the distribution agreement dated December 19, 1944, previously entered into between California and United Artists Corporation".

As stated in respondent's brief, "In respect to many matters, including screen credits, advertising and publicity * * * RKO agreed to follow 'the wishes and instructions' of Hughes." RKO is alleged to have had knowledge of the California-Lloyd contract and Hughes' assumption thereof; in reference to "Mad Wednesday", the defendants RKO, Hughes and California are alleged to have "jointly participated in or authorized or concurred in or ratified each and every action taken, and things done".

It is also to be noted that Howard Hughes is alleged to be the sole stockholder in California Pictures, as well as being a majority stockholder, president and director of the defendant Hughes Tool Company, and controlling stockholder, director of and in control of the defendant RKO, "particularly with respect to the distribution, exploitation, publicity and advertising of the photoplay 'Mad Wednesday'".

There are allegations that about October 11, 1950, plaintiff and the Lloyd Corporation notified defendants that objection would be made to any departure from the original contracts "with respect to the advertising and publicity credit to be given Harold Lloyd as the star". Defendant RKO replied by letter on October 18, 1950 that RKO had received "full notice, advice and knowledge" of the provisions in question, and that RKO "had complied and would continue to comply with, and to faithfully keep and perform the terms and provisions of said contract", and that all advertising and publicity would be in accordance with the original contract, which acknowledgments and assurances were made by RKO "for the purpose of inducing plaintiff and plaintiff's assignor to forego and forbear" the commencement of legal or equitable proceedings, which representations were relied upon. In this connection it is claimed that the defendant RKO is therefore "estopped to deny that it is bound by said provisions".

The defendants, and each of them, are alleged to have "impaired, and diminished the value of the name and reputation of the plaintiff, Harold Lloyd, in the motion picture industry and in the mind of the general public * * * by subordinating or eliminating the name * * * from advertising and publicity issued and caused to be issued * * * and in such a manner as to conceal from the entertainment industry and from the general public throughout the world that the plaintiff, Harold Lloyd, was the 'star' of and in said motion picture photoplay", to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $250,000.

Defendants demurred generally and specially to the complaint; the trial court deferred submission of the demurrer pending the filing of amendments by plaintiff, and thereafter sustained the demurrer of RKO without leave to amend. The case is at issue in respect to the other two defendants, and RKO is the only respondent on this appeal.

Four theories are presented by appellant on which recovery might be had, namely, (I) "Respondent, having acquired only the right and license to distribute the photoplay, is bound by notice and knowledge to the obligations of billing and credit connected with the use of plaintiff's name, likeness and voice; (II) "Respondent was contractually bound, under the rules of promissory estoppel, to give plaintiff star billing"; (III) "Respondent has assumed the obligation to give plaintiff star billing in all paid advertising and publicity", and is liable for having failed to do so; and (IV) "Respondent, having directly caused a breach of contract, is liable".

It is the respondent's contention that RKO, not being a party to the original Lloyd-California contract, and never having assumed liability thereunder, was under no duty to perform the obligations thereof; that the complaint states no cause of action either on the theory of promissory estoppel, or otherwise; that the complaint shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment, and therefore there was no abuse of discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

[1] As hereinbefore indicated, the merits of plaintiff's complaint, and likewise the merits of any defense offered by the defendants, are matters in no manner involved in the present appeal. According to the long established rule, as stated in Roberts v. Wachter, 104 Cal.App.2d 281, 231 P.2d 540, 544, and elsewhere, "On appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a complaint the allegations of the complaint must be regarded as true. * *

All that is necessary as against a general demurrer is to plead facts entitling the plaintiff to some relief". The reviewing court in such an appeal "is confined to the allegations of the complaint", and as said in San Juan Gold Co. v. San Juan Ridge Mutual Water Ass'n, 34 Cal.App.2d 159, 174, 93 P.2d 582, 591, "the evidence plays no part in determining the correctness of a ruling on a demurrer".

It is appellant's contention that the ruling in the instant case, sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, resulting in a dismissal as to the respondent RKO, determines as a matter of law, issues of fact which should only be decided after a plenary hearing on the merits. The case is at issue as to the other defendants. If this dismissal as to RKO be sustained, appellant points out that "the other two defendants will be perfectly free to claim that R K O is the wrongdoer and that they endeavored mightily to obtain performance by R K O".

[2] Perfection in pleading is no more expected or required than in other realms of endeavor. As said in Kauffman v. Bobo & Wood, 99 Cal.App.2d 322, 323, 221 P.2d 750, 751, "It is well established that a general demurrer must be overruled if, on any theory, it states a cause of action". The same case points out that "pleadings and amendments thereto should be allowed and construed liberally with the object of affording every litigant his day in court and to render substantial justice between the parties". And "Generally, it is held to be an abuse of discretion to sustain without leave to amend a demurrer to an original complaint, unless the complaint shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment." Temescal Water Co. v. Dept. of Public Works, 44 Cal.2d 90, 280 P.2d 1, 11.

[3] An application of the rule of liberal construction leads to the conclusion that plaintiff's amended complaint sufficiently states a cause of action on one or more of several theories. The sustaining of defendant RKO's demurrer without leave to amend was therefore reversible error.

As before indicated, whether the plaintiff will be able to prove the allegations made, is entirely immaterial on the present appeal since against a demurrer the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true.

As is often the case, plaintiff in the present litigation is confronted with the activities of several different defendants, and at a trial on the merits might recover judgment against one or more defendants, or against none. In a case such as the present, where it appears from the complaint that all three defendants were in some manner involved in causing the alleged loss, plaintiff should be accorded the opportunity to confront all of such defendants in court and present the case in its entirety. This course of procedure would not only benefit the plaintiff but would be of inestimable aid in enabling the trial court to view the entire picture and to thus arrive at the correct result.

To require RKO to go to trial along with the other two defendants seems particularly fitting in view of plaintiff's allegations as to the interlocking nature of the three corporate defendants, in all of which Howard Hughes is alleged to be a majority or controlling stockholder. Proof of this relation between the three defendants might conceivably be of importance in reference to plaintiff's theory of promissory estoppel. RKO is likewise charged with having induced a breach of contract by the other defendants. The knowledge and conduct of RKO, as alleged by plaintiff, forms an integral part of the general picture. To limit plaintiff's litigation to a two-thirds survey of the situation by dismissing the case against RKO without trial, would, under the peculiar circumstances here present, deprive the plaintiff of substantial rights.

[4] No case has been cited by either party dealing with either an identical or parallel situation. Indeed the fundamental law of the case seems to be reasonably well settled; its final application to the facts of this case should be left to the trial court or jury at a hearing on the merits, participated in by all defendants. Nor is it necessary to now determine which, if any, of plaintiff's theories may bear fruit. If however, plaintiff is able to prove the facts alleged, recovery on one or more of such theories would follow.

Promissory estoppel, one of the theories relied upon in the plaintiff's complaint, is expounded in the Restatement of Contracts, Section 90 (1932), as follows: "A promise which the promissor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise".

[5] The courts of this state have adopted this doctrine, as evidenced by the opinion in Edmonds v. County of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.2d 642, 653, 255 P.2d 772, 779; "By their conduct they led everyone to believe that the exception had been accepted. Plaintiffs made an oral promise on which defendants relied to their detriment, and justice can be done only by the enforcement of the promise. The situation presented is therefore the ordinary one of promissory estoppel".

[6] Plaintiff's amended complaint has pleaded facts from which such an estoppel could arise. RKO is alleged to have given assurance to plaintiff that the terms of the Lloyd-California contract would be complied with, which assurance is claimed to have been relied upon to plaintiff's detriment. Whether plaintiff's forbearance to sue was or was not requested by RKO, would appear to be immaterial. It is unnecessary to enter into a detailed discussion of the various theories presented in the complaint. As against the demurrer, the complaint is sufficient.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to overrule the demurrer, and allow a reasonable time for respondent RKO to file an answer.

Action for a declaratory judgment declaring duties and obligations between son of deceased and other heirs. Defendants demurred, and the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that complaint, filed by plaintiffs who were allegedly defrauded by son by his action in concealing father's will, and in preventing plaintiffs from receiving their share of father's estate including their share of profits from his business, sufficiently alleged facts entitling plaintiffs to a trial on merits.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with directions.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

Jue Joe, the father, and San Tong Jue, the son, were in the wholesale produce business. The business was extensive and alleged to be valued at several hundred thousand dollars. According to the record, upon the father's death the son took over the business. As stated in appellants' brief and alleged in substance,

"Upon the death of Jue Joe, said San Tong Jue held a dominating and influential position with the surviving members of the Jue Joe family; they being female, respected him and his judgment and placed and reposed great confidence and trust in him and in his word and conduct in relation to the Estate of Jue Joe, deceased. Said San Tong Jue coveted the entire estate of Jue Joe, deceased, sought to obtain possession of and title to the same, to the total exclusion of all other heirs of Jue Joe, deceased. To accomplish this, on the day of Jue Joe's death, San Tong Jue, not having access to his father's safety deposit box in the bank with which Jue Joe had carried on his banking business, took his two sisters who did have joint access to said box, and without disclosing to the bank the fact of his father's death, obtained possession of the contents of said box which included the decedent's last Will and Testament that had been prepared by plaintiff, Rush M. Blodget and executed under Mr. Blodget's direction. In order to prevent probate administration of said decedent's estate, defendant San Tong Jue concealed the Will and instructed his sisters never to disclose to anyone that he had obtained possession of it or that it, in fact, existed. He succeeded in concealing the Will and the fact of its existence, from the County Clerk, from the Executor therein named, plaintiff Rush M. Blodget, and all other interested persons, for a period of ten years, at which time one of the sisters disclosed the foregoing facts to her counsel and as a result, defendant was compelled to deliver the Will to court, same was admitted to probate and Rush M. Blodget was appointed and duly qualified as Executor thereof.

"In furtherance of said defendant's plan to appropriate all of the assets of the decedent, to the exclusion of the other heirs-at-law, the defendant San Tong Jue approached his sister, the plaintiff Dorothy Jue Moe, and under threat of death, procured a deed from her to property in Tulare County which had been given to her by her father, the decedent Jue Joe, as a gift during his lifetime, and had been paid for by her father out of his earnings in the Jue Joe Company.

"In furtherance of his plan to acquire title to and possession of all of the property belonging to said decedent, to the total exclusion of the other heirs-at-law, said defendant San Tong Jue persuaded his sister Corinne Jue Kwok to convey to his son, the defendant Jack Jue and deliver to him, possession of certain property in Los Angeles County, State of California which had been given to her by her father, the decedent Jue Joe, as a gift during his lifetime and had been paid for by her father out of his earnings in the Jue Joe Company. Title to said property was conveyed to said Jack Jue as a convenience to defendant San Tong Jue, his son Jack having been born in this country, was qualified to hold real property in California, while the defendant San Tong Jue having been born in China, was not so qualified under the California Alien Land Act [West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 671 note]. Defendant San Tong Jue persuaded his sister, defendant Corinne Jue Kwok to make such reconveyance under the false and fraudulent promise that he made to her that he would hold said property in trust and manage the same for the sole use and benefit of all members of the family who were the heirs-at-law of decedent.

"After acquiring title to and possession of all of the assets of the estate of Jue Joe, deceased, defendant San Tong Jue did the following things:

"He continued to operate the partnership business without change of name or location and without an accounting to the executor or to anyone else; appropriated all the monies obtained from that lucrative business and now claims that he is the sole owner thereof to the exclusion of all other members of the family."

Other acts alleged to be unlawful and fraudulent are also alleged.

The complaint alleges that,

"In the first cause of action plaintiffs alleged that three actual controversies existed between the plaintiffs on the one side and defendants on the other, * * *

"In said first cause of action plaintiffs alleged that they desired to have a declaration of plaintiffs' rights or duties with respect to the said defendant, San Tong Jue concerning said three actual controversies.

"In said second cause of action, the facts concerning the actual controversy above mentioned * * * were set forth in greater detail.

"In said third cause of action the facts concerning the actual controversy above mentioned * * * were set forth in greater detail.

"In said fourth cause of action the facts concerning the actual controversy above mentioned * * * were set forth in greater detail.

"The primary purpose of the several causes of action was and is to obtain from the Court a declaration of rights, duties and obligations as between plaintiffs on the one side and defendants on the other, in relation to the actual controversies specified."

Respondent argues that the complaint does not state a cause of action for declaratory relief; that the action is barred by the statute of limitations and that defendant is not estopped from raising the question also that the court has not abused its discretion in sustaining the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint without leave to amend.

As stated in the trial court's opinion,

"The third amended complaint was filed October 27, 1953, and with the filing of defendants' demurrer and motion to strike the court had its first opportunity to examine the pleadings. The matter having been fully briefed and argued, the demurrer was sustained on May 10, 1954, with leave to amend in sixty days." The opinion also set forth,

"I am not unmindful of the other contentions made by plaintiffs, including those contained in their extensive memorandum of points and authorities filed in support of their third amended complaint. On careful re-examination of the entire file I can find no ground and no theory on which the complaint can be held to allege facts sufficient to constitute one or more causes of action either for declaratory relief or for any other relief sought by the prayer. When this matter was submitted, counsel for both sides most courteously and properly indicated their intention to seek a review of whatever ruling I might make. It seems to me that the time has come for such a review. I can find no warrant for allowing any further recourse to the amending process.

"The demurrer to the Fourth Amended Complaint is sustained without leave to amend."

Respondents' contentions are of course technical. From a review of the record it appears that appellants are entitled to their day in court and that the question of fact, as alleged in the complaint, should be tried on the merits. The law applicable to such situations is discussed and cited somewhat at length in Lloyd v. California Pictures Corporation, Cal.App., 289 P.2d 295. An examination of that opinion as to the questions of law herein involved discloses that the demurrer should have been overruled.

The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings with instructions that the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint be overruled and that defendants have a reasonable time to file their answer thereto.

Hearing on motion by convicted defendant in the nature of a writ of coram nobis. From order denying motion to vacate judgments, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where defendant was allegedly convicted on the basis of illegal evidence before Supreme Court decision that evidence obtained by unconstitutional search and seizure was inadmissible, such admission of testimony was merely an error of law which could have been raised by motion for new trial, but not by motion for writ of coram nobis.

FOX, Justice.

This is a motion, filed by defendant in propria persona,¹ which is in the nature of a writ of coram nobis.

People v. Smith, 120 Cal.App.2d 531, 534, 261 P.2d 306. Defendant seeks to set aside judgments of conviction rendered against him in 1946 (in two separate trials) on three counts of abortion and on one count of homicide growing out of an illegal operation. The judgments and the orders denying his motions for a new trial were affirmed in People v. Emery (Collins, appellant), 79 Cal.App.2d 226, 179 P.2d 843, and People v. Collins, 80 Cal.App.2d 526, 182 P.2d 585. A hearing was denied by the Supreme Court in each case.

Defendant seeks to have the judgments set aside on the ground that the evidence admitted against him was "illegally obtained through unlawful and unreasonable search and seizure." He relies on People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905.

[1-3] Preliminarily it should be pointed out that the circumstances under which a court may grant a motion in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis are confined "within narrow limitations". People v. Sica, 116 Cal.App.2d 59, 62, 253 P.2d 75, 77. As stated in People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 210 P.2d 13, 15, "coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope." The writ "is not intended to authorize any court to revise and review its opinions; but only to enable it to recall some adjudication made while some fact existed which, if before the court, would have prevented the rendition of the judgment, and which, without any fault or negligence of the party, was not presented to the court." (Emphasis added.) People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 442, 154 P.2d 657, 667; People v. McCoy, 115 Cal.App.2d 565, 567, 252 P.2d 371; People v. Smith, supra. Conceding that certain portions of the evidence on which defendant's conviction was based were obtained illegally, it does not follow that his motion to set aside the judgment should be granted. The problem here was simply one relating to the admission of evidence. The asserted error was one for correction on a motion for a new trial or upon appeal. Actually the admissibility of the evidence about which defendant now complains was challenged by him on his appeal, see People v. Collins, supra, where, at pages 535 and 536 of 80 Cal.App.2d, at page 591 of 182 P.2d, the court said: "We find no merit in the contentions of defendant that the testimony of Lorna Adams, the district attorney's stenographer who listened in and took notes over the concealed microphone equipment, was improperly admitted into evidence. * * * Nor do we find any prejudicial or reversible error * * * in admitting the defendant's catheters and surgical instruments into evidence." It may not, therefore, be reviewed on a motion to vacate the judgment or for a writ of coram nobis for "the writ does not lie to correct errors of law". People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 822, 198 P.2d 505, 506; People v. Cook, 97 Cal.App.2d 284, 285, 217 P.2d 498; People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 771, 199 P.2d 375.

1. At the request of defendant, this court appointed counsel to represent him in this proceeding.

[4] The Cahan case, supra, announced a new rule in this state that evidence secured by unconstitutional search and seizure was not admissible in a criminal prosecution. It is simply, as the court pointed out, 44 Cal.2d 442, 282 P.2d 910, "a judicially declared rule of evidence." The admission of evidence against the defendant in his trials in 1946, contrary to the newly stated rule of exclusion in the Cahan case, may not be reviewed in this proceeding for it was no more than an error of law which could have been raised by motion for a new trial or on appeal. People v. Tuthill, supra; People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 528, 174 P. 325. This conclusion finds support in the most recent Cahan case—People v. Cahan, 135 Cal.App.2d 287, 287 P.2d 6, where the defendant sought unsuccessfully to vacate a judgment against him on the identical grounds here urged.

The motion is denied.

Proceeding was brought by the State, on the relation of a ward of the Juvenile Court, against a guardian ad litem. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Allen G. Norris, J., entered judgment adverse to the guardian ad litem, and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that in proceeding to have minor declared a ward of the Juvenile Court and committed to Youth Authority because she had allegedly violated the Vehicle Code and the Penal Code, minor was not entitled to trial by jury and to be advised that she was entitled to be represented by counsel, since a proceeding before the Juvenile Court is not a criminal proceeding and constitutional and statutory rights given to persons charged with crime are not applicable to such proceedings.

Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen.,

DOOLING, Justice.

After a full hearing on a petition before the Juvenile Court of Alameda County the juvenile court judge found that the appellant, a minor, born December 3, 1938, comes within the provisions of section 700 (m) of the Juvenile Court Law Welfare and Institutions Code, in that she had committed the following offenses: violation of Vehicle Code, section 501, and of Penal Code, sections 484 and 499b. The court declared her a ward of the Juvenile Court and committed her to the Youth Authority.

On this appeal no contention is made, as on the record none could be made, that the evidence does not support the findings of the court. The sole contentions made are that the minor was denied the constitutional right to a jury trial and to be represented by counsel.

Our courts have held that proceedings before the Juvenile Court, even in cases where it is charged that the minor has committed a crime or crimes, are not criminal trials, but are in the nature of guardianship proceedings in which the state as parens patriae seeks to relieve the minor of the stigma of a criminal conviction and to give him corrective care, supervision and training to the end that he may become an honorable and useful citizen. In re Daedler, 194 Cal. 320, 228 P. 467; In re Dargo, 81 Cal.App.2d 205, 183 P.2d 282.

It is appellant's position that because the basis of the petition filed with the Juvenile Court was that she had violated certain provisions of the criminal law she was entitled to the constitutional rights to trial by jury and to be represented by counsel. The rationale of all of the decisions on the subject in this state is that because a proceeding before the Juvenile Court is not a criminal proceeding the constitutional and statutory rights given to persons charged with crime are not applicable to such proceedings. So it was held in In re Daedler, supra, 194 Cal. 320, 228 P. 467, that the guaranty of the right to trial by jury in criminal cases is not applicable to a Juvenile Court proceeding.

Similarly it has been held that the right to bail, In re Magnuson, 110 Cal.App.2d 73, 242 P.2d 362, to be warned against self-incrimination, In re Dargo, supra, 81 Cal. App.2d 205, 183 P.2d 282, and the right not to be placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense, People v. Silverstein, 121 Cal.App. 2d 140, 262 P.2d 656, have no application to proceedings in the Juvenile Court.

By a parity of reasoning the guaranty of the right to counsel in criminal cases is likewise not applicable. Cf. In re O'Day, 83 Cal.App.2d 339, 189 P.2d 525.

It should be noted that this is not a case such as In re Rider, 50 Cal.App. 797, 195 P. 965, and In re McDermott, 77 Cal.App. 109, 246 P. 89, where counsel had been engaged to represent the minors and the juvenile judge refused to let the minors consult with their attorneys. Of course no person can be deprived of the right to be represented by an attorney in any court proceeding if he has an attorney whom he wishes to represent him. The complaint here is, not that the court refused to permit appellant to be represented by counsel, but that the court did not expressly advise the minor that she was entitled to be represented by counsel. Cal.Const. Art. I, sec. 13; Pen.Code secs. 858 and 987. No such duty was cast on the court by those provisions since they apply only to prosecutions for crime.

There is nothing in In re Contreras, 109 Cal.App.2d 787, 241 P.2d 631, contrary to this conclusion. The court in that case reversed because the lower court had acted entirely on incompetent evidence. Here, as in In re Dargo, supra, 81 Cal.App.2d 205, 183 P.2d 282, the minor freely admitted her criminal acts and there was other competent testimony to the same effect.

Judgment affirmed.

Prosecution for abortion. After trial in Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., defendant was found guilty by a jury and appealed from the judgment and from order denying new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that the trial judge had erred prejudicially in refusing to give an instruction embodying the principle that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion.

Reversed.

289 P.2d—20

1. Abortion ⇨11

In prosecution for abortion, evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction. Pen. Code, §§ 21, 1108.

2. Abortion ⇨11

In prosecution for abortion, evidence was sufficient to corroborate testimony of prosecuting witness. Pen.Code, § 1108.

3. Abortion ⇨12

In prosecution for abortion, question whether corroborative evidence was as compatible with innocence as it was with guilt was a question for trier of fact. Pen. Code, § 1108.

4. Criminal Law ⇨784(1), 1173(2)

In prosecution for abortion, trial judge erred prejudicially in refusing instruction embodying principle that to justify conviction on circumstantial evidence the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with theory of guilt but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion.

5. Criminal Law ⇨821(2)

In prosecution for abortion, wherein requested instruction to effect that if there was any reasonable hypothesis based upon circumstances of whole evidence in the case then it was duty of jury to adopt such hypothesis was incomplete, trial judge was not required to give such incomplete instruction.

6. Criminal Law ⇨784(4)

In prosecution for abortion, it would have been proper for trial court to give requested instruction embodying principle that when evidence is susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, one pointing to guilt and one to innocence, it is duty of jury to adopt the interpretation pointing to innocence.

C. Ransom Samuelson and Clarence Hengel, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., and Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the crime of abortion. In a trial by jury he was found guilty. Probation was granted on condition that he serve 90 days in the county jail, and proceedings were suspended. Defendant appeals from the judgment (order granting probation) and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction; and that the court erred prejudicially in refusing to give certain instructions.

Mrs. Malone (upon whom the abortion was allegedly performed) testified in part as follows: She had a physical examination by Dr. Dach who stated that he believed she was pregnant. He told her to come back the following Saturday for a more thorough examination. She did not go back for the examination. About June 10 she talked to a man friend, by the name of Lionel, about an abortion, and he gave her the name of defendant. On June 16 she telephoned defendant's office and made an appointment to go there on June 17. At the time appointed she went to defendant's office and asked defendant to examine her to determine whether she was pregnant. She gave him information about her physical condition, age and family history. She was placed in a chair which was equipped with stirrups. The chair was then let down like a table, and she was in a "lying position." Defendant made a manual examination, using a vaginal speculum, which took about 10 minutes. He stated that it looked like she was pregnant. She told him that she could not have the baby because she was not married, and she asked him to help her. He asked her if she "would keep quiet," and she said "Yes." He then made an appointment for her to return at 11 a. m. on Saturday (June 19), and told her that she would be in his office about an hour and a half. She asked how much it would be, and he said $200—and to bring it in cash. He told her to bring a sanitary belt. On Saturday, about 11 a. m., her friend Dorothy took her in an automobile to defendant's office, and Dorothy said that she would return at 12:15 o'clock. She (witness) entered the office. Defendant was in his private office with the door open, and no one else was present. He asked her for the money. She told him that she was able to get only $175, and she handed the money to him. He returned $5.00 to her and said that she might need it. He did not give her a receipt for the money. He told her to go into the dressing room, remove her clothes except certain things, put on the sanitary belt and a dressing gown and then come into the examining room. After she complied with those directions, he placed her in the chair in approximately the same position she was in when he examined her, placed her legs in the stirrups, and put a sheet over her. Then he gave her a hypodermic injection in the arm. He said that the injection was a drug which was used for women who were beginning labor, to make them relax. He pulled a small table over by her. Defendant sat between her feet, at the end of the table, and, with his hands and instruments, contacted her uterus and vaginal tract. She felt a scraping sensation in her pelvic tract. Defendant said he "was scraping it out." She told him it hurt, and she cried a little. He worked on her in this manner about 30 minutes. The hypodermic injection had a relaxing effect but she was fully conscious. After defendant completed what he was doing, he carried out an oblong pan which contained "blood clots, or whatever it was." He helped her into the dressing room, and told her to lie down. He gave her an injection in the hip, and told her it was penicillin which would stop any infection. She lay there about 25 minutes, and then she dressed. Defendant told her to take aspirin if she had pain like menstrual cramps. He said there would be "spotting" for a few days then she would be over her pregnancy. He told her to come back if she wanted further examination to see if everything was all right. Dorothy came after her and took her home. On Sunday she was in considerable pain. On Monday the pain was worse and by Wednesday night (June 23) it became unbearable. She called Dr. Brown's office but he was not in, and Dr. Posson came to see her. She told him that she had an abortion, and he examined her. He told her that she should go to the hospital for further examination, and for her to see Dr. Brown. She saw Dr. Brown the next day, and he examined her and gave her medical treatment.

Dr. Posson, called as a witness by the People, testified that he is an osteopathic physician. He examined Mrs. Malone on June 23. She said that she had something done about a possible pregnancy. From her history and the (his) findings, he thought she had been pregnant or was pregnant. He formed an opinion, based upon her history, that she had been aborted or was miscarrying. Her temperature was a little below normal and he did not think that she had an infection. She was having cramps, bleeding and clots.

Dr. Brown, called as a witness by the People, testified that he is an osteopathic physician. On June 24 he gave Mrs. Malone an examination. She told him that she had been pregnant and had been aborted. Her uterus was slightly enlarged, boggy and soft which, with her history, indicated that she had been recently pregnant. There was slight bleeding from the cervix but there was no infection there. He came to the conclusion, based upon his objective physical findings, that she had aborted. He treated her until July 22. On cross-examination he testified that Mrs. Malone told him that she was aborted in a doctor's office, and that the doctor had used some instrument on her. He (witness) examined her cervix for marks or scars, and found none. If an instrument has been used to procure an abortion, generally there are marks on the cervix 5 days thereafter. Excluding the history which Mrs. Malone gave him, he would assume that she had been aborted but he would not definitely know, and he would not know whether the abortion was spontaneous or induced.

Dr. Dach, called as a witness by the People, testified that he specializes in obstetrics and gynecology. He examined Mrs. Malone on May 19, 1954. He made an examination of the uterus and cervix of her vaginal tract by using a speculum. He also made a digital and bimanual examination. After he completed the examination, he was of the opinion that she was pregnant—about 7 weeks pregnant.

Dorothy, called as a witness by the People, testified that Mrs. Malone told her that she was pregnant and had an appointment with defendant on Saturday (June 19) for the purpose of having an abortion performed. On June 19 she took Mrs. Malone in an automobile to the building where defendant's office was located. About 12:10 p. m., she (witness) went to defendant's office and saw defendant and Mrs. Malone in the "inner" office.

Officer Thiele testified that he and Officer Finch went to defendant's office on June 29. They looked through the appointment book, went through all the files and made a search of everything "in the way of a record" but could not find the name of Mrs. Malone. Finch told defendant that they (officers) were there regarding a criminal abortion—that defendant was the suspect and Mrs. Malone was the victim. Defendant stated that he did not know anyone by that name and that he had not performed any abortions. After further conversation with defendant, defendant said, "Couldn't I give the girl back her money and take care of her medical expenses"—that he would rather pay her what the officers said she had lost than to take the publicity that would follow his arrest. They took defendant to the police station where they had a further conversation with him. Defendant asked them if they could not "fix it up with the district attorney so that he would pay a fine," and would not be prosecuted. He also said, "Well, couldn't I go through you and you pay the girl off so that I won't be arrested." Officer Finch told the defendant that all they wanted was the truth. Defendant then replied, "If I do tell the truth, what can you do for me, what can you guarantee me."

Officer Finch testified in substance the same as Officer Thiele had testified.

Defendant testified that he is 74 years of age, and has been a physician and surgeon since 1914. He gave Mrs. Malone a bimanual physical examination on June 17. She told him that she thought she was pregnant, and he replied that there was a little swelling on the right side of the uterus but that there was no evidence of pregnancy. She asked him how much he would charge to take care of her during her confinement, and he stated that most obstetricians were charging $250, but that if she would pay in advance he would take care of her for $200. He told her to wait a week and come back for a rabbit test and they would know for sure whether she was pregnant. She said that she would talk to her husband and would probably be back. The following Saturday (June 19) she returned and said that she had "quite a little pain." He examined her, and the cervix and the vault of the vagina were inflamed and red, and there was a little mucus. He decided that she had some infection. He attached a piece of cotton to an applicator and, using an antiseptic, he swabbed the cervix and the vault of the vagina. Then he gave her terramycin to stop the infection. He had her lie on the bed in the dressing room, and gave her penicillin. When she left, he told her to come back in two or three days for a rabbit test, and that if she did not feel better to come back the next day. She did not come back. He did not abort her. She gave him $175 on Saturday, and he returned $5.00 to her. He stated that they would settle the balance of $30 when he completed his diagnosis. He did not give her a receipt for the money because he did not expect to need all of it for he was not sure that she was pregnant. His secretary keeps all his records, but she was not at the office Saturday. When she is absent, he makes notes and she later makes the entries in the books. He did not make a note of Mrs. Malone's visit because he wanted a rabbit test so he would know what his diagnosis might be. When he talked with the officers at the police station he did not know Mrs. Malone by name but he remembered her when he saw her at the preliminary hearing.

Dr. Gates, called as a witness by defendant, testified that he specializes in gynecology and, until two years ago, he also specialized in obstetrics. Without a history of an abortion, a slightly boggy, enlarged uterus with bleeding would be no positive evidence that an abortion had been performed. Five days after an abortion has been performed, he would expect to find abrasions or scars in the mouth of the uterus—the cervix has to be grasped (in performing an abortion) with a tenaculum, an instrument with sharp claws that will leave a mark.

[1] "An essential element of the crime [of abortion] is a criminal intent on the part of the accused to procure an abortion, and such intent must be specific. The requisite guilty intent cannot exist unless the defendant has actual knowledge or actually believes that the woman is pregnant, since the intent must be to procure a miscarriage. However, it is the belief and purpose of the defendant which is involved, not whether pregnancy in fact exists." (1 Cal.Jur.2d 159, sec. 10.) Whether defendant believed that Mrs. Malone was pregnant would, of course, have an important bearing on the question of his intent. Section 21 of the Penal Code provides that "The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense * * *." Some of the circumstances herein, relating to the question of intent on the part of appellant to procure an abortion, were: Mrs. Malone was about 7 weeks pregnant, according to testimony of Dr. Dach; appellant told her (according to her testimony) that "it looked like" she was pregnant, and he asked her if she would keep quiet if he helped her; he told her (according to her testimony) that he was scraping "it out," and that she would be "spotting" for a few days and then she would be over her pregnancy; payment of $170 cash to defendant for which he gave no receipt; absence of her name upon his records; she had been aborted or was miscarrying, according to testimony of Dr. Posson; she had been pregnant and had been aborted, according to testimony of Dr. Brown; defendant told the officers that he did not know anyone by the name "Malone," and he asked them if they could "fix it up" with the district attorney, and what they could guarantee him if he told the truth. Appellant denied that he performed an abortion. He also testified to the effect that when he examined Mrs. Malone there was no evidence of pregnancy; he treated her for an infection; the money was to pay for taking care of her during her confinement in the event she was pregnant; he did not give her a receipt for the money because he did not think he would need all of it. There was also testimony of Dr. Gates (on behalf of appellant) that, in performing an abortion, the cervix has to be grasped with the sharp claws of an instrument which leave marks; and that he would expect to see the marks 5 days after the abortion had been performed. Also there was testimony by Dr. Brown (witness called by the People) to the effect that if an instrument had been used, generally there would be marks on the cervix 5 days thereafter; and he examined her cervix for marks and found none. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the People, it was legally sufficient to support the conviction.

[2, 3] Appellant argues further that the corroborative evidence herein was as compatible with innocence as it was with guilt. Whether such evidence was as compatible with innocence as it was with guilt was a question for the trier of fact. See People v. Allen, 104 Cal.App.2d 402, 412, 231 P.2d 896; People v. Estes, 99 Cal.App.2d 745, 747, 222 P.2d 454. A defendant may not be convicted of the crime of abortion upon the testimony of the woman upon whom the offense was committed unless she is corroborated by other evidence. Penal Code, § 1108. It could be inferred from the evidence herein, exclusive of the testimony of Mrs. Malone, that appellant believed that Mrs. Malone was pregnant, and that he intended to procure an abortion. It therefore appears that such evidence was legally sufficient to corroborate her testimony. Appellant relies upon People v. Murphy, 60 Cal.

App.2d 762, 141 P.2d 755, wherein it was held, as a matter of law, that the corroborative evidence was insufficient to establish that defendant believed that the prosecutrix was pregnant; and that the corroborative circumstances were as compatible with innocence as they were with guilt. In the present case it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the corroborative evidence was insufficient to establish that defendant believed that Mrs. Malone was pregnant.

Appellant contends further that the court erred prejudicially in refusing to give certain instructions (Nos. 19 and 27),¹ requested by appellant, to the effect: (1) When the evidence is susceptible of two reasonable interpretations—one pointing to guilt and one to innocence—it is the duty of the jury to adopt the interpretation pointing to innocence; and (2) a verdict of guilty may not be based upon circumstantial evidence alone unless the proved circumstances are consistent with the hypothesis of guilt and are irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion. Appellant asserts that circumstantial evidence was substantially relied upon herein for proof of guilt; and that the requested instructions were necessary to enable the jury to properly consider the circumstantial evidence. The theory of the prosecution was that appellant believed that Mrs. Malone was pregnant, and that he intended, by the acts performed by him, to procure an abortion. The theory of the defense was that appellant did not believe that Mrs. Malone was pregnant, and that he treated her for

1. No. 19—"Where the facts of the case, considering the evidence as a whole, are susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, one looking toward the guilt and the other toward the innocence of the defendant, it is your duty to give such facts and the evidence the interpretation which makes for the innocence of the defendant, rather than to adopt the one looking toward his guilt.

"If there is any reasonable hypothesis based upon the consideration of the whole evidence in this case, then it is your duty to adopt such hypothesis, and to find him not guilty; for it is your duty not to look for some theory upon which you can convict the defendant, but, on the contrary, it is your duty, and the law requires you, if you can consistently and reasonably do so, to reconcile any and all circumstances and the whole evidence of the case that have been shown with the innocence of the defendant, and if by doing so, the innocence of the defendant appears, or if a reasonable doubt of his guilt arises, the jury must acquit him."

No. 27—"I instruct you further that you are not permitted, on circumstantial evidence alone, to find the defendant guilty of the [any] crime charged against him unless the proved circumstances not only are consistent with the hypothesis that the defendant is guilty of the crime, but are irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion."

an infection and he did not intend to procure an abortion. Such theories, of course, required a determination of appellant's belief and intent. It is clear that, in the matter of determining his belief and intent, the prosecution relied substantially upon circumstantial evidence.

In People v. Yrigoyen, 45 Cal.2d 46, 286 P.2d 1, 3, wherein defendant was charged with issuing a check with intent to defraud, the prosecution relied upon circumstantial evidence to show criminal knowledge and intent. In that case a judgment of conviction was reversed for failure to give an instruction embodying the principle "that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion." It was said therein, 45 Cal.2d at page 49, 286 P.2d at page 3: "[W]e declared in People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 174 et seq., 163 P.2d 8, that the court on its own motion must give an instruction embodying the principle that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion." It was also said therein: "It is true that in the Bender case proof of guilt was entirely circumstantial, whereas in the present case there was direct evidence that defendant issued the check without sufficient funds in or credit with the bank, and circumstantial evidence was relied upon to show his criminal knowledge and intent." (Italics added.)

In People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164 at page 175, 163 P.2d 8, at page 15, it was also said: "It cannot be too strongly emphasized that such quoted statement [referring to statement to effect that circumstantial evidence must not only be consistent with theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion] enunciates a most important rule governing the use of circumstantial evidence. In unequivocal language it should be declared to the jury in every criminal case wherein circumstantial evidence is received."

In People v. Candiott, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 355-356, 275 P.2d 500, it was held that such an instruction must be given when criminal knowledge is shown only by circumstantial evidence.

In People v. Hatchett, 63 Cal.App.2d 144, at page 155, 146 P.2d 469, at page 475, it was said: "Neither the statement in an instruction that the guilt of the defendant must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, nor the statement that as between two opposing reasonable inferences the one which is consistent with innocence must be preferred to the one tending to show guilt, satisfies the right of the defendant to have the jury instructed that where circumstantial evidence is relied upon by the People it must be irreconcilable with the theory of innocence in order to furnish a sound basis for conviction." (Italics added.)

[4] In the present case the trial judge erred prejudicially in refusing to give an instruction embodying the principle that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion.

[5, 6] With reference to appellant's requested instruction No. 19 (regarding two reasonable interpretations of the evidence), it appears that some words have been omitted from the first part of the second paragraph. It is there stated: "If there is any reasonable hypothesis based upon the circumstances of the whole evidence in this case, then it is your duty to adopt such hypothesis * * *." Of course, the trial judge was not required to give that incomplete instruction. In People v. Bender, supra, 27 Cal.2d 164, at page 177, 163 P.2d 8, at page 16, it was said: "They [jury] were told that 'If the evidence in this case is susceptible of two constructions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of the defendant, and the other to his innocence, it is your duty, under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendant's innocence, and reject that which points to his guilt.' This instruction is eminently proper as far as it goes. To it should have been added a direct statement of the precise principle under discussion [the principle that where circumstantial evidence is relied upon for proof of guilt it must be irreconcilable with the theory of innocence].” (Italics added.) As indicated in the Bender case, supra, it would have been proper to give an instruction embodying the principle stated in the first paragraph of said instruction No. 19—regarding two reasonable interpretations of the evidence.

In view of the above conclusion, it is not necessary to discuss appellant's other requested instructions (Nos. 20 and 21—pertaining to circumstantial evidence) which were refused.

The judgment (order granting probation), and the order denying the motion for a new trial, are reversed.

C. A. 8669.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Los Angeles County, California.

Oct. 18, 1955.

Owners of automobile brought action against railroad to recover for damage to automobile as result of collision. The Municipal Court of San Antonio Judicial District, F. B. Mullendore, J., entered judgment adverse to railroad, and railroad appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, Swain, J., held that where railroad crossing was protected by red flashing signal lights and automatic gates, which were activated when a train was 4,500 feet from the crossing, and motorist did not see signal lights, which were operating, until gates started to descend when she was three to six automobile lengths away, and, without stopping, she drove onto tracks where automobile stalled, and automobile was struck by train, motorist was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because of failure to keep a lookout and because of failure to stop as required by the Vehicle Code.

Judgment reversed.

1. Railroads ⇄327(2)

Failure of motorist to see red flashing signal lights at railroad crossing, though they were operating properly as motorist approached crossing, was negligence as a matter of law.

2. Railroads ⇄327(2, 7)

Where railroad crossing was protected by red flashing signal lights and automatic gates, which were activated when a train was 4,500 feet from the crossing, and motorist did not see signal lights, which were operating, until gates started to descend when she was three to six automobile lengths away, and without stopping, she drove onto tracks where automobile stalled, and automobile was struck by train, motorist was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because of failure to keep a lookout and because of failure to stop as required by the Vehicle Code. SWAIN, Judge.

The defendant appeals from a judgment of $1,715 and costs in favor of the two plaintiffs (husband and wife) for damage to their automobile caused by a collision between it and a train of the defendant. The accident happened where Anaheim-Telegraph Road crosses defendant's track at grade near Santa Fe Springs station. The crossing is protected by red flashing signal lights and automatic gates which are activated when a train is 4,500 feet from the crossing. In addition to that, the engine whistle was properly blown and its bell rung. The trial court found that "there was no negligence on the part of defendant railroad in the arrangement, design, installation, timing, maintenance, repair or operation" of the signal devices of the defendant. The signal lights were operating as the plaintiff driver (Mrs. Erwin) approached the crossing but she did not stop as required by Vehicle Code, section 575(a), although she had time to do so had she kept the lookout rule. Instead, she drove onto the track where her car stalled. Fortunately she and her passengers got out of the car before the collision but the automobile was struck by the engine and badly damaged.

[1] The evidence most favorable to respondents upon which the above statement that the plaintiff driver had time to stop had she kept the lookout rule is as follows. There was an interval of three seconds between the moment the crossing signals started to flash and the moment the crossing gates started to descend and it takes the gates three seconds to descend. Despite the adequate warning afforded plaintiff driver of the approach of the train she proceeded upon her course to a point where her car was under the descending arm of the gate, and although she then had ample opportunity to stop, she did not do so for the reason, as she stated, that she did not want the arm of the gate to strike her car. This, however, does not excuse her failure to stop before she reached this point, because the arm, when down, is "only a few feet" from the track. She was required to stop "within 50 feet but not less than 10 feet from the nearest track". Vehicle Code, sec. 575(a). As she approached the track she should have been driving at a rate of speed so that she could have stopped as required. Her testimony is that she was going 25-35 miles per hour and then slowed down after she saw the signals. The testimony most favorable to her is that she was driving 25 miles per hour. At that rate she traveled approximately $37\frac{1}{2}$ feet per second or approximately $112\frac{1}{2}$ feet after the lights started flashing and before the gates started to descend. At that speed she should have been able to stop in 58 feet, Vehicle Code, sec. 670. From her own testimony, however, she did not see the lights during that period nor until the gates started to descend. At that time she was three to six car lengths away or 50-100 feet. She knew she was approaching a railroad crossing. It was negligence as a matter of law to fail to see signals which were operating properly as she approached the crossing. Huetter v. Andrews, 1949, 91 Cal. App.2d 142, 204 P.2d 655; Pate v. Pickwick Stages System, 1932, 125 Cal.App. 670, 14 P.2d 174. "'All drivers of vehicles on a public highway are required by law to keep a vigilant lookout ahead so as to avoid, if reasonably possible, a collision with any other vehicle or person lawfully upon such highway. Failure to keep such lookout, or failure to see that which may be readily seen, if the driver is looking, would constitute negligence as a matter of law.'" Holibaugh v. Kishero Ito, 1937, 21 Cal.App. 2d 480, 485, 69 P.2d 871, 873.

[2] The plaintiff driver was guilty of negligence as a matter of law in two respects: (1) she failed to keep the lookout rule, and (2) she failed to stop as required by the Vehicle Code.

The judgment is reversed. Appellant is awarded its costs of appeal.

C. A. 24.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
San Bernardino County,
California.

Nov. 2, 1955

Action by minor for damages allegedly resulting from conversion of an automobile. The Municipal Court of San Bernardino Judicial District, W. E. Balcom, J., entered judgment for defendant and minor appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Hilliard, J., held that where the settled statement left the reviewing court to speculate and conjecture as to the evidence, if any, upon the precise point raised by appellant, the judgment was presumed correct.

Affirmed

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

The reviewing court must presume that judgment of trial court is correct and is supported by evidence, and all intendments and presumptions are indulged to support judgment on matters as to which the record is silent.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Where settled statement left reviewing court to speculate and conjecture as to whether minor contracted with defendant to repair automobile so that minor, not having effectively disaffirmed contract, would be liable for cost of repair, or gave defendant a delegation of power to have automobile repaired so that minor would not be liable for cost of repair in that delegation was void under statute, correctness of judgment for defendant sued by minor for conversion of automobile which defendant had refused to turn over to minor refusing to pay cost of repair was presumed. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal from Municipal Courts—Civil Cases, rule 7; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 33, 35.

HILLIARD, Judge.

On May 2, 1953 appellant, a minor over the age of eighteen years, and one Bob J. Lee, an adult, purchased a 1950 Mercury automobile under conditional sales contract from one C. E. Bradley. The automobile was delivered to appellant, and thereafter Bradley sold the contract to respondents. Appellant paid one monthly installment upon the contract, but prior to the due date of the second installment contacted respondents, advising he was going in the military service, and requested respondents to sell the car for him. Respondents' manager, Traxler, agreed to attempt to sell the automobile, but recommended that the vehicle be first painted and repaired. Appellant agreed to this procedure and delivered the automobile to respondents for such purpose.

Upon the due date of the second installment, appellant contacted Traxler and a heated argument ensued over the costs of painting and repairs. Appellant demanded possession of the automobile and tendered the installment payment then due. Respondent refused this demand, but offered to return the car upon reimbursement of the cost of painting and repairs, together with the amount of installment due. This offer was rejected by appellant.

[1,2] It is appellant's contention that, as a minor over eighteen years of age, his purported delegation of power to respondents to paint, repair and sell the automobile was prohibited by Civil Code Section 33 and, therefore, void. Respondent asserts that the transaction was within the definition of contracts by minors governed by Civil Code Section 35, which provides:

"* * * and if the contract be made by the minor whilst he is over the age of eighteen, it may be disaffirmed in like manner upon restoring the consideration to the party from whom it was received, or paying its equivalent."

If considered as a contract for repair, painting and sale of the car rather than a delegation of power, it must be conceded that appellant did not effectively disaffirm the contract since he made no effort to restore the consideration or its equivalent to respondents.

The only question then to be determined is whether the transaction was a delegation of power by appellant to respondent. Any attempt upon the part of appellant to appoint Traxler as his agent for contractual purposes would, of course, fall within the prohibition of Civil Code Section 33, and be a void act.

A settled and engrossed statement of facts was filed pursuant to Rule 7 of Rules on Appeal from Municipal Courts in Civil Cases. Such statement fails to disclose with particularity the testimony or other evidence of the transaction between appellant and Traxler. It sets forth that appellant "took the automobile to Mr. Traxler" and "requested Traxler to sell the car for him"; that "Traxler recommended" painting and repairing the car; and that "the car was left with Traxler to be painted, repaired and sold."

Findings of fact and conclusions of law were adopted by the trial Court, and constitute a portion of the record on appeal. Such findings, however, are limited to a determination that appellant was in default under the conditional sales contract, and by reason thereof, respondents were lawfully entitled to possession of the automobile.

We are not able to determine from the record whether Traxler, acting on behalf of respondents, was to do the painting and repairing himself, or to act as appellant's agent in having the work done by other persons. The settled statement does not meet the requirements of Rule 7 and leaves this Court to speculate and conjecture as to the evidence, if any, upon the precise point raised by appellant.

Under familiar and well settled principles of appellate practice, we must presume that the judgment of the trial Court is correct, and is supported by the evidence. All intendments and presumptions are indulged to support it on matters as to which the record is silent. Walling v. Kimball, 17 Cal.2d 364, 110 P.2d 58.

Proceeding to challenge validity of a deed issued to state for taxes. The Superior Court, Calaveras County, Ralph McGee, J., sustained defendants' demurrers, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that one-year statute of limitations barred property owners' proceeding to challenge deed issued to state by reason of delinquent property taxes, even though owners were in exclusive and undisputed possession of property.

Judgment affirmed.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendants following an order sustaining their demurrers without leave to amend.

The main purpose of the action is to have it declared that a deed issued to the State of California for delinquent ad valorem taxes for the fiscal year 1935-1936 is invalid. The real property consists of patented mining claims on four parcels of land and the minerals underlying another parcel.

It is alleged that the Calaveras Central Mining Corporation was the owner of the property on and prior to the first Monday in March, 1935; that on November 20, 1928, the corporation conveyed the property to one K. W. Cannon, as trustee, under a deed of trust recorded on December 4, 1928, for the benefit of one Helen Roesch in order to secure payment of money loaned to the corporation; that by virtue of that instrument Cannon was empowered to sell the property to satisfy the corporation's obligation to Roesch in the event of default, and that on February 9, 1938, the then trustee, Frank A. Trachsler sold the real property and improvements to one John S. DeLancey, who thereupon became the owner thereof and declared himself, prior to August 8, 1940, to hold the property in trust under the terms of a judgment of the Calaveras County Superior Court. The plaintiff Sears derives his title through John S. DeLancey as trustee by substitution effected on September 23, 1944, after the death of DeLancey. The interest of the plaintiff Nevada Investment and Finance Corporation stems from its purchase, as trustee, of all the placer gold in place in the five parcels of property from Sears on October 10, 1944.

It is further alleged that the Assessor of Calaveras County assessed these five parcels of real property separately for the year 1935-1936 and that the total ad valorem taxes levied for that year amounted to $750.50. The taxes were not paid and the property was sold to the state on June 29, 1936. There was no redemption. On July 2, 1943, the Tax Collector executed and recorded a deed to the state. It is alleged and therefore an admitted fact that the plaintiffs were in the exclusive and undisputed possession of the property during all of the times involved.

The plaintiffs seek the annulment of the tax deed on the ground that the tax proceedings supporting the right of the county to deed the property to the state and the deed itself were invalid. They assert that the tax levied against the property exceeded the lawful rate levied generally in the county for 1935-1936; that the purchase price for which the property was sold to the state exceeded the legal amount, and that the separate parcels were improperly sold and deeded to the state as a single unit.

[1] The defendants interposed demurrers alleging that the action is barred by the limitations contained in sections 175 and 3521 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. Section 175, enacted in 1945, provides that "All deeds heretofore and hereafter issued to the State of California * * * by reason of delinquency of property taxes or assessments levied by any taxing agency or revenue district, shall be conclusively presumed to be valid unless held to be invalid in an appropriate proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction to determine the validity of said deed commenced within one year after the execution of said deed, or within one year after the effective date of this section, whichever be later." Section 3521 provides that "A proceeding based on an alleged invalidity or irregularity of any deed to the State for taxes or of any proceedings leading up to the deed can only be commenced within one year after the date of recording of the deed to the State in the county recorder's office or within one year after June 1, 1941, whichever is later."

Both of these sections are statutes of limitation. People v. Chambers, 37 Cal.2d 552, 233 P.2d 557; McCaslin v. Hamblen, 37 Cal.2d 196, 231 P.2d 1; Tannhauser v. Adams, 31 Cal.2d 169, 187 P.2d 716; Sheeter v. Lifur, 113 Cal.App.2d 729, 249 P.2d 336. The defendants argue that the action is barred because the plaintiffs filed their complaint in 1948, more than one year after the enactment of section 175 and more than one year after the tax deed was executed and recorded. It is obvious that if these sections are applicable the plaintiffs are precluded from asserting the invalidity of the tax deed in this action. The plaintiffs contend, however, that the sections do not foreclose an owner in exclusive and undisputed possession of the taxed property from attacking the asserted validity of the deed. The contention is based upon implications which they draw from the opinions of this court in Tannhauser v. Adams, supra, 31 Cal.2d 169, 187 P.2d 716, and McCaslin v. Hamblen, 37 Cal.2d 196, 231 P.2d 1.

[2] The contention that a statute limiting the time for the commencement of an action to set aside a deed to the state for delinquent taxes does not apply to an owner in exclusive and undisputed possession of the property taxed, is largely based on a rule stated to be that a general statute of limitations does not run against such an owner to remove a cloud upon his title. It may be assumed that such is the general rule. See Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062; Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 231 P. 987; Secret Valley Land Co. v. Perry, 187 Cal. 420, 202 P. 449; San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. City and County of San Francisco, 54 Cal.App.2d 105, 128 P.2d 696; Crane v. French, 39 Cal.App.2d 642, 104 P.2d 53; Faria v. Bettencourt, 100 Cal.App. 49, 51-52, 279 P. 679.

[3] But the general rule does not apply as against a special statute of limitation foreclosing the commencement of an action to set aside a deed to the state for delinquent taxes beyond one year from and after the recording of the deed to the state. Here the facts stated as constituting the alleged defects in the deed all occurred prior to the execution and recordation of the deed.

None of the alleged defects in the deed were jurisdictional in the sense that the curative act of 1943, Stats.1943, page 1993, would not apply; nor is the deed claimed to be void on its face. If the contention of the plaintiffs should prevail the finality of tax proceedings would be thrown into confusion. The validity of tax deeds as against an owner in possession of real property would be placed in suspension for an indefinite period and until at his election he chose to attack it. Without limit of time he could defend against it. There appears to be no reason why an owner of land, although in exclusive and undisputed possession, should not be required to be alert to protect his rights as against his own delinquency in the payment of taxes. He is charged with notice that if he claims the invalidity of a tax deed to the state or of the proceedings leading up to it he must bring his action for that purpose within the statutory time.

The improper creation of the tax lien and recordation of the deed to the state do more than merely give rise to a permissible cause of action in favor of the landowner. They also start the running of the special statute of limitations applicable to such an owner. If he does not move to protect his rights as against the tax by payment, redemption, or timely and successful attack upon the tax deed or the proceedings leading up to it, he is divested of his title. After the statutory period has run the tax deed transfers the title by operation of law from the owner of the property to the state the same in effect as a voluntary grant.

It is contended by the plaintiffs that this court, at least by implication, has ruled otherwise or recognized a contrary rule in Tannhauser v. Adams, supra, 31 Cal.2d 169, 187 P.2d 716. It was said in that case, 31 Cal.2d at page 176, 187 P.2d at page 721: "Regardless of what may be the law under other circumstances it appears to us that there is no sound reason why the right of one out of possession to attack a tax title for the defect here relied upon, whether it be considered jurisdictional or otherwise, should not be barred if his action is not instituted within the prescribed statutory period, provided that such period is a reasonable one."

It is not claimed that this court or any court of this state has directly and finally decided that sections 175 and 3521 of the Revenue and Taxation Code do not apply to an owner in possession. Nor is it contended that any case decided in this state directly involved the point. But it is contended that by indirection the courts of the state have approved the rule contended for by the plaintiffs. It is true as stated by them that what was said in the cases in this state on the subject was obiter. The plaintiffs say that "In McCaslin v. Hamblen, 37 Cal.2d 196, 231 P.2d 1, the dictum in Tannhauser v. Adams was approved, the court saying: 'Assuming that the rule might have application in a case where the plaintiff is the original tax-delinquent owner in undisturbed possession, it would seem right to conclude that a generalization applicable merely to "owners in possession" is too broad.'" See Elbert, Ltd. v. Gross, 41 Cal. 2d 322, 260 P.2d 35. Such an expression is not to be taken as the announcement of a rule that an owner in possession of real property is not bound by a valid statute of limitations with reference to tax-delinquent proceedings, the same as an owner not in possession. There is no contention that it is not within the power of the state, through its legislature, to provide for such statutes of limitations as those now before us. As applied to the facts in this case there can be no question of their validity and proper application. This necessarily includes the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the tax deed, such as the alleged fraudulent and otherwise overvaluation of the land, the excessive tax rate and sale price, and the sale in block instead of in parcels.

It is concluded that the plaintiffs are barred by statute from attacking the tax deed and all proceedings prior to its issuance and recordation. Since the state's title to the property has not been successfully attacked, the plaintiffs asserted objections to the assessments made after the execution and delivery of the deeds are futile.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action against police officers for false arrest and imprisonment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that where the complaint stated that the police officers told newspaper reporters that plaintiff was a mobster and member of a criminal gang, but complaint did not allege that such statement to reporters was true, and, on contrary, complaint alleged in effect that statement to reporters was false and that the defendants knew true facts, complaint did not as matter of law show probable cause for arrest and did not fail to state cause of action.

4. False Imprisonment ⚡22

When plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment has proved an arrest without process, followed by imprisonment and dam-

Where complaint for false arrest and imprisonment stated that the defendant police officers told newspaper reporters that plaintiff was a mobster and member of criminal gang, but complaint did not allege that statement to reporters was true, and, on contrary, complaint alleged in effect that statement to reporters was false and that the defendants knew true facts, complaint did not as matter of law show probable cause for arrest and did not fail to state cause of action. Pen.Code, § 836.

6. False Imprisonment ⚡20(1)

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was arrested by officers on February 13, 1950 without warrant or process, was removed to city jail and kept there without opportunity to communicate with an attorney or anyone else until his release on February 16th without filing of charges, alleged sufficient facts to state cause of action on theory of unnecessary delay in bringing plaintiff before magistrate. 7. Appeal and Error ⚡863

False Imprisonment ⚡39

In an action for false arrest and imprisonment, wherein period of detention in city jail was a disputed matter, such period was a matter for determination by trier of facts and not matter to be decided by reviewing court on appeal after granting of motion for judgment on pleadings. 8. Arrest ⚡70

Statute providing that defendant must in all cases be taken before magistrate without unnecessary delay, and, in any event, within two days after arrest, excluding Sundays and holidays, does not authorize two days' detention in all cases but provides maximum limitation, and detention of less than two days, if unreasonable under circumstances, is violative of statute. Pen.Code, § 825.

9. Arrest ⚡70

[1] Plaintiff sued three members of the Los Angeles Police Department seeking damages for false arrest and imprisonment. Defendants did not demur, but when the case came on for trial they objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. The objection was sustained, and defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted without leave to amend. It was, of course, error to grant the motion if the complaint states a cause of action. Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v. Contractors' State License Bd., 39 Cal.2d 561, 565, 247 P.2d 913; Budrow v. Wheatcraft, 115 Cal.App.2d 517, 522, 252 P.2d 637; see 2 Witkin, California Procedure (1954), pp. 1500, 1704; cf. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal. 2d 809, 812-813, 161 P.2d 449.

The complaint alleges as follows: About 10 p. m. on February 13, 1950, defendants unlawfully arrested plaintiff without a warrant or process of any kind, and against his will they caused him to be taken to the offices of the Los Angeles Police Department. They locked him in a room, and, about 3 a. m., without his consent and with intent to injure and humiliate him, they admitted a large number of newspaper reporters and photographers and caused him to be photographed, knowing that his picture would be published throughout the United States as that of a criminal held for the commission of a felony. Defendants then removed him to the Los Angeles City Jail and, without permitting him to communicate with an attorney or anyone else, kept him in a cell until they released him on February 16. No charges were filed against plaintiff either prior or subsequent to his arrest. While he was in custody defendants stated to newspaper reporters that he was being held for suspicion of conspiracy to commit murder, that he was a member of a criminal gang and a mobster, that he had been under police observation for the nine months immediately preceding his arrest and that they found an arsenal of firearms in his home at the time of his arrest. Plaintiff has always been a law-abiding citizen and has never been a mobster or a member of any criminal gang. No firearms were found in or maintained in his home or removed from it by defendants, and had they kept him under observation they would have discovered no evidence to sustain his arrest or the wrongful statements which were made by defendants to the reporters. Plaintiff since his birth has resided in the city of Los Angeles, where he attended grammar school, high school and the University of Southern California. He served in the United States Army in World War II, had an eye shot out in enemy action and was honorably discharged upon the conclusion of the war. Defendants were at all times aware of and had full knowledge of the foregoing facts, and in making the arrest they acted with deliberate and premeditated malice and with intent to injure plaintiff. The complaint prays for actual damages in the sum of $250,000 and punitive damages in the amount of $100,000.

[2-5] A police officer who makes an arrest without a warrant and without justification may be held civilly liable for false arrest and imprisonment. Miller v. Glass, 44 Cal.2d 359, 282 P.2d 501; Hughes v. Oreb, 36 Cal.2d 854, 857, 228 P.2d 550; Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 102 P. 12; Oppenheimer v. City of Los Angeles, 104 Cal.App. 2d 545, 232 P.2d 26; Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 209 P.2d 156. A cause of action for false imprisonment based on unlawful arrest is stated where it is alleged that there was an arrest without process, followed by imprisonment and damages. Upon proof of those facts the burden is on the defendants to prove justification for the arrest. Hughes v. Oreb, 36 Cal.2d 854, 858, 228 P.2d 550; Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 511-513, 209 P.2d 156; Collins v. Jones, 131 Cal.App. 747, 750, 22 P.2d 39; see 1 Cooley on Torts [4th ed. 1932]; § 112, pp. 360-361; 22 Am.Jur. 422, 427; cf. People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 661-664, 107 P.2d 601. The complaint contains the essential averments for false imprisonment on this theory, but it is argued that the additional allegations regarding the statements made by defendants to the reporters show as a matter of law that defendants had reasonable cause to make the arrest.¹ It is not alleged that the statements made by defendants were true or that defendants believed them to be true or had reasonable cause for such belief. To the contrary, it is in effect alleged that the statements were untrue and that defendants were aware of the true facts. The allegations regarding defendants' declarations to the press, which may have been directed to the claim of punitive damages, do not negative the cause of action for false arrest.

that there was unnecessary delay in bringing plaintiff before a magistrate. Section 849 of the Penal Code provides: "When an arrest is made without a warrant by a peace officer or private person, the person arrested must, without unnecessary delay, be taken before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest is made, and a complaint stating the charge against the person, must be laid before such magistrate." In the light of this section it has been held that an action for false imprisonment may be maintained if the defendant unlawfully detains the prisoner for an unreasonable period of time and unnecessarily delays taking him before a magistrate. Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 511, 209 P.2d 156 [24 hours]; Williams v. Zelzah Warehouse Co., 126 Cal.App. 28, 30-31, 14 P.2d 177 [32 hours]; Vernon v. Plumas Lumber Co., 71 Cal.App. 112, 117-118, 234 P. 869 [2-3 hours]; see Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 531, 102 P. 12 [3 or 4 hours]; Peckham v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 36 Cal.App.2d 214, 218-219, 97 P.2d 472.

[7-9] Defendants contend that section 849, quoted above, must be read with section 825 of the Penal Code, which provides that the defendant "must in all cases be taken before the magistrate without unnecessary delay, and, in any event, within two days after his arrest, excluding Sundays and holidays * * *." It is claimed that under this provision a prisoner may be held in all cases for two days without being taken before a magistrate.² The statute, however, does not authorize a two-day detention in all cases but, instead, places a limit upon what may be considered a necessary delay, and a detention of less than two days, if unreasonable under the circumstances,

1. Section 836 of the Penal Code provides that an officer may make an arrest without a warrant "1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence. 2. When a person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence. 3. When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. 4. On a charge made, upon a reasonable cause, of the commission of a felony by the party arrested. 5. At night, when there is reasonable cause to believe that he has committed a felony."

2. Defendants assert that plaintiff filed with the city a verified claim stating that he was released on February 15, whereas the complaint alleges that he was released on the 16th. The claim is not before us, and the period of plaintiff's detention must be determined by the trier of the facts.

is in violation of the statute. People v. Stroble, 36 Cal.2d 615, 624-625, 226 P.2d 330 [about 24 hours]. Moreover, the duty to bring the prisoner before a magistrate without delay is even more imperative where, as here, the arrest is made without a warrant. Williams v. Zelzah Warehouse Co., 126 Cal.App. 28, 30-31, 14 P.2d 177.

[10] Citation herein of Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 513, 209 P.2d 156, and Peckham v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 36 Cal.App.2d 214, 218, 97 P.2d 472, should not be construed as implying our approval of language in the opinions in those cases to the effect that, when there is unreasonable delay in taking a person before a magistrate after a lawful arrest, the false imprisonment dates from the time of the arrest. There is also similar language in Korkman v. Hanlon Drydock, etc., Co., 53 Cal.App. 147, 156, 199 P. 880. We are satisfied that the better rule is that where the arrest is lawful, subsequent unreasonable delay in taking the person before a magistrate will not affect the legality of the arrest, although it will subject the offending person to liability for so much of the imprisonment as occurs after the period of necessary or reasonable delay. See Rest., Torts, § 136, Comment d; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. v. Hinsdell, 76 Kan. 74, 90 P. 800, 12 L.R.A.,N.S., 94; Oxford v. Berry, 204 Mich. 197, 170 N.W. 83; Stromberg v. Hansen, 177 Minn. 307, 225 N.W. 148; Teel v. May Department Stores, 348 Mo. 696, 155 S.W.2d 74, 137 A.L.R. 495; *Brown v. [11] Defendants' assertion that their custody of plaintiff ceased when he was placed in the city jail and that they were not responsible for his subsequent detention is contrary to the facts alleged in the complaint and therefore need not be considered by us.

An unqualified reversal remands cause for new trial and places parties in trial court in same position as if cause had never been tried, with the exception that opinion of court on appeal must be followed so far as applicable, even if there has been only a partial reversal of judgment.

3. Divorce ⇨287

Partial reversal of judgment in wife's action for divorce on basis that needs of parties did not justify amount of alimony awarded to wife necessarily rested upon evidence before court, and such opinion did not affect scope of retrial, but wife at retrial would have right to produce evidence tending to show different circumstances than shown by record in former trial.

4. Divorce ⇨287

Where reviewing court had partially reversed judgment in wife's action for divorce on basis that needs of parties did not justify alimony award, trial court could not, on husband's motion, determine amount of permanent support and maintenance solely on basis of record in former trial, without consent of parties.

5. Mandamus ⇨51

Where reviewing court had partially reversed judgment granting wife divorce on ground that needs of parties did not justify alimony award, husband was not entitled to writ of mandate to compel court to fix amount of permanent alimony without retrial, on claim that procedure for setting matters for retrial would cause hardship by delay. West's Ann.Superior Court Rules, rules 6, 12.

6. Mandamus ⇨51

Where reviewing court partially reversed judgment granting wife divorce on ground that alimony had been improperly awarded, wife did not waive procedural rights to having retrial on issues so as to enable former husband to proceed by writ of mandate to require court to redetermine issue on basis of evidence at former trial by waiting more than five months after remittitur was filed to have cause set for retrial and by not moving to strike husband's motion that permanent alimony be fixed by court, in view of fact that husband had equal opportunity to have cause set for retrial and that husband had created uncertainty by having final judgment of divorce entered ex parte, which judgment was later vacated.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨948

Where record did not include transcript of proceedings, court would not presume abuse of discretion in rulings on various motions.

8. Divorce ⇨287

Where reviewing court partially reversed judgment granting wife divorce on ground that alimony had been improperly determined, trial court had power during pendency of proceedings to affix amount of permanent alimony to be awarded her, to allow wife temporary alimony, costs and attorneys' fees. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 137.2, 137.3; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1049.

9. Divorce ⇨231

In theory, alimony is considered compensation to injured spouse for loss resulting from other's breach of obligations of marital relationship, but right to receive it depends not alone upon granting of divorce for fault of opposing party, but also upon showing that circumstances of both parties justify award made. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 137.2, 137.3, 139; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1049.

10. Divorce ⇨234

Despite his prevalence in divorce action, spouse may acquire no right to permanent alimony in absence of provision for it in decree. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 137.2, 137.3, 139; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1049.

11. Divorce ⇨241

It is considered better practice in awarding permanent alimony to specify periodic payments, though court may declare payment of lump sum. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

12. Divorce ⇨235

Although generally periodic payments of alimony commence with effective date of decree, it is not abuse of discretion to direct payment from appearance of defendant or from commencement of action or to reserve jurisdiction to consider it at time after entry of judgment. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

13. Divorce ⇨287

Trial judge in affixing award of permanent alimony, on retrial of cause following reversal may consider practically everything which has legitimate bearing upon present and prospective matters relating to lives of both parties and is not limited to consideration of circumstances existing at time of original trial.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Peirson M. Hall appealed "from that part of an interlocutory decree which ordered him to pay alimony and the fees of Mrs. Hall's attorneys." This court ordered that "[i]nsofar as the judgment awards Mrs. Hall $350 per month for support and maintenance, it is reversed; in all other respects it is affirmed." Hall v. Hall, 42 Cal. 2d 435, 436, 442, 267 P.2d 249, 253.

On the same day that the remittitur was filed, upon the ex parte application of Hall, a final judgment of divorce was granted, incorporating by reference the provisions of the interlocutory decree. Mrs. Hall attempted unsuccessfully to have execution on the judgment issued. She then moved to vacate the judgment. While that motion was pending, she obtained orders to show cause why Hall should not be required to pay temporary alimony, costs and attorneys' fees "during the pendency of this action." Before the time set for the hearing upon these orders, Hall filed written opposition and gave notice of motions for entry of final judgment and for orders determining his existing liability, if any, and fixing the amount of permanent alimony.

There have been no rulings made on the orders to show cause nor upon subsequent motions by Mrs. Hall for temporary alimony and attorneys' fees. However, the final judgment has been set aside upon the grounds that it was void and obtained by inadvertence. Hall noticed an appeal from the order of vacation but later abandoned it.

A minute order recites that the "Motion of defendant for Order Determining Liability of Defendant, if any, and Fixing Amount thereof" came on for hearing and that the "Oral motion of counsel for defendant to fix amount of permanent alimony is argued and denied." Thereafter, the court denied a motion to reconsider that ruling. It also denied a motion later made to "reconsider its decision re: Liability of Defendant and the fixing of permanent alimony;" and denied a "renewed motion" to fix permanent alimony.

By his present petition, Hall seeks a writ of mandate commanding the superior court "to hear and determine the motion of your petitioner for an order fixing the amount of permanent alimony" to be paid to Mrs. Hall and requiring it to "desist and refrain" from hearing her application for temporary alimony, costs and attorneys' fees. But the record shows that the superior court has heard and determined adversely to Hall his motion to fix permanent alimony as well as three subsequent motions to reconsider its ruling. By his demand for affirmative action he is endeavoring to compel the court to hear a motion which has been ruled upon.

However, the memorandum of points and authorities and briefs in support of the petition state that the order made upon his motion to determine his liability for permanent alimony was erroneous. His position is that the remittitur in Hall v. Hall, supra, commands the trial court to fix permanent alimony and that it has no jurisdiction to give any other relief.

[1,2] The judgment and order of this court on the appeal was a partial reversal of the portion of the judgment from which the appeal was taken, without directions. In a civil action such a reversal remands the cause for a new trial. Erlin v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 7 Cal.2d 547, 549, 61 P.2d 756; In re Estate of Pusey, 177 Cal. 367, 371, 170 P. 846. "[A]n unqualified reversal remands the cause for a new trial [citation] and places the parties in the trial court in the same position as if the cause had never been tried, with the exception that the opinion of the court on appeal must be followed so far as applicable." Central

Sav. Bank of Oakland v. Lake, 201 Cal. 438, 443, 257 P. 521, 523. This principle is equally applicable to a partial reversal of a judgment. Cf. Pillsbury v. Superior Court, 8 Cal.2d 469, 472, 66 P.2d 149.

[3] In Hall v. Hall, supra, the partial reversal of the judgment was unqualified, and the opinion in no way restricts the scope of a retrial of the issues set at large. The basis of the order was the conclusion that "the needs of the respective parties do not justify the amount of alimony here allowed to the wife." 42 Cal.2d at page 442, 267 P.2d at page 253. Necessarily that conclusion rests upon the evidence then before the court. Cf. Erlin v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., supra, 7 Cal.2d at page 548, 61 P.2d 756. Mrs. Hall now may be able to present evidence tending to show different circumstances than those shown by the record in the former trial, and she so asserts in affidavits in support of her motions for temporary alimony and counsel fees.

[4, 5] Hall does not allege, and the record does not show, that he has complied with the rules governing a setting for trial in the superior court. Rule 6, Rules for Superior Courts. Essentially, by this proceeding he is seeking to compel the superior court to fix the amount of permanent alimony without a retrial. But, without the consent of the parties, the trial court could not determine that matter solely on the basis of the record in the former trial. Blache v. Blache, 37 Cal.2d 531, 535, 233 P.2d 547. To do so would be prejudicial error, Heinfelt v. Arth, 4 Cal.App.2d 381, 384, 41 P.2d 191, and there is no legal basis for compelling by writ of mandate action by the trial court which should be obtained under established procedure. If, as Hall claims, the procedure for setting the matter for trial may cause hardship through delay, there is available to him a method of advancing the date of a trial. Rule 12, Rules for Superior Courts.

[6, 7] The further contention is made that Mrs. Hall waived her procedural rights by waiting more than five months after the remittitur was filed to have the cause set for retrial and by not moving to strike Hall's motion that permanent alimony be fixed by the court. During that period, however, Hall had equal opportunity to have the case set for retrial, and the trial judge was justified in concluding that Mrs. Hall's failure to do so resulted from the uncertainty created by her husband's entry of a final judgment of divorce and the necessity of contesting that order. No authority is cited for the proposition that Mrs. Hall waived her right to object to Hall's motion by proceeding to argue it at the time set for a hearing upon it instead of interposing a motion to strike. In any event, all of these objections, at most, would be grounds for showing an abuse of discretion by the trial judge in failing to dispense with the procedure required for setting the case for trial. The record does not include a transcript of the proceedings in which rulings upon the various motions were made, and an abuse of discretion may not be presumed. Meyer v. State Board of Equalization, 42 Cal.2d 376, 387, 267 P.2d 257.

[8] Hall's petition for mandate also is directed toward prohibiting a hearing upon Mrs. Hall's motions for temporary alimony, costs and attorneys' fees. The court is authorized to make those awards "[d]uring the pendency of any action" for divorce. Civ.Code, §§ 137.2, 137.3. Section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure states that an action is pending "from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal".

Sections 137.2 and 137.3 are a restatement of former section 137 of the Civil Code. Lerner v. Superior Court, 38 Cal.2d 676, 242 P.2d 321, considered the authority of the superior court to award counsel fees and costs in connection with the application of the wife for a writ of prohibition pending an appeal from an order of modification of the terms of a final decree of divorce relating to the custody of the children. It was pointed out that "under section 137 * * * the phrase therein, 'When an action for divorce is pending,' embraced many diverse proceedings growing out of the divorce action and arising after entry of the final decree." 38 Cal.2d at page 685, 242 P.2d at page 326. After reviewing several decisions involving awards of counsel fees and costs made during the pendency of proceedings to enforce or modify awards of permanent alimony or to construe the provisions of a property settlement agreement, the court concluded that attorneys' fees and costs properly were allowed. "On principle," it was said, "there is no difference between actions in which a woman is compelled by her former husband to resist by an appeal a proceeding brought by him to modify a custody or alimony award and actions in which she is compelled to seek prohibition to prevent improper modification of such awards." 38 Cal.2d at pages 685-686, 242 P.2d at page 326. The Lerner case and authorities cited support the contention that the trial court in the present action has authority to award to Mrs. Hall the attorneys' fees and costs necessary to enable her to prosecute her demand for permanent alimony. Accord: Dexter v. Dexter, 42 Cal.2d 36, 44, 265 P.2d 873; Wilson v. Wilson, 33 Cal.2d 107, 115, 199 P.2d 671.

Similarly, awards of temporary alimony made after the entry of an interlocutory decree have been upheld. Nelson v. Nelson, 7 Cal.2d 449, 453, 60 P.2d 982 (during the appeal by the husband from an order granting the wife's motion to vacate the final decree); Bernard v. Bernard, 79 Cal.App. 2d 353, 358, 179 P.2d 625 (pending a hearing upon the wife's application for permanent alimony made after the interlocutory decree but before a final decree); De Leshe v. De Leshe, 80 Cal.App.2d 517, 518, 181 P.2d 931 (pending appeal from an order modifying the interlocutory decree); cases cited in Kellett v. Kellett, 2 Cal.2d 45, 49, 39 P.2d 203 (pending appeal from the interlocutory decree). By the same principles, here, during the pendency of the proceeding to fix the amount of permanent alimony to be awarded to Mrs. Hall, the trial court has power to allow temporary alimony.

Neither Wilson v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.2d 458, 189 P.2d 266, nor Harrold v. Harrold, 43 Cal.2d 77, 271 P.2d 489, states a contrary rule. The Wilson case considered the effect of a failure to incorporate expressly in the final decree the provisions of the interlocutory judgment relating to permanent alimony. The rule applied in the controversy between the Harrolds was that a final decree might be entered under the circumstances there presented despite the pendency of litigation as to rights of the parties to the community property. The court did not decide whether such action would be proper if an issue relating to permanent alimony is pending, or, if such a judgment could be entered, what its effect might be upon the right to receive either temporary or permanent alimony.

An additional question is raised by Hall as to the circumstances which may be considered in fixing the amount of permanent alimony and the time when such an award should become operative. It is his position that the portions of the interlocutory decree from which no appeal was taken are now final and fix the right of Mrs. Hall to support as of the time specified therein for the commencement of his payments therefor. Upon a retrial to determine the amount of such payments, he maintains, the trial judge will be limited to a consideration of the circumstances existing at the date of the original trial. Mrs. Hall asserts that all of the circumstances, including those arising between the trial and a retrial, properly may be considered.

[9, 10] In theory, alimony is considered to be compensation to the injured spouse for the loss resulting from the other's breach of the obligations of the marital relationship. Arnold v. Arnold, 76 Cal.App. 2d 877, 885-886, 174 P.2d 674. But the right to receive it depends not alone upon the granting of a divorce for the fault of the opposing party, but also upon a showing that the circumstances of the parties justify the award made. Civ.Code, § 139; Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 811, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246. Despite his prevalence in the divorce action, a spouse may acquire no right to permanent alimony in the absence of a provision for it in the decree. Puckett v. Puckett, 21 Cal.2d 833, 841, 136 P.2d 1; Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 47, 37 P. 770.

In Hall v. Hall, supra, the portion of the interlocutory judgment dealing with permanent alimony provided that "the defendant pay to the plaintiff for her support and maintenance the sum of Three Hundred Fifty ($350.00) per month on or before the 6th day of each calendar month, commencing July 6, 1952; and until the further order of the Court. * * *

Implicit in the judgment is the determination that the circumstances justified the award made but not that Mrs. Hall was entitled to some other, undisclosed, amount in the event of a retrial upon that issue. Hall's appeal from "that part of the judgment * * * rendered in favor of plaintiff Gertrude M. Hall, awarding said plaintiff Three Hundred Fifty Dollars ($350.00) per month for her support and maintenance * * *" placed in issue the sufficiency of the evidence to justify that portion of the judgment. The reversal of the judgment was predicated upon the conclusion that the circumstances did not justify the award; but this court did not decide nor infer that the wife would be entitled to some lesser amount when evidence was again presented in regard to her rights. On the contrary, and particularly in view of other circumstances which might be shown, justification might be found for awarding no amount for support and maintenance.

[11, 12] Under section 139 of the Civil Code, the trial judge has a broad discretion in fixing both the amount of alimony and the manner in which it shall be paid. It is considered to be the better practice to specify periodic payments, see Tremper v. Tremper, 39 Cal.App. 62, 65, 177 P. 868, but the court may also require the payment of a lump sum. Honey v. Honey, 60 Cal.App. 759, 762, 214 P. 250. The only limitations placed by the section upon the time in which the order for support shall be operative are that the allowance must be made to a spouse "for his or her life, or for such shorter period as the court may deem just"; also that the allowance terminates "upon the death of the obligor or upon the remarriage of the other party." Generally, periodic payments commence with the effective date of the decree; but it is not an abuse of discretion to direct payment of permanent alimony "from the appearance of the defendant in the action, or from its commencement", Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 46, 16 P. 345, 365, or to reserve jurisdiction to consider it at some time after entry of the judgment of divorce. See McCaleb v. McCaleb, 177 Cal. 147, 149, 169 P. 1023.

[13] The circumstances which the trial judge may consider in fixing permanent alimony include "practically everything which has a legitimate bearing upon the present and prospective matters relating to the lives of both parties." Hall v. Hall, supra, 42 Cal.2d 442, 267 P.2d 253. To limit the court to a consideration of the circumstances existing at the time of the original trial would place an artificial and wholly unjustified restriction upon the exercise of his discretion. Necessarily, an award of alimony looks to the future. Unquestionably, if the trial judge were to fix alimony as of the date of the interlocutory decree without considering the presently existing circumstances he would be entitled to consider them in connection with a possible modification of the award. To restrict him in the manner suggested by Hall could result only in a superfluous modification proceeding.

Finally, some concern is expressed that payments previously made to Mrs. Hall by stipulation and pursuant to an award of temporary alimony pending a retrial may overlap those required under an award of permanent alimony. It is to be presumed that the court will consider such payments in framing any decree for permanent alimony and give such proper credit for them as may be just.

The alternative writ is discharged and the peremptory writ denied.

CARTER, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the conclusion that petitioner is not entitled to a writ of mandate here. I do not agree, however, with the holding therein that the trial court, in fixing the amount of permanent alimony, should not be limited to a consideration of the circumstances existing at the time the interlocutory decree of divorce was granted.

Section 139 of the Civil Code provides that the trial court may make such suitable allowance to the wife as the court may "deem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively; and the court may from time to time modify its orders in these respects. * * *" In Hall v. Hall, 42 Cal.2d 435, 267 P.2d 249, we reversed the judgment of the trial court insofar as it awarded Mrs. Hall $350 per month for her support and maintenance. Such a reversal set the matter of permanent alimony at large and remanded that part of the cause for a new trial. On the retrial of the amount of alimony to be awarded, I see no escape from the conclusion that the trial court is limited to a consideration of the circumstances of the parties as they existed at the time the original award was made. We held that the amount awarded to Mrs. Hall at that time constituted an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court under the facts then prevailing. The code provides that the court may, from time to time, modify its orders with respect to the support provisions made by it. The modification must, however, be made upon a proper showing, Bradley v. Bradley, 40 Cal.App. 638, 181 P. 237, that conditions have changed since the entry of the initial order, Grant v. Grant, 52 Cal.App.2d 359, 126 P.2d 130; Triest v. Triest, 67 Cal.App. 2d 320, 154 P.2d 2; and only such facts as have arisen or have become known to the party since the entry of the decree may be the basis of modification. Bradley v. Bradley, 40 Cal.App. 638, 181 P. 237; Ralphs v. Ralphs, 86 Cal.App.2d 324, 194 P.2d 592.

At the time the interlocutory decree was granted and the allowance for permanent support made to Mrs. Hall, the circumstances then prevailing led us to conclude that the award was excessive and constituted an abuse of discretion. Since that time, Judge Hall, as a federal district judge, has received an increase in salary. Had there been no reversal by this Court, Mrs. Hall, upon proper application for modification, might have been able to show that because of changed circumstances she was entitled to a modification of the prior order for alimony as to future installments. The earlier order would, however, have been final as to accrued installments. Zaragoza v. Zaragoza, 48 Cal.App.2d 27, 119 P.2d 162; Stevens v. Stevens, 88 Cal.App.2d 654, 199 P.2d 314; Steele v. Steele, 108 Cal.App. 2d 595, 239 P.2d 63. It seems most obvious here that on the retrial of the matter of support, the trial court must be limited to a consideration of the circumstances as they originally existed and that any modification must be made upon a proper showing of changed circumstances and date from the time of such changed circumstances. This is not to say that a new action must be brought because to avoid multiplicity of suits, a court, sitting in equity, may consider all related matters brought to its attention. It should be clearly understood, however, that any increase in salary received by Judge Hall since the time of the interlocutory decree should not be considered by the trial court in its retrial of the matter of permanent alimony as originally awarded. If this increase in salary should prompt the trial court to feel that an increase in support allowance should be made to Mrs. Hall, such increase should not be retroactive to the time the original award was made because of the circumstances then prevailing. In other words, it is my view that an award of permanent alimony must be based upon the circumstances of the parties existing at the date of the interlocutory decree, and any modification of such award may not take effect until the date a change in such circumstances is shown to exist. The trial court may, of course, retry the issue of permanent alimony and hear any application for modification at the same time.

CARTER, Justice.

This is a proceeding in mandamus by petitioner, the Roman Catholic Welfare Corporation of San Francisco, to compel the issuance of a building permit for the construction of a building to be used for an elementary school in which secular and religious subjects were to be taught. The building permit was denied on the sole ground that a zoning ordinance of the city of Piedmont prohibited the construction of any school within Zone A, where petitioner's land is located, except public schools under the jurisdiction of the board of education of the city of Piedmont. In Zone A, there are three elementary schools, one junior high school and one high school, all under the jurisdiction of the board of education of the city. The ordinance in question was passed by the city council and approved by a large majority of the voters at a general election.

There is only one question involved: Whether the city of Piedmont may, by ordinance, constitutionally prevent the construction of a building to be used for private school purposes in an area where public schools are located.

"It is well settled that zoning ordinances, when reasonable in object and not arbitrary in operation, constitute a justifiable exercise of police power, * * *. Every intendment is in favor of the validity of the exercise of police power, and, even though a court might differ from the determination of the legislative body, if there is a reasonable basis for the belief that the establishment of a strictly residential district has substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals or general welfare, the zoning measure will be deemed to be within the purview of the police power." Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 337, 175 P.2d 542, 547.

We must then determine whether, in the instant case, there is a reasonable basis for the ordinance prohibiting private schools in an area where public schools are permitted. Petitioner acquired its property subsequent to the time the ordinance was passed. It is conceded that the question is one of first impression in this state.

The record shows that Zone A is composed of 98.7% of the entire area of the city of Piedmont and is populated by approximately 98.2% of the entire population of the city of Piedmont. Zone B has .59% of the area of the city and consists of three non-contiguous parcels of land none of which is unimproved; Zone C has .24% of the area of the city and consists of ten non-contiguous parcels of land none of which is unimproved; Zone D has .46% of the total area of the city and consists of five non-contiguous parcels of land two of which are unimproved. Private schools are permitted in Zones B, C, and D. The land owned by petitioner and on which it is contemplated the private school in question will be constructed is immediately adjacent to Corpus Christi (Roman Catholic) Church.

Petitioner argues that the ordinance in question is unconstitutional and void because of its arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination against private schools. Respondents, on the other hand, argue that the ordinance constitutes a reasonable exercise of the city's police power in that the city is primarily residential in character, that in excluding private schools, the city council could consider such factors as the character of the district, the conservation of property values, public opinion, matters affecting traffic control, size of streets, parking, noise, fire protection, over-burdening of water mains and sewers, and the peace, comfort and quiet of the district. It is contended that private schools may be located in the three remaining zones; that the proposed school would be attended by children from both Oakland (the adjacent city) and Piedmont and perhaps children from other communities while the public schools in the zone would be attended by only Piedmont children and that the larger number of children would bring about more noise and traffic hazards with the necessity for more traffic control. Respondents rely on State ex rel. Wisconsin Lutheran High School Conference v. Sinar, 267 Wis. 91, 65 N.W.2d 43, 47, a mandamus action by a private, nonprofit corporation to compel the city building inspector to issue a permit for the construction of a private high school in a class "A" residential zone where public schools were permitted. It was there held, with two justices dissenting, that "* * * tangible differences material to the classifications of the ordinance can be readily pointed out which sustain the distinction made by the ordinance between the schools. To begin with, the term 'public' is the antithesis of 'private'. The public school is not a private one. They serve different interests and are designed to do so. The private school is founded and maintained because it is different. Is that difference material to the purpose of zoning? In many respects the two schools perform like functions and in probably all respects concerning noise, traffic difficulties and the other objectionable features already mentioned they stand on an equality, so that in several of the objects of zoning ordinances,—the promotion of health, safety and morals, as laid down by sec. 62.23(7) (a), Stats., and developed by respondent's brief, we may not say that the two schools differ. But when we come to 'the promotion of the general welfare of the community',—'Ay, there's the rub.' The public school has the same features objectionable to the surrounding area as a private one, but it has, also, a virtue which the other lacks, namely, that it is located to serve and does serve that area without discrimination. Whether the private school is sectarian or commercial, though it now complains of discrimination, in its services it discriminates and the public school does not. Anyone in the district of fit age and educational qualifications may attend the public high school. It is his right. He has no comparable right to attend a private school. To go there he must meet additional standards over which the public neither has nor should have control. The private school imposes on the community all the disadvantages of the public school but does not compensate the community in the same manner or to the same extent. If the private school does not make the same contribution to public welfare this difference may be taken into consideration by the legislative body in framing its ordinance. If education offered by a school to the residents of an area without discrimination is considered by the council to compensate for the admitted drawbacks to its presence there, that school may be permitted a location which is denied to another school which does not match the offer, and we can not say that such a distinction is arbitrary or unreasonable or that such discrimination between the two schools lacks foundation in a difference which bears a 'fair, substantial, reasonable and just relation' to the promotion of the general welfare of the community, which is the statutory purpose of zoning laws in general and of the ordinance in question." The dissenting opinion pointed out that the primary purpose of all schools was to educate the students; that the state was interested in having educated children to the end that they eventually become good citizens; that private schools as well as public ones promote the general welfare and that there was no substantial difference in the purpose which they served. The dissenting opinion quoted from the case of Catholic Bishop of Chicago v. Kingery, 371 Ill. 257, 20 N.E.2d 583, 584, where it was said: "We fail to perceive to what degree a Catholic school of this type will be more detrimental or dangerous to the public health than a public school. It is not pointed out to us just how the pupils in attendance at the parochial school are any more likely to jeopardize the public safety than the public school pupils. Nor can we arbitrarily conclude that the prospective students of the new school will seriously undermine the general welfare. As a matter of fact such a school, conducted in accordance with the educational requirements established by State educational authorities, is promotive of the general welfare."

[1] Petitioner argues that parents have the basic constitutional right to have their children educated in schools of their own choice, subject to reasonable regulations as to subjects required to be taught, manner of instruction, etc. In Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534, 45 S.Ct. 571, 572, 69 L.Ed. 1070, it was held that the Act of 1922 which required every parent, guardian, etc. of a child between eight and sixteen years to send him "to a public school for the period of time a public school shall be held during the current year", Laws Or.1923, p. 9, § 1, " * * * unreasonably interferes with the liberty of parents and guardians to direct the upbringing and education of children under their control. As often heretofore pointed out, rights guaranteed by the Constitution may not be abridged by legislation which has no reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the state. The fundamental theory of liberty upon which all governments in this Union repose excludes any general power of the state to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public teachers only. The child is not the mere creature of the state; those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right, coupled with the high duty, to recognize and prepare him for additional obligations." Respondents seek to distinguish the Pierce case on the ground that it involved an established business conducted for a substantial profit which would be destroyed had the act in question been enforced; and on the ground that the Oregon statute sought to keep private schools out of the entire State of Oregon. It is argued that here in the event the ordinance is enforced, Piedmont parents will continue to send their children to those private schools which are in existence outside the city limits of Piedmont. Respondents' argument is based on the theory that in the Pierce case it was considered unreasonable to expect Oregon parents to send their children out of the state to attend private schools while it is not unreasonable to expect Piedmont parents to send their children to private schools outside the city limits. This begs the question. Parents have the right to send their children to private schools, rather than public ones, which are located in their immediate locality or general neighborhood. It is also argued by the city that even the constitutional right of parents to educate their children as they choose, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, supra, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, must yield to a reasonable exercise of the police power. This argument adds nothing to the ones heretofore made. The question of the reasonableness of the ordinance is the primary one involved here.

In Yokley, Zoning Law and Practice, 2d Ed., vol. 1, section 57, at page 89, it is said "In the light of a well known Illinois decision [Catholic Bishop of Chicago v. Kingery, 371 Ill. 257, 20 N.E.2d 583] affecting discrimination between classes of schools permitted in certain zones, it is well to again state the general principle that a zoning ordinance restricting the property rights of an individual without having any direct or substantial relationship to the promotion of the public health, safety, morals or welfare, is invalid. In this case a village zoning ordinance expressly permitting the maintenance of public schools but impliedly prohibiting private or parochial schools in a residential section was declared to be invalid as having no substantial relationship to the promotion of the public health, safety, morals or welfare, the court holding that the restriction amounted to a capricious invasion of property rights.

"There are many other cases which have been reported that uniformly follow this rule that discrimination between public and private schools will not be tolerated.
* * *

In Mooney v. Village of Orchard Lake, 333 Mich. 389, 53 N.W.2d 308, 310, a suit was brought by the Roman Catholic Archbishop to enjoin defendants from enforcing a zoning ordinance which prohibited churches and schools in a certain residential area. The court held it would not indulge in a presumption that the " * * * exclusion of school and church from an entire municipality is conducive to public health, safety, morals or the general welfare, * * * A thesis so inconsistent with the spirit and genius of our free institutions and system of government and the traditions of the American people will not be accepted by way of presumption, nor at all in the absence of competent evidence establishing a real and substantial relationship between the attempted exclusion and public health, safety, morals or the general welfare and, hence, the reasonableness and validity of the restriction upon use of private property as a legitimate exercise of the state's police powers." In the Mooney case, the facts show that there, as here, the zoning ordinance had the practical effect of excluding private schools from the entire community.

In State v. Northwestern Preparatory School, 228 Minn. 363, 37 N.W.2d 370, 371, it was held that a city zoning ordinance permitting public schools in a residential area while prohibiting private schools violated the equal protection clauses of the federal Constitution and the Minnesota Constitution. It was noted that a private school has "no effect upon a residential area different from that of a public or parochial one." In Lumpkin v. Township Committee of Bernards Tp., 134 N.J.L. 428, 48 A.2d 798, it was held that a township zoning ordinance permitting premises in a residential A zone to be used as a school by a church, but prohibiting use of such premises for a private boarding school for boys, was invalid because it bore no substantial relation to the public health, morals, safety, or general welfare. It was also held that such an ordinance denied the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. In Concordia Collegiate Institute v. Miller, 301 N.Y. 189, 93 N.E.2d 632, 21 A.L.R.2d 544, it was held that an amendment to a zoning ordinance which permitted a school in a residential district after the petitioner had filed the consents of 80% of the owners of property in the district was invalid as violative of the due process clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. Quoting from Nectow v. City of Cambridge, 277 U.S. 183, 48 S.Ct. 447, 448, 72 L.Ed. 842, it was held that "The governmental power to interfere by zoning regulations with the general rights of the land owner by restricting the character of his use, is not unlimited, and, other questions aside, such restriction cannot be imposed if it does not bear a substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare." In State ex rel. Synod of Ohio, etc. v. Joseph, 139 Ohio St. 229, 39 N.E.2d 515, it was held that a zoning ordinance excluding churches from a residential district was not justified for the protection of public health and safety by preventing increased noise, confusion, traffic congestion and parking difficulties, or because of the adverse effect on values of adjacent lands, nor for the protection of the public morals and welfare. It was held not a proper governmental function to exclude churches from a residential district of a municipality in the name of the public for the purpose of securing benefits of exclusive residential restrictions to adjacent landowners. In State ex rel. Roman Catholic Bishop of Reno v. Hill, 59 Nev. 231, 90 P.2d 217, it was held that a zoning ordinance requiring the written permission of 75% of the property owners before a church could be erected in a residential district was void as violative of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions.

Respondents contend that the cases from other jurisdictions are distinguishable from the one under consideration, and that in many of the sister states the Supreme Courts are as "anti-zoning as the record of this Court is pro-zoning." While on the facts, many of the cases may be distinguishable, the reasoning which leads to the conclusion that an ordinance is invalid which excludes private schools from an area in which public schools are found is persuasive. It is difficult to make an argument that private schools are inimical to the public welfare while public schools are not.

Respondents argue that Piedmont can neither "allow nor refuse to allow" public schools in Zone A in that only the Board of Education, an agency of the state, has that power. It is conceded that the wording of the ordinance purports to permit public schools in the area but that the reality of the situation is that Piedmont would have no power to exclude such schools. The question is not here involved whether the city could enact reasonable legislation concerning public schools. In Butterworth v. Boyd, 12 Cal.2d 140, 152, 82 P.2d 434, 440, 126 A.L.R. 838, it was held that "The school system has been held to be a matter of general concern, rather than a municipal affair, and consequently is not committed to the exclusive control of local governments. But the cities may make local regulations beneficial to and in furtherance of the school system, provided that these provisions do not conflict with the general law. Whitmore v. Brown, 207 Cal. 473, 279 P. 447; Esberg v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 110, 259 P. 730; Anderson v. Board of Education, 126 Cal.App. 514, 15 P.2d 744, 16 P. 2d 272." A comprehensive zoning ordinance of the city of Los Angeles was held proper where it involved to some extent a part of the public school system. Ransom v. Los Angeles City High School Dist., 129 Cal.

App.2d 500, 277 P.2d 455. Whether a city could zone to exclude public schools is not before us now, nor has it been before a court of this state so far as can be ascertained. The only question before us is whether a city may, constitutionally, by legislation exclude all private schools from 98.7% of its total area—which, when the character of the remaining area is taken into consideration, constitutes an effective exclusion of private schools from the entire city.

Respondents argue that a private school will be free from any control as distinguished from the control exercised over public schools. This argument is without merit. The Education Code provides in part, § 16624, that "Such school [private] shall be taught in the English language and shall offer instruction in the several branches of study required to be taught in the public schools of the state. The attendance of the pupils shall be kept by private school authorities in a register, and the record of attendance shall indicate clearly every absence of the pupil from school for a half day or more during each day that school is maintained during the year." Insofar as other regulations in the interest of the public welfare are concerned, no doubt the city, acting under its police power, could insure the preservation of the public peace and the preservation of private property.

It is also argued by respondents that the owner of a private school may, if the ordinance is struck down, locate the school as dictated by its own welfare and interests without any control on the part of the city. This question is not before us. Each case must be decided on its facts, and before us we have only the question of a private school to be located adjacent to a Catholic church in the area where public schools are found. Respondents' argument that a private school located in the precise location involved here would be inimical to the public welfare is not convincing. Respondents point to no exceptional circumstances concerning the particular location of this particular school. The state's basic zoning statute provides that a city "may by ordinance regulate, restrict and segregate the location of * * * the several classes of public and semi-public buildings, and the location of buildings or property designed for specified uses * * *." Deering's Gen.Laws, 1943, Act 994, § 2. See West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 38695 note. Article XI, section 11, California Constitution, also provides that "Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

[2, 3] Respondents place reliance upon the case of Corporation of Presiding Bishop, etc. v. City of Porterville, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823, in which it was held that by ordinance the city could prohibit all churches in a residential area. That case is distinguishable from the one under consideration. Here, only private schools are excluded—not all schools as were all churches in the Porterville case. It is well settled that no law within the broad areas of state interest may be unreasonably discriminatory or arbitrary. The state's interest in public education, for example, does not empower the Legislature to compel school children to receive instruction from public teachers only, for it would thereby take away the right of parents to direct the upbringing and education of children under their control. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534, 535, 45 S.Ct. 571.

[4] Careful examination of the arguments in support of the legislation in question reveals that there is absent the compelling justification which would be needed to sustain discrimination of the nature here involved.

For the reasons above stated it would appear that the ordinance here involved is unconstitutional and void because of its arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination against private schools.

Let the peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

Regardless of how beneficial and desirable we personally may think this particular school would be, it is our duty to uniformly apply the law and not, in order to obtain a result here, set a precedent which will have the effect of generally opening residential areas in all cities to private schools. It is particularly important that we carefully consider and apply the law here because this case appears to be designed as a test case to set the pattern for other communities. The attack is directly upon the classification as between public schools and private schools, and the impact of the ordinance upon petitioner's "business and property." The petition for the writ is completely silent upon whether the ordinance does or does not provide for variances or non-conforming uses or exceptions, or for administrative procedures in respect thereto, or whether any effort has been made to secure an amendment or exception or other relief.¹

The only real issues in this case are two: (1) The ordinance classifies schools, for purposes of zoning, as those which are "under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education of the City of Piedmont," and those which are not so governed. Is this classification unconstitutional?

(2) The petitioner attacks the application of the ordinance to its "business and property," with the charge that "Unless respondents are compelled * * * to issue to petitioner the permit which it has requested, and thus authorize the petitioner to construct, erect and establish its proposed school, petitioner's business and property will suffer irreparable injury." Does petitioner sustain this attack?

Classification

Classifying as between public and private ownership or management of a service or business is not new. It is elementary that the conduct of a public school is a public service while the operation of a private school is a private business. The Constitution of California provides in article IX for public schools (see also art. XIII, § 15), and in section 15 of article XVI declares among other things that the public school system is "a matter of general concern inasmuch as the education of the children of the State is an obligation and function of the State."

General principles applicable to the classification inherent in zoning ordinances are that: "[A] zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to a comprehensive plan of community development, 'when reasonable in object and not arbitrary in operation,' will be sustained as a proper exercise of the police power; every intendment is in favor of its validity, and a court will not, 'except in a clear case of oppressive and arbitrary limitation,' interfere with the legislative discretion; it is presumed to be adapted to promotion of the public health, safety, morals and general welfare; and though the court may differ with the zoning authorities as to the 'necessity or propriety' of the regulation, so long as it remains a 'question upon which reasonable minds might differ,' there will be no judicial interference with the municipality's determination of policy." (McCarthy v. City of Manhattan Beach (1953), 41 Cal.2d 879, 885-886, 264 P.2d 932; Clemons v. City of Los Angeles (1950), 36 Cal.2d 95, 98-99, 222 P.2d 439; see also "zoning," 12 Cal. Jur. Ten Year Supp. pp. 166-168, § 25, and cases there cited.) "[T]he establishment, as part of a comprehensive and systematic [zoning] plan, of districts devoted to strictly private residences or single family dwellings, from which are excluded business or multiple dwelling structures, is a legitimate exercise of the police power. Presiding Bishop, etc. v. City of Porterville (1949), 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 659, 203 P.2d 823.)

It appears clear that the classification—as between private and public schools—attacked by petitioner in the ordinance here involved has not been shown to be such that reasonable minds may not differ concerning it. The City of Piedmont, a small city with a total area of approximately 1152 acres and a population of less than 12,000, is an “island” entirely surrounded by the City of Oakland. In 1929 a comprehensive zoning ordinance was adopted, dividing the city into four zones designated as Zones A, B, C, and D, respectively. As amended in 1936, but prior to the time petitioner acquired its property here involved, section 3 of the ordinance provides that “No building * * * shall be erected * * * in Zone ‘A’, which is * * * intended to be occupied or used for any purpose other than a single family dwelling, church, or public school under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education of the City of Piedmont * * *.” The zoning provision which thus bans private schools from the single family residential Zone A, was approved by a vote (3,408 to 1,285) of the electors of the city. Zone A embraces approximately 1137.14 acres, including the land here involved upon which petitioner desires to construct and operate a private school. Such schools are permitted in the other three zones.

As establishing petitioner’s failure to show invalidity of the ordinance, it may be pointed out in the first place that although the majority opinion declares that the only question involved in this controversy is “Whether the city of Piedmont may, by [a comprehensive zoning] ordinance, constitutionally prevent the construction of a building to be used for private school purposes in an area [a single family residential zone] where public schools are located,” it appears to be conceded by petitioner for the writ that the city does not have power or the legal right to exclude public schools, which are under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education, from its single family residential Zone A, which is here involved. (See Cal.Const., art. IX; see also Butterworth v. Boyd (1938), 12 Cal.2d 140, 152, 82 P.2d 434, 126 A.L.R. 838; Gerth v. Dominguez (1934), 1 Cal.2d 239, 242, 34 P.2d 135; Ward v. San Diego School Dist. (1928), 203 Cal. 712, 715–717, 265 P. 821; Esberg v. Badaracco (1927), 202 Cal. 110, 115–119, 259 P. 730.) A public school district has the power of eminent domain and may be allowed, by condemnation, in a proper case, to acquire property for a school site. (See e. g., Long Beach City H. S. Dist. v. Stewart (1947), 30 Cal.2d 763, 185 P.2d 585, 173 A.L.R. 249; State ex rel. Britton v. Mulloy (1933), 332 Mo. 1107, 61 S.W.2d 741.) It follows that, as contended by the city, if it is without power to exclude public schools from Zone A, then its zoning ordinance which excludes private but not public schools from that zone cannot fairly be held to invalidly discriminate against private and in favor of public schools. The general classification as between public schools and private schools is set up by the Constitution itself.²

2. See Constitution of California, article IX: “Sec. 5. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year in which a school has been established.

“Sec. 6. * * * The Public School System shall include all kindergarten schools, elementary schools, secondary schools, technical schools, and state colleges, established in accordance with law and, in addition, the school districts and the other agencies authorized to maintain them. No school or college or any other part of the Public School System shall be, directly or indirectly, transferred from the Public School System or placed under the jurisdiction of any authority other than one included within the Public School System. * * *

“Sec. 8. No public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools; nor shall any sectarian or denominational doctrine be taught, or instruction thereon be permitted, directly or indirectly, in any of the common schools of this State.”

Thus it seems indisputable that the classification here involved is not, as such, vulnerable to petitioner's attack.

Turning now to the application of the ordinance under the circumstances of the case and as affecting petitioner's "business and property," the following defects in its case appear: It has not been established as a fact that there are no adequate areas in which private schools may be built which would be reasonably accessible to residents (either children or adults) of the City of Piedmont. As already stated, Piedmont, a small city, is entirely surrounded by the City of Oakland, and, further, petitioner's property is actually bounded on one side by a boulevard which is entirely within Oakland. Thus, not only has it been here shown that there are approximately 15 acres of land within Piedmont which are outside residential Zone A and upon which private schools are permitted under the zoning ordinance, but it has not been shown that there is no available and reasonably accessible land within the surrounding City of Oakland upon which private schools are permitted. It seems obvious, therefore, that petitioner has failed to establish either that it is being oppressively and arbitrarily prevented from operating a private school catering to residents of Piedmont, or that Piedmont residents are being prevented from attending private schools; those wishing to attend, or to send their children to, private schools may, so far as appears, utilize such schools in Oakland or elsewhere in the San Francisco Bay area as it may be presumed they have done in the past. Furthermore, there is a complete absence of showing of an attempt by the City of Piedmont or by any other governmental unit to compel attendance at public schools only, or to take away the right of any parents to direct the upbringing or education of children under their control. Whether or not any particular property owner is or is not permitted to carry out his desires for future development of his particular property into a private school obviously has no bearing upon the rights of either adults or children to attend private schools. (See Corporation Presiding Bishop, etc. v. City of Porterville (1949), supra, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 660, 203 P.2d 823.)

In the next place, Piedmont, under the terms of its freeholders' charter, is "primarily a residential city," and has been recognized as such by this court. (Reynolds v. Barrett (1938), 12 Cal.2d 244, 246, 249, 83 P.2d 29.) It is stipulated that petitioner's projected school would not be under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education of the City of Piedmont, but would be "owned and operated by petitioner" and would be constructed and operated next door to land on which "are a Roman Catholic Church, and a rectory occupied by priests of said Church who serve Corpus Christi Parish in the Archdiocese of San Francisco of such Church." Thus it is indicated the proposed private school would draw pupils not only from Piedmont but from surrounding San Francisco Bay area communities, whereas, presumptively, only Piedmont children attend public schools located in that city. If the city is compelled to permit petitioner's contemplated private school, then it would seem that it will be equally compelled to permit other private schools in its single family residential zone. That is, it must permit all private schools to enter equally unless this court is prepared to examine and censor or itself prescribe the projected curriculum, or other basis of classification, of each private school which proposes to construct a building and playground and commence business in Piedmont's Zone A. It is elementary that "The power of the legislature to impose restrictions on a lawful calling must be exercised in conformity with the constitutional requirement that such restrictions must operate equally upon all persons pursuing the same business or profession under the same circumstances. * * * Hence, if a statute allows one class of persons to engage in what is presumptively a legitimate business while denying such right to others, it must be based upon some principle which may reasonably promote the public health, safety, or welfare." (11 Am.Jur. 1046-1047, § 285.) This court cannot in good conscience create a classification which it could not sustain if created by the Legislature.

A list, provided by property owners opposing petitioner in this proceeding, of the various private schools taken from the classified section of the San Francisco Bay area telephone directories shows at least 176 private schools, including among others, schools affiliated with various religious groups,³ driving schools, language schools, astrology schools, bartending schools, real estate schools, divinity schools, nursery schools, furniture finishing schools, radio schools, labor schools, beauty culture schools, mechanical arts schools, Swedish massage schools, secretarial schools, television schools, success schools, engineering schools, fencing schools, dancing schools, sewing schools, charm schools, dramatic schools, and finishing schools—to name but a few. Presumptively each of such private schools operates lawfully and furnishes instruction which to substantial segments of the population has some special value and desirability over and above instruction furnished in public schools. Some or all of the subjects taught in public schools could, of course, be included in the curriculums of the private schools, if the court deems that important as a basis for classification.

If the City of Piedmont is obliged by this court to permit petitioner to devote its property to private school purposes, in violation of the city's zoning ordinance, then the conclusion appears indubitably to follow that the city's doors must likewise be opened, upon demand of any other interested property owner, to any or all other private schools which in the manner of their operation are no more obnoxious to the public peace or quiet, or inherently unlawful, than the school herein authorized, all to the substantial, if not utter, subversion of the planned residential character of Zone A. Zoning ordinances permitting parochial or church schools but prohibiting other private schools in residential districts have been held arbitrary, capricious, and invalid in State v. Northwestern Preparatory School (1949), 228 Minn. 363, 37 N.W.2d 370, 371, and Lumpkin v. Township Committee of Bernards Tp. (1946), 134 N.J.L. 428, 48 A.2d 798. Certainly this court cannot discriminate either in favor of, or against, a private school because of a religious affiliation or sponsorship, nor can this court properly undertake to censor or prescribe the curriculum of any lawfully conducted school, whether public or private. Freedom in the field of education is one of the basically protected rights. (Pierce v. Society of Sisters (1925), 268 U.S. 510, 535, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070; Meyer v. State of Nebraska (1923), 262 U.S. 390, 43 S.Ct. 625, 67 L.Ed. 1042) but this does not mean that a private school is, as to location, immune from the application of comprehensive zoning ordinances.

The majority opinion states, but does not attempt to answer, the cogent factors which may have moved the city council and the electors to approve the exclusion of private schools from the residential zone. The very statement of such factors—the character of the district, the relativity of its surroundings, its school age population, the availability of other property, the conservation of property values, matters affecting traffic control, size of streets, parking, noise, fire protection, overburdening of water mains and sewers, and the peace, comfort and quiet of the district for residential purposes—demonstrates that reasonable minds might differ as to the necessity or propriety of the regulation, and that therefore there should be no judicial interference with the municipality's determination. That such factors are legitimate considerations in the establishment and maintenance of residential districts is not open to dispute, under the zoning principles established in this state. (See Gov.Code, § 38695, formerly Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 994, § 2; Miller v. Board of Public Works (1925), supra, 195 Cal. 477, 492-494, 234 P. 381, 38 A.L.R. 1479; Corporation Presiding Bishop, etc. v. City of Poterville (1949), supra, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 659-661, 203 P.2d 823.)

Surely the inherent differences between public schools on the one hand and those privately operated on the other furnishes clear support for the application by the municipality of the factors enumerated above. For one thing, there are many more private than public schools; many are operated under religious and many under secular domination and the manner of their operation may be as varied as the subjects they teach. In State ex rel. Wisconsin Lutheran High School Conference v. Sinar (1954), 267 Wis. 91, 65 N.W.2d 42, 47, the court in upholding an ordinance which permitted public schools and private elementary schools in a residential zone but excluded private high schools, pointed out that although public and private schools may perform like functions in some respects, nevertheless the public school serves the surrounding area without discrimination, whereas the private school, whether or not sectarian, does not. "The private school imposes on the community all the disadvantages of the public school but does not compensate the community in the same manner or to the same extent. If the private school does not make the same contribution to public welfare this difference may be taken into consideration by the legislative body in framing its ordinance." (At page 47 of 65 N.W.2d.) Further, it appears that the elected Board of Education of the City of Piedmont, which is directly responsive to the people, is required to consult and advise with "the planning commission having jurisdiction of" property proposed to be acquired for new public school sites. (See Ed.Code, § 18403.) Standards for such sites are established by the State Department of Education. (Id., § 18402.) No such control can be exercised by the city over the location of private schools, if it is compelled to grant petitioner the building permit here sought. Thus, another ground is shown for the reasonable exercise by the municipality of its right to determine zoning policy, and certainly one upon which a reasonable mind could say the regulation here in controversy is at least fairly debatable—and therefore not to be judicially overthrown.

Irreparable Injury to Petitioner's Business and Property

The record shows that petitioner acquired the land concerned in July, 1954—some 18 years after⁴ the amendment of the zoning ordinance to ban private schools from Zone A; the last prior owner of the land was The Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco, a California corporation sole. The same corporation sole owns additional, adjoining, land on which "are a Roman Catholic Church, and a rectory occupied by priests of said Church who serve Corpus Christi Parish in the Archdiocese of San Francisco of such Church." The school building which petitioner seeks to construct would have dimensions of 204 feet by 65 feet and an area of 13,260 square feet; in addition petitioner's land has an area of some 16,240 square feet "which is available for incidental and/or school playground uses."

Petitioner's land along its east boundary fronts upon the west side of Park Boulevard, all of which boulevard in that area lies within the corporate limits of the City of Oakland and not within the City of Piedmont. Adjacent to petitioner's land is a "residential area known as 'St. James Wood', which comprises approximately 227 building sites, all of which are restricted, by restrictions of record, to single family residences; the owners of said property have formed and are members of an association known as 'St. James Wood Homes Association'. If a witness were called for City of Piedmont he would testify that at a meeting of the members of said Association, held June 15, 1954, said members voted (170 to 2) objection to the granting of a permit for the building of petitioner's proposed school."

It thus is shown that petitioner's land was acquired by it with advance knowledge that such land lies in a single family residential zone, and, further, that the adjacent land within the City of Piedmont is used for single family residential, rather than for private business, purposes. Under such circumstances no support is found for petitioner's assertion of "irreparable injury" to its business and property if it does not secure the private school building permit it seeks.

In Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino (1946), supra, 29 Cal.2d 332, 340, 175 P.2d 542, this court said that "An examination of the California decisions discloses that the cases in which zoning ordinances have been held invalid and unreasonable as applied to particular property fall roughly into four categories: 1. Where the zoning ordinance attempts to exclude and prohibit existing and established uses or businesses that are not nuisances. [Citations.] 2. Where the restrictions create a monopoly. [Citations.] 3. Where the use of adjacent property renders the land entirely unsuited to or unusable for the only purpose permitted by the ordinance. [Citation.] 4. Where a small parcel is restricted and given less rights than the surrounding property, as where a lot in the center of a business or commercial district is limited to use for residential purposes, thereby creating an 'island' in the middle of a larger area devoted to other uses. [Citations.]"

Petitioner has alleged no facts showing, and makes no effort to support a claim, that the present case falls into any of the categories above listed, but merely alleges generally that "Unless respondents are compelled * * * to issue to petitioner the permit which it has requested and, thus authorize the petitioner to construct, erect and establish its proposed school, petitioner's business and property will suffer irreparable injury." The law is settled, however, that "The mere fact that some hardship may be experienced is not material, for '[e]very exercise of the police power is apt to affect adversely the property interest of somebody.'" (Clemons v. City of Los Angeles (1950), supra, 36 Cal.2d 95, 99, 222 P.2d 439; Zahn v. Board of Public Works (1925), 195 Cal. 497, 503, 234 P. 388.) "Where it is claimed that the ordinance is unreasonable as applied to plaintiff's property, or that a change in conditions has rendered application of the ordinance unreasonable, it is incumbent on plaintiff to produce sufficient evidence from which the court can make such findings as to the physical facts involved as will justify it in concluding, as a matter of law, that the ordinance is unreasonable and invalid. It is not sufficient for him to show that it will be more profitable to him to make other use of his property, or that such other use will not cause injury to the public, but he must show an abuse of discretion on the part of the zoning authorities and that there has been an unreasonable and unwarranted exercise of the police power. [Citation.]" (Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino (1946), supra, 29 Cal.2d 332, 338, 175 P.2d 542.) "[I]t must be shown that there has been an unreasonable, oppressive, or unwarranted interference with property rights in the exercise of the police power before a zoning ordinance can be held invalid [citations]. * * * The burden rests upon the plaintiff to establish the invalidity of the ordinance in its application to the property involved. The plaintiff's failure to sustain this burden raises a presumption of the existence of such facts as are sufficient to sustain the ordinance. [Citation.]" (Beverly Oil Co. v. City of Los Angeles (1953), 40 Cal.2d 552, 559, 254 P. 2d 865.)

If we conform to the principles above stated the writ sought should be denied.

L. A. 22864.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 28, 1955.

Wrongful death action against saloon keepers by widow and minor children of saloon patron who allegedly was fatally injured in fall while engaging in fisticuffs in saloon when he became belligerent after he had become intoxicated in the saloon. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., sustained demurrer without leave to amend and rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that patron's surviving widow and minor children could not recover for alleged negligent furnishing of intoxicating liquor to patron on ground that such negligent furnishing proximately caused patron's death.

Judgment affirmed.

Carter, J., dissented.

SCHAUER, Justice.

In this wrongful death action plaintiffs, who are the surviving widow and minor children of James Bernard Cole, deceased, seek to recover damages for the allegedly negligent furnishing of intoxicating liquor to the deceased, which plaintiffs claim proximately caused his death. They appeal from an adverse judgment entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to their amended complaint, without leave to amend. We have concluded that the trial court correctly held that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

The material allegations of the amended complaint are that defendants own and operate an establishment known as the Tropic Isle in which "intoxicating liquors are sold and furnished to the public for consumption on the premises"; on October 13, 1950, James Bernard Cole was a patron of the Tropic Isle and defendants "did sell, furnish, give, and cause to be sold, furnished and given" to him alcoholic beverages which he drank; immediately before he came "to the premises of the defendants * * * Cole was not intoxicated by reason of the use of alcoholic beverages," but he "did drink said alcoholic beverages so sold, furnished and given until and after * * * [he] became intoxicated." Cole had patronized the Tropic Isle on numerous occasions and was well known to defendants, who also knew that he was "normally of quiet demeanor but that when * * * intoxicated he became belligerent, pugnacious and quarrelsome"; on numerous prior occasions plaintiff widow had requested defendants "not to sell or furnish intoxicating beverages to said James Bernard Cole sufficient¹ to allow him to become intoxicated thereon" (italics added), but defendants refused to comply with such requests; "by reason of said intoxication, and by reason of said alcoholic beverages so unlawfully sold, furnished or given * * * and as a proximate result thereof, * * * Cole became belligerent, pugnacious and quarrelsome; * * * Cole did thereafter on said date quarrel with one Franklin Leonard; * * * Cole and * * * Leonard did engage in fisticuffs; * * * Cole was struck by * * * Leonard and did fall to the pavement, striking his head against the concrete, by reason of which * * * Cole suffered a subarachnoid hemorrhage, traumatic, and died immediately from the effects of said blow"; at the time of his death Cole "was an able-bodied man of the age of 39 years," earning approximately $4,000 a year.

1. By what standards or tests the defendants on any occasion might determine the amount which properly could be furnished is not disclosed.

Defendant Frank Van Stone, alleged to be one of the owners of the Tropic Isle, demurred to the amended complaint on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. By way of particularizing its insufficiency he specifies, among other things, that the complaint shows on its face that decedent's injuries were caused or contributed to by fault and negligence on decedent's part and that it cannot be determined in what manner any acts of the defendant were the proximate cause of the alleged injuries. Following the hearing upon the demurrer and the statement of counsel for plaintiffs that "he cannot further amend," the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and judgment was entered accordingly.

The general rule of the common law as to tort liability arising out of the sale of intoxicating beverages is stated in 30 American Jurisprudence 573, section 607: "The common law gives no remedy for injury or death following the mere sale of liquor to the ordinary man, either on the theory that it is a direct wrong or on the ground that it is negligence, which imposes a legal liability on the seller for damages resulting from the intoxication." (For examples of cases following the rule see: Hitson v. Dwyer (1943), 61 Cal.App.2d 803, 808, 143 P.2d 952; Fleckner v. Dionne (1949), 94 Cal.App.2d 246, 210 P.2d 530; Lammers v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1921), 186 Cal. 379, 384, 199 P. 523; Howlett v. Doglio (1949), 402 Ill. 311, 83 N.E.2d 708, 712, 6 A.L.R.2d 790; Tarwater v. Atlanta Co., Inc. (1940), 176 Tenn. 510, 144 S.W.2d 746; 48 C.J.S., Intoxicating Liquors, § 430, 432, pp. 716-718; see also Annotations 44 L.R.A.(NS) 299; 130 A.L.R. 357-369.) A number of jurisdictions have adopted statutes creating a right of action, under specified conditions, against persons furnishing intoxicants.² California, however, has enacted no such statute notwithstanding the fact that, as hereinafter shown, its Legislature has repeatedly dealt with problems concerning alcoholic beverages and concerning tort liability.

Plaintiffs with commendable frankness state in their opening brief (p. 3) that they "recognize that it is the general rule of law that it is the consumption of the intoxicating liquor which is the proximate cause of any subsequent injury by reason of such intoxication rather than the sale of intoxicating liquor" (citing Hitson v. Dwyer (1943), supra, and Fleckner v. Dionne (1949), supra; see also Collier v. Stamatis, (Ariz.1945), 162 P.2d 125, 127: "The principle is epitomized in the truism that there may be sales without intoxication, but no intoxication without drinking", but urge that "knowledge on the part of the defendants of the propensities of Cole to seek a quarrel when intoxicated, and * * * their wilful refusal to heed the pleas of the wife, and their wilful insistence in selling intoxicating liquor to Cole and allowing him to be intoxicated" are distinguishing factors which support the charge of negligence here and establish the sale of the liquor as the proximate cause of the injury. Such a view, we conclude in the light of the common law, cannot be sustained in this state in the absence of legislative action.

In the first place, it appears that in Lammers v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1921), supra, 186 Cal. 379, 384, 199 P. 523, this court stated and relied on the general rule that "the sale of intoxicating liquor is not the proximate cause of injuries subsequently received by the purchaser because of his intoxication." In that case the plaintiff, while intoxicated, was ejected from defendant's passenger train; he left the place of immediate peril where he was ejected but later returned to the tracks at a point about three-quarters of a mile away

2. It appears that such a statute has been adopted in Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Da-

and was seriously injured. The court said: "The only connection between the ejection and the injury would be the fact that if there had been no ejection there would have been no injury. The sale of the whiskey to the plaintiff would come nearer being a proximate cause of the injury than the ejection from the railway train. The peril arising from the ejection ceased the moment the passenger left the position where he could be struck by defendant's trains, while the peril arising from the use of the intoxicating liquor continued in operation up to the time of the injury and contributed thereto, and yet it has been uniformly held in the absence of statute to the contrary that the sale of intoxicating liquor is not the proximate cause of injuries subsequently received by the purchaser because of his intoxication. (Joyce on Intoxicating Liquors, sec. 421; Cruse v. Aden, 127 Ill. 231, 234, 20 N.E. 73, 3 L.R.A. 327.) * * * That the injury was not the proximate result of the ejection is demonstrated by the fact that the plaintiff was able to, and did in fact, leave the place of danger and subsequently of his own volition returned to a position of danger on defendant's tracks, and that but for plaintiff's action in so returning to a position of danger the accident would not have occurred."

[1,2] In the second place it is to be observed that in Fleckner v. Dionne (1949), supra, 94 Cal.App.2d 246, 210 P.2d 530, knowledge on the part of the tavernkeeper was, as here, expressly averred. The allegations of the complaint there were that on the evening in question defendant Dionne, a minor, was a patron of the tavern and was sold and given intoxicating liquors and allowed to consume them in the tavern; that the defendant tavernkeeper knew that Dionne was a minor and sold the liquors to him while he was already under the "severe influence of intoxicating liquors"; that he knew also that Dionne had upon or near the premises an automobile and would thereafter drive it; that defendant knew and should have known and foreseen that the driving of the automobile by him in his then intoxicated condition could and would result in harm and damage to others upon the highway; that Dionne while so intoxicated negligently drove his automobile into an automobile in which plaintiffs were riding and injured them; that the sale and serving of the liquor to Dionne by defendant constituted a "negligent disregard of the rights of plaintiffs" which joined with Dionne's negligence in proximately injuring plaintiffs. Defendant's general demurrer was sustained with leave to amend and on plaintiffs' failure to amend judgment was entered in defendant's favor. The District Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment, relying upon the Hitson and Lammers cases, supra, as well as upon various out-of-state decisions, and this court denied a hearing.³ Its judgment stands, therefore, as a decision of a court of last resort in this state, until and unless disapproved by this court or until change of the law by legislative action. It is to be noted that the knowledge alleged in the Fleckner case was more specific and extensive than that in the instant case. Here it is only alleged that defendant knew of the belligerent disposition of the deceased when he was intoxicated.

[3] In the next place, it is to be observed that in Hitson v. Dwyer (1943), supra, 61 Cal.App.2d 803, 143 P.2d 952, it was held that one who suffers injuries by reason of his own intoxication may not recover from the tavernkeeper by reason of the sale of the liquor to the plaintiff. In that case plaintiff alleged that while obviously intoxicated and sitting on a movable stool at defendants' bar he wrongfully was served intoxicating liquor, and as a result he fell from the stool to the floor, and was thereafter dragged by defendants from his position on the floor; that as a result of the fall or the dragging or both, plaintiff was injured. It was held that so far as concerned the fall and any injuries suffered therefrom, the proximate cause was the drinking of the liquor rather than the wrongful (i. e., in violation of the alcoholic beverage control act) sale thereof to an obviously intoxicated person, and any wrong in the sale was non-actionable. This court denied a hearing. If the man who is injured by reason of his intoxicated state may not himself recover from the one who provided the liquor, then it follows that under the established law governing wrongful death actions, his survivors may not recover in this, which is such an action. (Buckley v. Chadwick (1955), 45 Cal.2d 183, at page 203, 288 P.2d 12, at page 24; see also Demge v. Feierstein (1936), 222 Wis. 199, 268 N.W. 210, 212 (liquor sale); Scott v. Greenville Pharmacy (1948), 212 S.C. 485, 48 S.E.2d 324, 326 (barbiturate sale); 30 Am.Jur. 575, § 610.)

3. Denial of a hearing is not the equivalent of express approval by this court but it has been said that "The order of this court denying a petition for a transfer * * * after * * * decision of the district court of appeal may be taken as an approval of the conclusion there reached, but not necessarily of all of the reasoning contained in that opinion." (Eisenberg v. Superior Court (1924), 193 Cal. 575, 578, 226 P. 617; see also

People v. Rowland (1937), 19 Cal.App.2d 540, 542, 65 P.2d 1333. The significance of a denial in any particular case is also to be understood as further qualified by the fact that under the Rules on Appeal a denial may mean no more than that a ground which we deem adequate or impellent for ordering a hearing has not been brought to our attention. (See Rule 29, Rules on Appeal.)

Other cases, from other jurisdictions, relied upon by plaintiffs are clearly distinguishable on their facts, even if it be assumed that upon similar facts action would lie in California. For example, Cherbonnier v. Rafalovich (D.C.1950), 88 F.Supp. 900, was an action against saloonkeepers by one of their patrons who, while he was eating in the saloon and cafe, was attacked by another patron, one Hobson, who was drunk. Although dismissing the complaint for failure to state a cause of action in that it was not alleged that defendants knew Hobson was of a violent disposition or had threatened harm to plaintiff before he was served the last of the intoxicating drinks, the court did observe (88 F.Supp. at page 903) that "The present trend is apparently toward holding the defendant saloonkeeper liable for lawless acts occurring in the saloon," and quoted from 30 American Jurisprudence 574, section 609, the statement that "The better reason appears to favor placing on the proprietor the duty of seeing to it that the patron is not injured either by those in his employ or by drunken or vicious men whom he may choose to harbor. Further, a guest or patron of such a place has a right to rely on the belief that he is in an orderly house and that its operator * * * is exercising reasonable care to the end that the doings in the house shall be orderly." Here, if Leonard had been injured by Cole (who was the attacker) and if the former or his next of kin were the plaintiffs, and if it were further alleged that Leonard had been within the defendants' premises and was there attacked by Cole, we would then have a case to which the Cherbonnier decision might be pertinent. Obviously it is not in point on the facts which are alleged.

Rommel v. Schambacher (1887), 120 Pa. 579, 11 A. 779, 6 Am.St.Rep. 732; Curran v. Olson (1903), 88 Minn. 307, 92 N.W. 1124, 60 L.R.A. 733; and Peck v. Gerber (1936), 154 Or. 126, 59 P.2d 675, 106 A.L.R. 996, additionally relied upon by plaintiffs, also involve the liability of the saloonkeeper as a proprietor for not using reasonable care in maintaining order for the safety of his guests. However, as is indicated in the opinions in the cited cases as well as in the annotation in 106 A.L.R. 1003, following the report of Peck v. Gerber (1936), supra, and as recognized by the court in the Cherbonnier case, the liability of a saloonkeeper in this line of cases appears to be related to that of innkeepers and restaurateurs for injuries to guests or patrons by other guests or persons not connected with the management, and is an exception to the general common law rule of non-liability of the vendor of intoxicating liquor, and furnishes no precedent for imposing liability on the saloonkeeper under the circumstances alleged in the complaint in this case.

In Pratt v. Daly (1940), 55 Ariz. 535, 104 P.2d 147, 130 A.L.R. 341, plaintiff wife was permitted to recover damages resulting from defendants' sale of intoxicating liquor to her husband with knowledge of the fact that the husband was an habitual drunkard. Arizona had no civil damage statute. The court there, after discussing the rule as stated in Restatement of the Law of Torts, volume 3, section 696, that "One who, without a physician's direction, sells or otherwise supplies to a married woman a habit-forming drug with knowledge that it will be used in a way which will cause harm to any of the legally protected marital interests of the husband is liable for harm caused by such drug to those interests unless the husband consents to the wife's acquisition or use of the drug" and that the same rule applies to a sale to the husband in an action by the wife under similar circumstances (see also 130 A.L.R. 352-365), then goes on to observe (p. 347 of 130 A.L.R.): "Of course, since there is not the same presumption that the use of liquor will eventually cause the loss of volition that there is with a habit-forming drug, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that to the knowledge of defendant such a stage has been reached by the consumer, but if this fact is once established, in all reason and logic the right of action should be the same in one case as in the other * * * [130 A.L.R. at page 348.] The allegation of the complaint is that the husband of plaintiff was an 'habitual drunkard,' and that the fact was well known to defendants. The term 'habitual drunkard' has been defined repeatedly, and in almost all of the definitions the principal element emphasized is that such a person has lost the will power to resist the temptation when the liquor is offered him." In Collier v. Stamatis (Ariz.1945), supra, 162 P.2d 125, 126-127, the Arizona court held that no cause of action for loss of services lies against a tavernkeeper who unlawfully sold intoxicating liquor to a child of the age of fifteen, upon which she became intoxicated, because "It cannot be said as a matter of law that a child of fifteen has neither will nor choice nor discretion whatever"; the court further confirmed that its opinion in the Pratt v. Daly case rested upon the showing by plaintiff wife that her husband was "incapable of voluntary action." (See also Cavin v. Smith (1949), 228 Minn. 322, 37 N.W.2d 368, 369.) By contrast, the plaintiffs in the case now before us allege no such lack of volition on the part of the decedent, but, rather, that he was an "able-bodied man" who was not intoxicated immediately before he entered defendant's establishment on the day in question. Other cases indicating the court's awareness of the materiality of the element of volition or of competency, and, hence, of at least contributing responsibility of the voluntary drinker or user, are Seibel v. Leach (1939), 233 Wis. 66, 288 N.W. 774, in which the court remarked that "Under the common law it is not an actionable wrong to sell or to give intoxicating liquors to an able-bodied man," and affirmed a judgment dismissing the complaint; and Scott v. Greenville Pharmacy (1948), 212 S.C. 485, 48 S.E.2d 324, 327, supra, in which it was pointed out that the complaint failed to describe plaintiff's deceased husband "as being without mind or lacking in volition," in buying and consuming barbiturate capsules during a period of about a year, at the end of which time he committed suicide by hanging himself, and judgment for defendant, who sold the barbiturates, following the sustaining of his demurrer was affirmed. (See also 30 Am.Jur. 575-576, § 611.)

[4] For this court to hold that plaintiffs have here stated a cause of action by averring facts which establish that no cause of action arose either by statute or by common law as the same existed at the time of the events relied upon would at the least constitute a departure from its constitutional function and an encroachment upon that of the Legislature. As declared by the court in State for use of Joyce v. Hatfield (1951), 197 Md. 249, 78 A.2d 754, 757, in affirming the judgment on demurrer in defendants' favor in a wrongful death action in which plaintiff widow whose husband was killed by an intoxicated driver sought damages from tavern owners who had sold the liquor, "It would be worse than futile for us to attempt to convince plaintiff by reason, where all other courts have failed and the accumulated mass of authority carries no weight at all. In the circumstances of this case * * * we should virtually usurp legislative power if we should declare plaintiff's contentions to be the law of Maryland. In the course of the last hundred years there probably has seldom, if ever (except during prohibition), been a regular session of the General Assembly at which no liquor laws were passed. On few subjects are legislators kept better informed of legislation in other states. In the face of the flood of civil damage laws enacted, amended and repealed in other states and the Volstead Act—and of the total absence of authority for such liability, apart from statute—the fact that there is now no such law in Maryland expresses the legislative intent as clearly and compellingly as affirmative legislation would.” (See also Henry Grady Hotel Co. v. Sturgis (1943), 70 Ga.App. 379, 28 S.E.2d 329, 333.)

[5] The significance of legislative action in the light of established law and of pertinent judicial decisions has been repeatedly recognized in this state. As we have so recently said in Buckley v. Chadwick (1955), supra, 45 Cal.2d 183, 288 P.2d 12, “It is a generally accepted principle that in adopting legislation the Legislature is presumed to have had knowledge of existing domestic judicial decisions and to have enacted and amended statutes in the light of such decisions as have a direct bearing upon them.” The failure of the Legislature to change the law in a particular respect when the subject is generally before it and changes in other respects are made is indicative of an intent to leave the law as it stands in the aspects not amended. In this connection it should be noted that section 22.2 of the Civil Code of this state specifically declares that “The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this State, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this State.” (See also Philpott v. Superior Court (1934), 1 Cal.2d 512, 515, 36 P.2d 635, 95 A.L.R. 990; Gin S. Chow v. City of Santa Barbara (1933), 217 Cal. 673, 695, 22 P.2d 5; Munchiando v. Bach (1928), 203 Cal. 457, 264 P. 762; Peters v. Peters (1909), 156 Cal. 32, 34, 103 P. 219, 23 L.R.A., N.S., 699; 10 Cal.Jur.2d 651–652, § 2, and cases there cited; 23 Cal.Jur. 603.)

[6,7] Accordingly, it is to be noted that notwithstanding the holding of this court in Lammers v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1921), supra, 186 Cal. 379, 384, 199 P. 523; and of the District Court of Appeal in Hitson v. Dwyer (1943), supra, 61 Cal. App.2d 803, 808, 143 P.2d 952, and in Fleckner v. Dionne (1949), supra, 94 Cal. App.2d 246, 210 P.2d 530, the Legislature of California has at no time seen fit to adopt a statute inconsistent with the common law so far as concerns a remedy for injury or death following the furnishing of liquor to the ordinary man. Demonstrating awareness by the Legislature of problems relating to the furnishing and consumption of intoxicating liquors, and a similar awareness in respect to problems of tort liability, it is pointed out (without attempting to go back as far as the Lammers case, in 1921) that in the ten years immediately following the decision in the Hitson case (1943) the Legislature made numerous changes in statutes governing the sale, use, and furnishing of intoxicating liquors (see e. g., Stats.1945, pp. 1023, 2295, 2615; Stats.1947, pp. 2003, 2051, 2490, 2791, 2936, 3019, 3025; Stats.1949, pp. 492, 1546, 1582, 1884, 2060, 2349, 2735; Stats.1951, pp. 1897, 2814, 3051; Stats.1953, pp. 646, 918, 954, 1949, 2084, 3345) and also in statutes having to do with various aspects of tort liability (see e. g., Civil Code, §§ 43, 43.5(a), 45a, 46, 47, 48, 48a, 48.5, 171c, 956, 1714.5, 1714.6, 3341, 3342; Code of Civil Procedure, § 377), but there was no adoption of a statute imposing liability in such a case as is now before us. Under such circumstances not only does the legislative intent appear to be to maintain, rather than to depart from, the pertinent common law, but in the further light of the express enactment (Civ.Code, § 22.2) that “The common law * * * so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this State, is the rule of decision in all courts of this State,” it becomes manifest that the common law is the controlling law in this case. (Estate of Apple (1885), 66 Cal. 432, 434, 6 P. 7, “where the code is silent, the common law governs”; In re Estate of Wickes (1900), 128 Cal. 270, 274, 60 P. 867, 49 L.R.A. 138, “The common law is the rule of decision in this state, where no positive law, state or national, controls"; Peters v. Peters (1909), supra, 156 Cal. 32, 34, 103 P. 219, 23 L.R.A.,N.S., 699, "The common law of England is declared to be the rule of decision in all courts of this state, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with our constitution and statutes"; see also Gray v. Sutherland (1954), 124 Cal.App.2d 280, 290, 268 P.2d 754; 10 Cal.Jur.2d 652, § 2.)

[8-11] Since it is established both by the common law and by the decisional law in this state (1) that as to a competent person it is the voluntary consumption, not the sale or gift, of intoxicating liquor which is the proximate cause of injury from its use; (2) that the competent person voluntarily consuming intoxicating liquor contributes directly to any injury caused thereby; and (3) that contributory negligence of the decedent bars recovery by his heirs or next of kin in a wrongful death action, the judgment must be, and it is, affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice.

I concur.

Further consideration of this case upon rehearing convinces me that the governing law, as heretofore enunciated by the courts of this state as well as by the courts of practically all other jurisdictions, precludes plaintiff's recovery. I am further in agreement with the view expressed in the main opinion that the established rules should be followed until such time as these rules may be changed by legislative action. I therefore conclude that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

I do not agree with the statement of the majority opinion that the common law so clearly forbids recovery in a case such as the one under consideration, or that under the circumstances here presented the consumption of the liquor, rather than its sale, should be considered the proximate cause of the death. For the reasons stated by me in my dissenting opinion in the case of Buckley v. Chadwick, 45 Cal.2d 183, 288 P.2d 12, I also disagree with the holding that any contributory negligence on the part of a decedent is, or should be, a bar to recovery by his heirs or next of kin. It further appears to me that the holding that plaintiffs' decedent was a "competent" person because of plaintiffs' use of the phrase "able bodied" in describing him is outside any of the issues here presented. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants knew of the decedent's propensities when intoxicated—that he was dangerous to himself and to others—and that they, with such full knowledge, sold alcoholic beverages to him.

Under the holding of the majority here, a tavern owner may escape liability for the death or serious injury of innocent third persons by an intoxicated patron when he has furnished intoxicating liquor to such patron after warning by both relatives and police that such person should not be furnished any intoxicating liquor whatsoever because of his vicious propensities when intoxicated. I cannot subscribe to such a holding.

It is true that California has no civil damage, or Dramshop Act. Fleckner v. Dionne, 94 Cal.App.2d 246, 249, 210 P.2d 530. The question is, therefore, whether, at common law, the surviving spouse and children of a decedent had a cause of action against one who, with notice, sold intoxicating beverages to a patron, and whether the selling, or the drinking, of the liquor was the proximate cause of the subsequent injuries.

I am of the opinion that the California cases dealing with this problem are distinguishable from the case at bar.

In the case of Hitson v. Dwyer, 61 Cal. App.2d 803, 143 P.2d 952, plaintiff alleged that while a patron of the bar, and in an obviously intoxicated condition, he was served intoxicating liquor as a result of which he fell from the movable stool on which he was sitting; that he was dragged from his position on the floor by the defendants, and as a result of which, he suffered a fracture and other injuries of the shoulder and body. He contended that the defendants, knowing his condition, negligently failed to take precautions to protect him. Plaintiff relied in part upon the Alcoholic Beverage Act, Deering's Gen. Laws, 1937, Act 3796, § 62, Stats. 1935, p. 1123, which makes it a misdemeanor to sell alcoholic beverages to an "obviously intoxicated person." The court held that it could not be said that the purpose of the act was to protect an obviously intoxicated person, as the act itself declared, section 1, that the purpose was to promote "* * * in the highest degree the economic, social and moral well-being and the safety of the State and of all its people." It was also held that "The principle that a violation of a statute or ordinance is negligence per se is subject to the limitation that the act or omission must proximately cause or contribute to the injury. Burt v. Bank of California National Association, 211 Cal. 548, 296 P. 68; Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., 189 Cal. 434, 208 P. 966. Unless the alleged violation of the Beverage Act by defendants constituted the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries such violation is wholly immaterial to a disposition of this appeal." The court continued to state the "general rule" as follows: "Rather we find the general rule to be as stated in the case of Hyba v. C. A. Horneman, Inc., 302 Ill.App. 143, 23 N.E.2d 564, 565: 'The common law gave no remedy for the sale of liquor, either on the theory that it was a direct wrong or on the ground that it was negligence, which would impose a legal liability on the seller for damages resulting from intoxication', and that the rule found support in the case of Lammers v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 186 Cal. 379, 199 P. 523, wherein the court held that the sale of intoxicating liquor is not the proximate cause of injuries subsequently received by the purchaser because of his intoxication. 'Therefore, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the proximate cause is not the wrongful sale of the liquor but the drinking of the liquor so purchased.'

The case of Fleckner v. Dionne, 94 Cal. App.2d 246, 210 P.2d 530, 532, was an action brought, in part, against the owners of a tavern. It was alleged that these defendants had sold intoxicating liquors to one Dionne, a minor, knowing that he was already intoxicated and knowing that he would drive his car in an intoxicated condition which could, and would, result in harm to others using the highway; that Dionne, in an intoxicated condition, did drive his car so negligently and recklessly that he caused it to collide with the car in which plaintiffs were riding to their injury and damage; that all of said injury and damage was the direct and proximate result of the "unlawfulness, negligence, recklessness of the defendants" in selling the intoxicating liquor to the obviously intoxicated minor, Dionne.

The court cited both the Lammers and Hitson cases and held that in both of them the language in re proximate cause was not necessary to the decision since in the Lammers case the statement "it has been uniformly held, in the absence of statute to the contrary that the sale of intoxicating liquor is not the proximate cause of injuries subsequently received by the purchaser because of his intoxication" was qualified by the words "in the absence of statute to the contrary" and in the Hitson case the actionable wrong was the dragging of plaintiff across the floor. (Emphasis added.)

The court cited Seibel v. Leach, 233 Wis. 66, 288 N.W. 774, where the action was for property damage and personal injuries brought by a third person against the defendant tavern owner for selling intoxicants to one Leach who drove his car in such a manner as to cause plaintiff's injuries and damage. In the Wisconsin case, the court relied upon Demge v. Feierstein, 222 Wis. 199, 268 N.W. 210, which was an action brought by a widow whose husband had been sold intoxicants by tavern owners after she had given them notice not to let her husband have any more liquor. After leaving the tavern, her husband lost control of his car and was fatally injured. The court there held that there was no cause of action at common law against a vendor of liquor in favor of those injured by the intoxication of the vendee. Black, Law of Intoxicating Liquors, ch. 13, sec. 281; Buntin v. Hutton, 206 Ill.App. 194; Healey v. Cady, 104 Vt. 463, 161 A. 151;

Coy v. Cutting, 138 Kan. 109, 23 P.2d 458; State v. Johnson, 23 S.D. 293, 121 N.W. 785, 22 L.R.A.,N.S., 1007; Kraus v. Schroeder, 105 Neb. 809, 182 N.W. 364, 365. The California court concluded that in the absence of civil damage legislation in this state, and with such views as have been expressed by our courts on the subject (Lammers and Hitson cases) coinciding with the holdings in other jurisdictions where the questions have been passed upon, "we are satisfied that the sustaining of the demurrer of respondent Pangracs was correct."

Mr. Justice Dooling dissented. He admitted frankly that cases from some other jurisdictions were to the effect that in the absence of statute no remedy existed against the dispenser of liquor for injuries resulting to third persons from the acts of intoxicated persons. "However, considered as questions of the law of negligence and proximate cause, I cannot bow to the reasoning of those decisions when carried to the full extreme of holding that under no circumstances can one who dispenses liquor to another knowing that he is becoming intoxicated be liable to a third person later injured by the intoxicated person's conduct; and I can see no reason for perpetuating in the law of this state the error of the courts of other jurisdictions.

"Negligence is measured by what a person of ordinary prudence would or would not do under the same or similar circumstances and it is thoroughly settled that negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury to another even though the act of a third person intervenes, if a person of ordinary prudence could reasonably anticipate the probability of the third person's intervening conduct. McEvoy v. American Pool Corp., 32 Cal.2d 295, 299 et seq., 195 P.2d 783; Mosley v. Arden Farms Co., 26 Cal.2d 213, 218 et seq., 157 P.2d 372, 158 A.L.R. 872; Katz v. Helbing, 215 Cal. 449, 10 P.2d 1001." (Emphasis added.)

Both the Fleckner and Hitson cases alleged no more than negligence in serving liquors; in the present case, plaintiff wife alleges that "on occasions too numerous to name (she) requested defendants and each of them not to give, sell or furnish intoxicating beverages to James Bernard Cole sufficient to allow him to become intoxicated" but that defendants refused to desist from selling Cole intoxicating beverages; and that defendants had specific knowledge that when Cole became intoxicated he was invariably belligerent and quarrelsome. In the Hitson case, the plaintiff was suing for his own injuries received while he was intoxicated; in the Fleckner case, a third person was suing for injuries received by reason of the driving of an automobile by an intoxicated person. In neither case were the surviving spouse and dependent children suing for loss of consortium and support; and in neither case did the defendant tavern owner have prior specific notice and knowledge of the effect of liquor on the patron to whom the intoxicants were sold.

In Woollen and Thornton "Law of Intoxicating Liquors" (Vol. II, sec. 1029, p. 1837) it is said: "The right of persons injuriously affected by the sale of intoxicating liquors to recover damages is not entirely restricted to the right given them by statute. In several jurisdictions it has been held that when, by the continued sale of intoxicating liquors, a person has been unable to perform the duties owing by him to another, under the common law, the seller was liable in damages to persons to whom the duty was owing for any loss that he thereby sustained, Holleman v. Harward, 119 N.C. 150, 25 S.E. 972, 974, 34 L.R.A. 803: "It is lawful to sell laudanum as a medicine. It is also lawful to sell spirituous liquors as a beverage upon the dealer's complying with the license laws, except in the cases prohibited by statute. Certainly no fair inference can be drawn from this that damages may not be recovered from one who knowingly and willfully sells or gives laudanum or intoxicating liquors to a wife, in such quantities as to be attended by such consequences to the wife as are set out in the complaint in this action." However, it may be stated as a general rule, that unless the rights of persons having peculiar interests in the buyers of intoxicating liquors, such as a wife in her husband, or parent in the child, are invaded by the sales of in- toxicating liquors and the seller of such liquors has notice of the injurious effects of the liquors so sold upon the buyer, Holleman v. Harward, supra; Hoard v. Peck, 56 Barb., N.Y., 202 [opium]; Struble v. Nodwift, 11 Ind. 64, the right to recover damages for injuries resulting from the sales of intoxicating liquors is purely statutory, and the action is governed entirely by the provisions of the statute." (Emphasis added.)

In Peck v. Gerber, 1936, 154 Or. 126, 59 P.2d 675, 106 A.L.R. 996, in which it appears that the plaintiff was assaulted in the saloon by another customer, the latter being a regular customer who was known to the saloonkeeper to be a trouble-maker, the court held the saloonkeeper liable, because he was negligent, and expressed the view that he did not use the care required of the ordinarily prudent man in maintaining order for the safety of his guests. The court stated that the standard of care does not vary, but that the ordinarily prudent man exercises care commensurate with the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of danger to others. There is, apparently, no statute in Oregon on which recovery could have been predicated. Other cases in which the saloonkeeper was held liable under somewhat similar circumstances are Mastad v. Swedish Brethren, 83 Minn. 40, 85 N.W. 913, 53 L.R.A. 803, and Molloy v. Coletti, 114 Misc. 177, 186 N.Y.S. 730. In Curran v. Olson, 88 Minn. 307, 92 N.W. 1124, 60 L.R.A. 733, where the factual situation was different, the court said: "* * * the bartender knew, or might have known by the exercise of the slightest care, what the alcohol was to be used for, and could have prevented the injury to the plaintiff."

In Cherbonnier v. Rafalovich, D.C.Alaska, 88 F.Supp. 900, the court granted leave to plaintiff to plead over to allege, if he could, that the saloonkeeper had knowledge of the patron's violent disposition while under the influence of intoxicating beverages. Here, the court pointed out, 88 F.Supp. at page 903, that: "The present trend is apparently toward holding the defendant saloonkeeper liable for lawless acts occurring in the saloon. It is said in 30 Am.

Jur. 574 that: 'The better reason appears to favor placing on the proprietor the duty of seeing to it that the patron is not injured either by those in his employ or by drunken or vicious men whom he may choose to harbor. Further, a guest or patron of such a place has a right to rely on the belief that he is in an orderly house and that the operator, personally or by his delegated representative, is exercising reasonable care to the end that the doings of the house shall be orderly.'"

It would seem from the foregoing that the rule of the common law with respect to intoxicating beverages is not quite so clearly defined in favor of non-liability as would appear from statements found in other cases, and textbooks, as well as in the majority opinion.

Plaintiffs next contend that the rule of the common law with respect to habit forming drugs should be controlling here. At common law, it was held that a wife could bring an action against one who sold habit forming drugs to a husband with knowledge that the drug was intended to satisfy a craving induced by habitual use. Hoard v. Peck, 56 Barb., N.Y., 202; Holleman v. Harward, 119 N.C. 150, 25 S.E. 972, 34 L. R.A. 803; Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 85 Ohio 327, 98 N.E. 102, 40 L.R.A., N.S., 360 [morphine]; Moberg v. Scott, 38 S.D. 422, 161 N.W. 998, L.R.A.1917D, 732 [opium]; Tidd v. Skinner, 225 N.Y. 422, 122 N.E. 247, 3 A.L.R. 1145 [morphine].

In Pratt v. Daly, 55 Ariz. 535, 104 P. 2d 147, 130 A.L.R. 341 (in Arizona there is no civil damage act), it was held that defendant vendor of intoxicating liquors was liable to the plaintiff wife after selling such liquors over her protest and with knowledge that the plaintiff's husband was an habitual drunkard and had reached such a state that his power to drink or not as he chose had been destroyed. The court concluded that the defendants had breached a duty owing to the plaintiff for which the plaintiff should be compensated in damages.

A note in Southern California Law Review (14:91) points out that at common law, a vendor was liable to one spouse for a sale to the other spouse, or to a parent for a sale to a minor child of habit forming drugs to the extent of the damages suffered by the loss of consortium or the services of the victim of the drugs if the vendor knew or had reason to know that the drugs were to be used for a purpose harmful to the purchaser. The doctrine stems from the husband's common law cause of action against one who injures the husband's wife and thereby causes the husband expense and loss of consortium, Golden v. Greene Paper Co., 44 R.I. 231, 116 A. 579, 21 A.L.R. 1517, and from the wife's similar cause of action, Emerson v. Taylor, 133 Md. 192, 104 A. 538, 5 A.L.R. 1049; Nash v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 149 Miss. 823, 116 So. 100, 59 A.L.R. 680, recognized subsequent to her right to sue in her own name as created by the various Married Women's Acts (see California Code of Civ.Proc. § 370). The doctrine would now seem to have acquired the dignity of a status distinct from its parent action (Restatement, Torts, §§ 696, 697, 705; 17 Am.Jur., Drugs & Druggists, 864, § 34), especially in view of its application to parent and child.

The author of the article points out that there should be no reason to distinguish between habit-forming drugs and intoxicating liquors since both have two important characteristics in common: (1) Their use in substantial quantities causes injury to the mind and body; and (2) after reaching a certain point in their use, a person can no longer control his appetite for them. (As to the general pharmacological problem, see The Action of Alcohol on Man [1923], Ernest H. Starling; The Opium Problem [1928], Charles E. Terry and Mildred Pellens; U. S. Treasury Department, Bureau of Narcotics, Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs [1938].)

In the Pratt case, supra [55 Ariz. 535, 104 P.2d 151], the court said: "A careful study of the cases following the principle laid down in Hoard v. Peck, supra, will show that the reasoning upon which they were based is that there are certain substances which, if used habitually, destroy the volition of the user to such an extent that he has no power to do aught but consume them when they are placed before him; that the consumption and the sale of such substances are, therefore, merged and become the act of the vendor; the sale is, therefore, the proximate cause of the loss of consortium, and the consumer cannot, having lost his volition to act, be guilty of contributory negligence. The best known of these substances is opium and its various derivatives, but it is a well-known scientific fact that many other things, under certain circumstances, will produce the same result. Cocaine is an instance among the drugs, and it is equally well established that the excessive use of intoxicating liquor may, and frequently does, have the same effect. We think it would be a narrow and illogical limitation of the rule to hold that because one habit-forming substance is a 'drug' in the technical sense of the term, and another is a 'liquor', different rules should be applied to the sale and use thereof. In fact, there is no specific holding applying such limitation in any of the recorded cases, and in Holleman v. Harward, supra, the court intimated strongly that under certain circumstances intoxicating liquor might fall within the same rule as laudanum as a habit-forming substance. Of course, since there is not the same presumption that the use of liquor will eventually cause the loss of volition that there is with a habit-forming drug, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that to the knowledge of defendant such a stage has been reached by the consumer, but if this fact is once established, in all reason and logic the right of action should be the same in one case as in the other. We are satisfied from our examination of the cases that the language of the Restatement, supra (Torts, vol. 3, p. 696) 'c. The expression "habit-forming drugs" as used in this section does not include intoxicating liquor', was not meant as a declaration that the decided cases exclude liquors from the rule, for no such cases have been cited to us, but rather is merely a recognition of the fact that the precise issue had not yet been presented to and determined by any court." The court frankly admitted that: "Every requested application of the principles of the common law to a new set of circumstances is originally without precedent, and some court must be the first one to make the proper application.

"In answer to the second contention (judicial legislation), we are not asked to make a law. We are asked to declare what the common law is and always has been, and a declaration by us that it has always permitted such an action, even though none has ever actually been brought, is no more legislation than would be a declaration that it does not.

"So far as the bringing of unwarranted actions is concerned, if the facts do not show the action is justified, we must assume that the trial court and jury will properly apply the law, and we may not refuse to declare it correctly merely because there are some who may attempt to apply it to cases where the facts do not sustain it.

"On a careful review of all the authorities and a consideration of well-known scientific facts, we think that under the rationale of the rule laid down in Hoard v. Peck, supra, and the cases following it, the sale of intoxicating liquors under the circumstances indicated above is subject to the same rule as the sale of what is, in the strict sense of the word, a habit-forming 'drug', and that under such circumstances an action for the sale of the former should be upheld as allowed by the common law as well as the latter."

In Swanson v. Ball, 67 S.D. 161, 290 N. W. 482, 483, there was no dramshop act involved. The court there was concerned with facts substantially the same as the ones here under consideration. Plaintiff's husband was alleged to have died after drinking liquor sold to him by defendants who admitted receiving both oral and written notice from plaintiff to refrain from doing so. Defendants appealed from an order overruling their demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. The court, in affirming, said: "We are not impressed with the argument presented in which the appellant has attempted to differentiate between the opium drug in the case of Moberg v. Scott, supra, 161 N.W. 998, and the intoxicating liquor in the instant case. This court through its former decisions, which we have just referred to, has quite conclusively established that a complaint such as we are considering states a cause of action. The right of the wife to the consortium of the husband is one of her personal rights and we believe that the allegations of the complaint are sufficient in both statements, as to facts and form, to permit a trial upon its merits." The court also held that the wife had a cause of action "independent of any specific statute."

So far as the rationale of the decided cases is concerned—that the consumption and not the sale of the liquor is the proximate cause of the injury received by the third person—it appears clear that under the circumstances of this case, the sale and consumption were so merged as to become one act and under the rule that individuals must be held to have contemplated the natural and probable result of their own acts purposely and intentionally committed it is unrealistic to say that the act of the deceased in drinking the liquor and thereafter becoming belligerent and pugilistic was not a foreseeable consequence of the sale by defendant. (See 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 420, 421.) This court has held many times that negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury even though the act of a third person intervenes, if a person of ordinary prudence could reasonably anticipate the probability of the third person's intervening conduct. Richardson v. Ham, 44 Cal. 2d 772, 285 P.2d 269; Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 44 Cal.2d 225, 282 P.2d 69; McEvoy v. American Pool Corp., 32 Cal.2d 295, 299, 195 P.2d 783; Mosley v. Arden Farms Co., 26 Cal.2d 213, 218, 157 P.2d 372, 158 A.L.R. 872; Katz v. Helbing, 215 Cal. 449, 10 P.2d 1001, and others.

It appears to me that under the facts alleged by plaintiffs it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to sustain the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend.

I would, therefore, reverse the judgment.

L. A. 23323.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 4, 1955.

Action to foreclose chattel mortgage and for deficiency judgment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen W. Ashburn, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that where two notes were executed for the same liability, one secured by a trust deed and the other by a chattel mortgage, and creditor, after foreclosing trust deed under power of sale, foreclosed chattel mortgage, creditor could not, in view of statute providing that no deficiency judgment may be rendered where trust deed is foreclosed under power of sale, obtain a deficiency judgment in the chattel mortgage foreclosure action.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Opinion, 281 P.2d 633, vacated.

1. Mortgages ⇐375

Statute providing that no deficiency judgment may be rendered on a note secured by a deed of trust when property has been sold under power of sale applies where a note is secured by a trust deed even though note may also be secured by other security. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 580d.

2. Mortgages ⇐375

Where a note is secured both by a trust deed and by additional security, and property is sold under power of sale, creditor may not obtain a deficiency judgment, but may pursue the additional security. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 580d.

3. Chattel Mortgages ⇐287

Where two notes were executed for the same liability, one secured by a trust deed and the other by a chattel mortgage, and creditor, after foreclosing trust deed under power of sale, foreclosed chattel mortgage, creditor could not, in view of statute providing that no deficiency judgment may be rendered where trust deed is foreclosed under power of sale, obtain a deficiency judgment in the chattel mortgage foreclosure action. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 580a-580d, 726; West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1642.

4. Statutes ⇐184

Purpose to be achieved and evils to be eliminated has important place in ascertaining legislative intent, and statute should be interpreted to promote rather than defeat legislative purpose and policy.

5. Statutes ⇐181(2)

In interpretation of a statute, when two constructions appear possible, that will be chosen which leads to the more reasonable result.

6. Statutes ⇐181(2)

That construction of a statute should be avoided which affords an opportunity to evade act, and that construction is favored which would defeat subterfuges, expediences, or evasions employed to continue mischief sought to be remedied by statute, or to defeat compliance with its terms, or any attempt to accomplish by indirection what statute forbids.

7. Contracts ⇐164

Several papers relating to the same subject-matter, and executed as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be construed together as one contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1642.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for $6,671.96 (plus $360, attorney's fees), foreclosing a chattel mortgage on described personal property, ordering the sale of the property, and for a deficiency judgment if the sale price was not sufficient to satisfy the amount secured by the mortgage. Four hundred and forty-four dollars and fifty-five cents was realized from the sale, hence the deficiency judgment was substantial. Defendant's appeal is on the judgment roll and a settled statement of the proceedings.

Plaintiffs were the owners of an off-sale liquor business which included the license, stock in trade and equipment; they also held a lease of the premises on which the business was conducted. They sold all items to defendant who paid part of the purchase price in cash. The unpaid balance of the purchase price was $7,000 (later adjusted to $6,449.53). Defendant gave plaintiffs two promissory notes dated August 14, 1951, each for $7,000, representing the balance of the purchase price. There is no question but that these two notes represented a single obligation in the amount of $7,000, the unpaid balance of the purchase price. Both of the notes and the security therefor hereafter mentioned were a part of the same transaction.

As security for the payment of one of the notes (hereafter called the first note) defendant gave plaintiffs a chattel mortgage on the equipment sold. That note recited that it was given in "addition to the deed of trust in like amount as additional security to the mortgagees and trustees [plaintiffs]."

A second trust deed on real property owned by defendant was given as security for the second note.

Defendant defaulted in the payment of the installments under the notes, and plaintiffs had the trustee under the trust deed sell the real property on October 14, 1952, under the power of sale contained therein. Plaintiffs bought the property and, as a result thereof, a net of $740.35 was credited as payment on the trust deed note. In the meantime, on October 9th, plaintiffs commenced the instant action to foreclose the chattel mortgage and note and for a deficiency judgment. The judgment appealed from followed.

It was stipulated that the "chattel mortgage represented the balance of the purchase price of the personal property sold to the defendant, but that the trust deed did not stand in that category, but merely constituted additional security for the debt."

Defendant contends that under section 580d of the Code of Civil Procedure¹ no deficiency judgment may be given where there has been a sale under a power of sale in a trust deed as distinguished from a foreclosure sale following court action. It is argued that while there were two notes here, one of which was secured by the trust deed, and section 580d refers to a deficiency on a "note" secured by a trust deed, there was in fact only one obligation or debt which was secured by the trust deed under which a sale had taken place; that a deficiency judgment may not be permitted by the device here used of having two notes, one of which was secured by the chattel mortgage. Defendant does not question that both the real and personal property security may be exhausted and the chattel mortgage foreclosed. Nor is there any contention that either the mortgage or trust deed was a purchase money security and thus controlled by section 580b of the Code of Civil Procedure² considered by this court in the recent case of Brown v. Jensen, 41 Cal.2d 193, 259 P.2d 425.

[1,2] If, in the instant case, there had been only one note, secured by a chattel mortgage as well as a trust deed, which

1. "No judgment shall be rendered for any deficiency upon a note secured by a deed of trust or mortgage upon real property hereafter executed in any case in which the real property has been sold by the mortgagee or trustee under power of sale contained in such a mortgage or deed of trust." Code Civ.Proc. § 580d.
2. "No deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale of real property for failure of the purchaser to complete his contract of sale, or under a deed of trust, or mortgage, given to secure payment of the balance of the purchase price of real property.

"Where both a chattel mortgage and a deed of trust or mortgage have been given to secure payment of the balance of the combined purchase price of both real and personal property, no deficiency judgment shall lie at any time under any one thereof." Code Civ.Proc. § 580b.

represented the debt of defendant to plaintiffs, it is clear that plaintiffs would not be entitled to a deficiency judgment under the plain wording of section 580d, supra. It would be a note "secured by a deed of trust or mortgage upon real property" upon which there could not be a judgment for "any" deficiency. There is no limitation in that section that a note must be secured solely by a trust deed. Thus, if the note is secured by a trust deed on real property the section applies even though it may also be secured by other security. Also, in accordance with the section the real property given as security for the note has been sold under the power of sale contained in the deed of trust. It has been held in such a situation (one note secured by both trust deed and other security) that after a sale under the power of sale in the trust deed, the creditor may exhaust the additional security and need not follow the procedure following a sale under a trust deed prescribed by section 580a of the Code of Civil Procedure,³ Hatch v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 19 Cal.2d 254, 120 P.2d 869, nor is he prevented from exhausting the other security where the trust deed is a purchase money one on which no deficiency judgment may be given under section 580b of the Code of Civil Procedure as it read prior to its amendment in 1949, Stats.1949, Ch. 1599. Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Sampsell, 51 Cal.App.2d 180, 124 P.2d 353. By analogy the same rule would apply to section 580d, supra, here involved, and defendant does not contend that the chattel mortgage may not be foreclosed. The Hatch and Mortgage Guarantee cases, however, in arriving at that conclusion stress, and are based on, the proposition that the pursuit of additional security is not a deficiency judgment, the implication being that if it were the creditor could not prevail. We take it, therefore, that a deficiency judgment may not be obtained under the circumstances now being discussed. The dictum apparently to the contrary in Peterson v. Wilson, 88 Cal.App.2d 617, 632, 199 P.2d 757, 6 A.L.R.2d 258, fails to consider the reasoning in those cases or the wording of the code sections and is, therefore, disapproved.

[3] Since the giving of additional security for the note gives the right to exhaust such security but no right to a deficiency judgment, the chattel mortgage in the instant case adds nothing to the rights of plaintiffs with regard to a deficiency judgment. The question is, therefore, whether the fact that a separate note, secured by a chattel mortgage, changes the picture legally. We think it does not where, as here, both notes represented only a single sum owing from defendant to plaintiffs. The case is no different than if defendant had given two notes each for the same total indebtedness and only one of them was secured by a trust deed. It should be clear that in such a case the plaintiffs could not recover a deficiency judgment on the unsecured note after selling the property under the trust deed covered by the other note. It is unreasonable to say the Legislature intended that section 580d could be circumvented by such a manifestly evasive device. In such a situation the legislative intent must have been that the two notes are, in legal contemplation and under section 580d, one, secured by a trust deed. This construction is compelled by several persuasive factors.

In Brown v. Jensen, supra, 41 Cal.2d 193, 197, 259 P.2d 425, 426, we held: "These provisions [Code Civ.Proc. §§ 580-580d, 726] indicate a considered course on the part of the Legislature to limit strictly the right to recover deficiency judgments, that is, to recover on the debt more than the value of the security." Moreover, those provisions may not be waived in advance by the debtor as the courts have held with respect to section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Winklemen v. Sides, 31 Cal.App.2d 387, 88 P.2d 147, and section 580a, California Bank v. Stimson, 89 Cal.App.2d 552, 201 P.2d 39 and, see generally, Salter v.

3. When a deficiency judgment is sought after sale under a trust deed there must be a determination of the fair market value of the property and the judgment may not be for more than the difference between the indebtedness due at the time of the sale and the market value.

Ulrich, 22 Cal.2d 263, 138 P.2d 7, 146 A.L.R. 1344 and Morello v. Metzenbaum, 25 Cal.2d 494, 154 P.2d 670. Because of the strong reasons of policy expressed in the Winklemen and California Bank cases the same rules should apply to section 580d. The section would have little effect if the prospective creditor could compel the prospective debtor to waive it in advance.

[4-7] Taking into consideration the policies and purposes of the act, the applicable rule of statutory construction is that the purpose sought to be achieved and evils to be eliminated has an important place in ascertaining the legislative intent. Wotton v. Bush, 41 Cal.2d 460, 261 P.2d 256. Statutes should be interpreted to promote rather than defeat the legislative purpose and policy. People v. Centr-O-Mart, 34 Cal.2d 702, 214 P.2d 378. "[I]n the interpretation of statutes, when two constructions appear possible, this court follows the rule of favoring that which leads to the more reasonable result." Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 32 Cal.2d 620, 630, 197 P.2d 543, 549. And, "That construction of a statute should be avoided which affords an opportunity to evade the act, and that construction is favored which would defeat subterfuges, expedencies, or evasions employed to continue the mischief sought to be remedied by the statute, or to defeat compliance with its terms, or any attempt to accomplish by indirection what the statute forbids." 50 Am.Jur., Statutes, § 361; see In re Reineger, 184 Cal. 97, 193 P. 81. Moreover, it should be noted that "Several contracts relating to the same matters, between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be taken together." Civ.Code, § 1642. And, "It is a general rule that several papers relating to the same subject-matter, and executed as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be construed together as one contract. * * *" Symonds v. Sherman, 219 Cal. 249, 253, 26 P.2d 293, 295.

While other sections of the Code of Civil Procedure which deal with deficiency judgments, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 726, 580a, 580b, refer to "debts," "obligations," or "contracts" secured by a trust deed may be broader than the word "note" used in section 580d, the fact remains that here we have a note and in order to avoid thwarting the purpose of section 580d by a subterfuge, we must construe that section as embracing a situation such as we have here. If we do not so construe the section the debtor would, in legal effect, waive in advance the protection afforded by being required to give two notes for the same debt, even though the instruments contained no such waiver.

That portion of the judgment for a deficiency payment after sale of the property covered by the chattel mortgage is reversed. Otherwise the judgment is affirmed, defendant to recover costs.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 4, 1955.

Action by stockholders of a corporation against the corporation and a director and officer thereof for his alleged fraudulent breach of contract to hold property in trust for corporation and supply funds to assist in financing its construction of a hotel building and fraudulent taking of corporation funds. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., dismissing the action on ground that a Nevada court's judgment, dismissing with prejudice an action by corporation against such officer, was res judicata, plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that evidence justified trial court's conclusions that attempt to remove corporation's secretary, who signed verification of complaint in Nevada action, was abortive, and that attorney who signed such complaint had authority to commence action and dismiss it with prejudice, so that judgment therein was res judicata.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇨206(1)

A stockholder's representative suit is a "derivative action" because wrong to be redressed is against corporation, which normally would bring suit, but where it fails or refuses to act after proper demand, stockholder's ultimate interest in corporation is sufficient to justify propulsive action by him to set in motion judicial machinery for redress of such wrong.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Derivative Action".

2. Corporations ⇨202

Generally, a stockholder may not maintain action in his own behalf for wrong done to corporation by third person on theory that such wrong devalued stock, as such an action would authorize multitudinous litigation and ignore corporate entity, but under proper circumstances, stockholder may bring representative action or derivative action on corporation's behalf.

3. Corporations ⇨207½

A stockholder's action is "derivative," that is, in corporate right, if gravamen of complaint is injury to corporation or to whole body of its stock or property, without any severance or distribution among individual holders thereof, or complaint seeks to recover assets for corporation or prevent dissipation of its assets.

4. Judgment ⇨701

In stockholders' derivative action, judgment on merits against corporation on wrong alleged to have been done it is ordinarily res judicata in stockholders' subsequent action on corporation's behalf for same wrong, which is to corporation as such, not to stockholders individually, so that bar to action by corporation bars stockholders' action for corporation.

5. Judgment ⇨821

Whether a Nevada court's judgment dismissing action with prejudice on plaintiff's motion is a bar to or res judicata in another action on same cause in California is controlled by Nevada law. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1913.

6. Judgment ⇨822(1)

The effect of valid judgment on rights or other interests of parties thereto and persons in privity with them or as conclusive adjudication between them of facts which were or might have been put in issue in proceedings leading to judgment is determined by law of state wherein judgment was rendered.

7. Evidence ⇨80(1)

In absence of Nevada statute or case law covering question whether Nevada court's judgment dismissing action with prejudice on plaintiff's motion is res judicata in another action on same cause in California, Supreme Court will assume that Nevada law is not out of harmony with California law and look to such law for solution of problem.

8. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨29, 42

A voluntary dismissal of action by clerk's entry is presumed to be without prejudice to bringing of another action while dismissal in open court pursuant to stipulation is ordinarily effective as a retraxit, and in absence of such stipulation or motion addressed to court, there is no retraxit.

9. Judgment $\S$ 570(1)

A dismissal of action with prejudice by plaintiff bars subsequent action by him on same cause.

10. Dismissal and Nonsuit $\S$ 42

A dismissal of action with prejudice terminates action, affects rights of parties thereto, and is final judgment for defendants, who are entitled to recover their costs.

11. Judgment $\S$ 570(5)

A mere statement by court that judgment dismissing action is with prejudice is not conclusive that judgment is res judicata, but such question is determined by nature of action and character of judgment, and if it is clearly not on merits, court's intention to make determination on merits is immaterial.

12. Judgment $\S$ 565

A dismissal of action without prejudice does not bar another action by plaintiff on same cause, but in other respects has effect of final judgment for defendant, as it terminates action and concludes rights of parties therein.

13. Judgment $\S$ 570(5)

An order dismissing action without stating that it is made without prejudice does not bar subsequent action, unless record shows actual determination on merits.

14. Judgment $\S$ 822(1)

Any attack on Nevada court's judgment, dismissing corporation's action against a director and officer thereof by such defendant as defense in stockholders' subsequent derivative action in California against him and corporation, is collateral.

15. Judgment $\S$ 504(1)

A domestic judgment may not be impeached collaterally on ground that a regularly licensed attorney, appearing as such for a party to action wherein judgment was rendered, had no authority to act on such party's behalf.

16. Judgment $\S$ 495(1)

Generally, every presumption is in favor of validity of judgment or order of court of general jurisdiction on collateral attack thereon, and any condition of facts consistent with its validity and not affirmatively contradicted by judgment roll will be presumed to have existed.

17. Judgment $\S$ 495(1)

On collateral attack on judgment, parties thereto will be presumed to have consented to court's action or waived objection thereto, when necessary to sustain judgment.

18. Judgment $\S$ 490(1), 492

Generally, a domestic judgment, valid on its face, is not subject to collateral attack on ground that defendant in action wherein judgment was rendered was not served with process or that attorney entering appearance for defendant had no authority to do so.

19. Judgment $\S$ 818(1)

The clause of federal Constitution, requiring that full faith and credit be given in each state to records and judicial proceedings of every other state, applies to records and proceedings of courts, only so far as they have jurisdiction, and courts of one state are not required to give full faith and credit to, or regard as valid or conclusive, any judgment of another state's court which had no jurisdiction of subject-matter or parties to action wherein judgment was rendered or of res in proceedings in rem. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 4, $\S$ 1.

20. Judgment $\S$ 818(2)

The jurisdiction of court rendering judgment is open to inquiry under proper averments, when questioned in court of another state, and such rule applies to foreign judgment entered on attorney's unauthorized appearance for a party.

21. Judgment $\S$ 951(4)

In stockholders' derivative action against corporation and a director and officer thereof, who raised defense of res judicata by reason of Nevada court's judgment dismissing corporation's action against him, evidence was sufficient to support trial court's conclusion that one signing verification of complaint in Nevada action was a director and secretary of corporation and that attempt to remove her as secretary at stockholders' meeting was abortive because no notice of meeting was given, so that she had authority to commence Nevada action.

22. Attorney and Client ⚖️70

An attorney signing complaint in corporation's action in foreign state against a director and officer of corporation is presumed to have had authority to commence action.

23. Attorney and Client ⚖️70

An attorney's act in entering a defendant's appearance carries with it presumption of attorney's due authority to do so, and such presumption may be weighed against evidence to contrary by trier of facts.

24. Appeal and Error ⚖️991

Whether attorney, signing complaint in corporation's Nevada action against a director and officer of corporation had authority to commence action, so as to render judgment dismissing it with prejudice res judicata in stockholders' subsequent derivative action against corporation and such officer in California, should be decided by trial court.

25. Attorney and Client ⚖️89

An attorney has authority to dismiss his client's action without prejudice.

26. Attorney and Client ⚖️77

An attorney's implied general authority does not include power to dispose of his client's substantive rights.

27. Attorney and Client ⚖️88

In civil litigation, attorney, as his client's agent, has authority to bind client in all matters pertaining to regular conduct of case, in absence of fraud.

28. Attorney and Client ⚖️88

The conduct and management of action is entrusted to judgment of plaintiff's attorney, who decides what should be contested and what points should be taken or abandoned, in absence of special instructions by client, but does not ordinarily have implied authority to do an act which will effect surrender or loss of client's substantial rights, as client determines objectives to be attained.

29. Attorney and Client ⚖️70

Plaintiff's attorney is presumed to have authority to compromise action.

30. Attorney and Client ⚖️72

In stockholders' derivative action against corporation and a director and officer thereof, who raised defense of res judicata because of Nevada court's judgment dismissing with prejudice corporation's action against him, evidence justified trial court's conclusion that attorney signing complaint in Nevada action had authority to commence it and to dismiss it with prejudice.

31. Appeal and Error ⚖️991

In stockholders' derivative action against corporation and a director and officer thereof, who raised defense of res judicata because of Nevada court's judgment in corporation's action against him, whether attorney signing complaint in Nevada action, one signing verification thereof as corporation's secretary, and such officer and his counsel, acted collusively and fraudulently, was question for trial court.

32. Judgment ⚖️822(1)

Testimony of attorney, signing complaint in corporation's Nevada action against a director and officer of corporation, that he did not think dismissal of action with prejudice on his motion would affect stockholders' pending California derivative action against corporation and such officer, did not alter res judicata effect of Nevada judgment of dismissal on collateral attack, but was only attorney's opinion of legal effect of dismissal.

33. Appeal and Error ⚖️991

In stockholders' derivative action against corporation and a director and officer thereof, whether individual defendant waived, and was estopped to assert, defense of res judicata because of Nevada court's judgment in corporation's action against him, was question for trial court.

34. Judgment ⚖️958(1)

In stockholders' derivative action against corporation and a director and officer thereof, trial court's confinement of issue to question raised by individual defendant as to whether Nevada court's judgment, dismissing with prejudice corporation's action against him, was res judicata, did not foreclose plaintiffs from showing that he waived or was estopped from raising such defense, as such question was part of res judicata issue.

35. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 822(1)

Stockholders' derivative action against corporation and a director and officer thereof for fraud was not such an unusual case that doctrine of res judicata because of Nevada court's judgment, dismissing with prejudice corporation's action against such officer for same wrongs after commencement of such derivative action, should not be applied.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiffs, alleging that they were stockholders of Nevada Desert Inn, a Nevada corporation, commenced the instant action asserting it to be on their behalf and as representatives of the other stockholders. Among the defendants are the Desert Inn and Burke, a director and officer of Desert Inn, other directors of the Inn and also Lela M. Anderson and Harold M. Morse. Burke was the only defendant who answered the complaint. Presumably the others had not been served.

Plaintiffs alleged that defendant Burke had fraudulently breached a contract with the Inn under which he was to hold property in trust for it and supply funds to assist in the financing of the construction of a hotel in Las Vegas, Nevada, and he was to take stock in the Inn. They charged that he fraudulently took Inn funds; that the other directors knew of Burke's actions and yet they did not stop him; that the directors mismanaged the affairs of the Inn and misappropriated the funds thereof. They also alleged fraud on the part of defendant Barkley in the sale of the stock to them, and that Morse, attorney for some of the stockholders in an action commenced in Nevada against the directors, negligently permitted the action to be lost on nonsuit.

Burke answered and raised the defense of res judicata by reason of a judgment by a Nevada court of the eighth judicial district. The judgment which the trial court herein found to be res judicata came about as follows:

In 1947 the Inn commenced an action in the proper Nevada court. The complaint filed therein was verified by Lela Anderson who stated therein that she was the secretary of the Inn. This action is hereafter called second Nevada action. The complaint was signed by Morse and Graves, a firm of Nevada attorneys, by Harold M. Morse, as attorneys for plaintiff therein. The action made substantially the same charges against Burke as are made in the instant action. Burke answered raising the general issue. A "Dismissal with Prejudice" signed by Morse and Graves, by Harold M. Morse, as attorneys for the Inn was filed in that action on November 16, 1950 (the instant action was commenced on April 11, 1949), and based thereon the Nevada court on the same day made its order that it appearing that plaintiff (the Inn) having filed its written dismissal of the action with prejudice and on motion of Morse and Graves, attorneys for plaintiff, the action is "dismissed with prejudice." Prior to the above mentioned Nevada action a similar action by the Inn, with Morse as counsel, had been commenced and tried and resulted in a nonsuit, hereafter referred to as first Nevada action.

[1-4] Plaintiffs here describe their action as "derivative" and insofar as they, as stockholders of the Inn, are seeking redress for wrongs done the Inn, it is such an action. "A stockholder's representative suit has been called a 'derivative action' for the reason that the wrong to be redressed is one against the corporation, and normally the corporation would bring the suit. Where, however, the corporation fails or refuses to act after proper demand, the stockholder's ultimate interest in the corporation is sufficient to justify the bringing of a 'propulsive' action designed to set in motion the judicial machinery for the redress of the wrong to the corporation." Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 13, 16, 108 P.2d 906, 908, 135 A.L.R. 318. And, "Generally, a stockholder may not maintain an action in his own behalf for a wrong done by a third person to the corporation on the theory that such wrong devalued his stock and the stock of the other shareholders, for such an action would authorize multitudinous litigation and ignore the corporate entity. Under proper circumstances a stockholder may bring a representative action or derivative action on behalf of the corporation. [Citations.] * * * The action is derivative, i. e., in the corporate right, if the gravamen of the complaint is injury to the corporation, or to the whole body of its stock or property without any severance or distribution among individual holders, or if it seeks to recover assets for the corporation or to prevent the dissipation of its assets.'" Sutter v. General Petroleum Corp., 28 Cal.2d 525, 530, 170 P.2d 898, 900, 167 A.L.R. 271. Being a derivative action, a judgment on the merits against the corporation on the wrong alleged to have been done to it would ordinarily be res judicata in an action by the stockholders on behalf of the corporation for the same wrong. This follows because the wrong was to the corporation as such and not the stockholders individually, hence a bar to an action by the corporation would be a bar to an action by the stockholders for the corporation. Scarborough v. Briggs, 81 Cal.App.2d 161, 183 P.2d 683; see Beyersbach v. Juno Oil Co., 42 Cal.2d 11, 28, 265 P.2d 1; Fletcher Cyc. Corps. (perm.ed.) § 5859; 50 C.J.S., Judgments, § 794.

[5-11] Here we have a judgment (the Nevada judgment) of dismissal with prejudice, rendered by the court on a motion therefor by plaintiff. Whether such a judgment is a bar—res judicata—as to another action on the same cause in this state is controlled by Nevada law. See Code Civ. Proc. § 1913; Rall v. Lovell, 105 Cal.App.2d 507, 233 P.2d 681; Smith v. Smith, 115 Cal. App.2d 92, 251 P.2d 720; In re Kimler, 37 Cal.2d 568, 233 P.2d 902; Goodrich on Conflict of Laws, pp. 630-634; Rest.Conflicts, § 450. The rule is stated: "(1) The effect of a valid judgment upon the rights or other interests of the parties and persons in privity with them is determined by the law of the state where the judgment was rendered.

"(2) The effect of a valid judgment as a conclusive adjudication between the parties and persons in privity with them of facts which were or might have been put in issue in the proceedings is determined by the law of the state where the judgment was rendered." (Rest.Conflicts, § 450.) Our courts take judicial notice of "the laws of the several states of the United States and the interpretation thereof by the highest courts of appellate jurisdiction of such states". Code Civ.Proc. § 1875. In Nevada the statute with reference to dismissal, at the time the dismissal here was made, provided that an action may be dismissed by plaintiff at any time before trial if no affirmative relief is sought by defendant; by either party with the consent of the other; by the court when plaintiff fails to appear at the trial; by the court when upon trial plaintiff "abandons" it; on nonsuit; and in "every other case the judgment shall be rendered on the merits." Nevada Compiled Laws 1929, § 8793, as amended in 1939, Nev. Stats.1939, p. 33.* It has been held by the Supreme Court of Nevada that where there is a dismissal of the action at plaintiff's behest but nothing is said about prejudice that the judgment is not on the merits and hence not a bar to a subsequent action by plaintiff on the same cause, Van Vliet v. Olin, 1 Nev. 495; James v. Leport, 19 Nev. 174, 8 P. 47; Christensen v. Duborg, 38 Nev. 404, 150 P. 306, but where it is dismissed on the stipulation of the parties it is on the merits and a bar. Phillpotts v. Blasdel, 10 Nev. 19. We find no Nevada statute or case law covering the case we have here where the plaintiff moved the court for judgment of dismissal with prejudice and the judgment of dismissal was with prejudice. Under those circumstances we will assume the Nevada law is not out of harmony with ours and thus we look to our law for a solution of the problem. See Strout v. Burgess, 144 Me. 263, 68 A.2d 241, 12 A.L.R.2d 939; Knox v. Pryor, 10 Cal. App.2d 76, 51 P.2d 106; McDonald v. Hart- ford Trust Co., 104 Conn. 169, 132 A. 902; Dimon v. Dimon, 40 Cal.2d 516, 542, 254 P.2d 528, concurring and dissenting opinions. In Lewis v. Johnson, 12 Cal.2d 558, 563, 86 P.2d 99, 102, we said: "There is a well-recognized distinction between a dismissal voluntarily made by the clerk's entry, which is presumed to be without prejudice to the bringing of another action, and a dismissal entered in open court pursuant to stipulation, which is ordinarily effective as a retraxit. In the absence of such stipulation or motion addressed to the court, there is no retraxit." Here, according to the recital in the Nevada judgment, the dismissal with prejudice was made with prejudice on the motion of the Inn's attorneys. It would seem clear that a dismissal with prejudice by plaintiff of its action is a bar to a subsequent action on the same cause; otherwise there would be no meaning to the "with prejudice" feature. "A dismissal with prejudice terminates the action and the rights of the parties are affected by it. It is a final judgment in favor of defendants and they are entitled to recover their costs. But a mere statement that a judgment of dismissal is 'with prejudice' is not conclusive. It is the nature of the action and the character of the judgment that determines whether it is res judicata. The intention of the court to make a determination on the merits may be important, but if the judgment is clearly not on the merits, the court's intention is immaterial.

* Compare Code of Civil Procedure, sections 581, 581b, 582, which are similar.

[12] "A dismissal without prejudice, on the other hand, is not a bar to another action by the plaintiff on the same cause. In other respects, however, it has the effect of a final judgment in favor of the defendant, for it terminates the action and concludes the rights of the parties in that particular action. * * *

[13, 14] "An order of dismissal containing no statement whatever that it is made without prejudice is not a bar to a subsequent action, unless the record shows that there was an actual determination on the merits." (16 Cal.Jur.2d, Dismissal, Etc., § 5.) Finally, it is clear that any attack on the Nevada judgment raised by Burke as a defense in the instant action is collateral.

Kaufmann v. California Mining etc. Syn., 16 Cal.2d 90, 104 P.2d 1038; Rest.Judgments, § 11, com. a.) And, of course, a judgment of a court of a sister state having jurisdiction must be given full faith and credit. U.S.Const. art. IV, § 1.

Plaintiffs contend, however, that the Nevada court lacked jurisdiction, and its judgment is not a bar because attorney Morse had no authority to dismiss the Inn's action with prejudice, Anderson had no authority to commence or prosecute the action for the Inn, and the dismissal was the result of collusion and fraud by the mismanaging directors of the Inn and Morse.

[15, 16] Aside from the question of the scope of the authority of an attorney with general power to represent a client in an action, to dismiss his client's action (here the dismissal by Morse of the Inn's action), being raised by a direct attack on the judgment, there is the problem of whether such question can be raised on a collateral attack on the judgment. It has been stated both in this state and Nevada that a domestic judgment may not be impeached collaterally on the ground that a regularly licensed attorney appearing as such for a party to an action had no authority to act on his behalf. See Deegan v. Deegan, 22 Nev. 185, 37 P. 360; Barber v. Barber, 47 Nev. 377, 222 P. 284, 39 A.L.R. 706, dictum; Carpentier v. City of Oakland, 30 Cal. 439; Nielsen v. Emerson, 119 Cal.App. 214, 6 P.2d 281; Strand Improvement Co. v. City of Long Beach, 173 Cal. 765, 161 P. 975, approving the Deegan and Carpentier cases; Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 280; Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 191; May v. Rosen, 91 Cal.App.2d 794, 205 P.2d 1118. In Hill v. City Cab etc. Co., 79 Cal. 188, 21 P. 728, the same rule was stated but a collateral attack was permitted because it was admitted that the attorney had no authority. This is in line with the general rule that: "On collateral attack every presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment or order of a court of general jurisdiction, and any condition of facts consistent with its validity and not affirmatively contradicted by the judgment roll will be presumed to have existed. * * *

[17, 18] "Under this general rule it will be presumed, when necessary, that the parties consented to the court's action or waived objection thereto." Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 373, 217 P.2d 951, 958. It is said in 88 A.L.R. 12, 36: "There is a lack of agreement among the courts on the question whether or not a judgment can be attacked in a collateral proceeding on the grounds that the defendant was not served with process and that the attorney entering his appearance had no authority to do so. The weight of authority supports the view that a domestic judgment, valid on its face, is not subject to collateral attack on this ground." (Citing cases from the federal courts and Arkansas, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Missouri, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas and West Virginia; contra, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon and Virginia. [See, also, 5 Am.Jur., Judgments, § 83.])

[19, 20] On the other hand with respect to foreign judgments (judgments of a sister state) it has been said: "Indeed, the clause of the Federal Constitution which requires full faith and credit to be given in each state to the records and judicial proceedings of every other state applies to the records and proceedings of courts only so far as they have jurisdiction, and the courts of one state are not required to give full faith and credit to, or regard as valid or conclusive, any judgment of a court of another state, which had no jurisdiction of the subject matter, or of the parties, or, in proceedings in rem, of the res. Accordingly, the jurisdiction of a court rendering a judgment is open to inquiry under proper averments, when questioned in the court of another state. The party against whom the judgment is rendered is not forced to go to the state of the rendition of the judgment for relief. These rules have been applied in the case of a foreign judgment entered upon an attorney's unauthorized appearance for a party." (Emphasis added; 31 Am. Jur., Judgments, § 549.) See Rest. Judgments, § 12, com. c.; Carlton v. Miller, 114 Cal.App. 272, 299 P. 738; 50 C.J.S., Judgments, § 893, c. (6).

The question of the res judicata effect of the Nevada judgment of dismissal was raised by Burke's motion to dismiss the instant action and that was the sole issue presented to the court. The court in its order of dismissal recited that the Nevada judgment was res judicata. No other findings were made but the court in its remarks from the bench stated that as late as April, 1946, directors for Desert Inn had been elected, including Lela Anderson; that a purported meeting of stockholders in Los Angeles in September, 1946, in which Anderson was removed, was a nullity as notice thereof was not given; that there is no showing that the action leading to the Nevada judgment of dismissal was not authorized by Desert Inn, inasmuch as Morse and Anderson were directors of it. Implicit in the dismissal of the California action, on the ground of res judicata of the judgment in the Nevada action, is the finding that Anderson had authority to commence the Nevada action for the Inn and Morse had authority to act as its attorney and dismiss the Nevada action with prejudice, and that there was no fraud or collusion in the commencement or dismissal of the Nevada action.

At the hearing on the res judicata question the transcript of the trial in the first Nevada action which resulted in a nonsuit was introduced as was a transcript of the record in the second Nevada action. Morse's deposition was also received. Therein he testified that he was a regularly licensed attorney practicing in Nevada; that he was one of the attorneys for the Inn in the first Nevada action, being employed by Barkley and Anderson; that after the nonsuit was granted and in September, 1946, he wrote to Barkley stating he desired to withdraw as attorney in the first action and that he should obtain new counsel to file a new action; that after he wrote the letter any and all association with Barkley or plaintiff Gagnon was terminated; that he filed the second action at the request of Lela Anderson and her husband; that at the time of dismissal of that action he knew the California action was pending as did counsel for Burke. He filed an affidavit in the second action in reply to Burke's motion to dismiss for failure to bring it to trial stating that there should not be a dismissal because the California action involving the same issues had been commenced and if it were not tried the second action should be dismissed. He stated that his dismissal of the second Nevada action was to have no relation "whatsoever" to the California action, no bearing on the issues in the California action, the one now before us.

Burke was called as a witness. It was stipulated he signed the verified answer in the second Nevada action in which it was alleged that Anderson had no authority to bring it for the Inn, but Burke said he did not know whether or not she had such authority. He testified that he and his counsel, Mr. Pearlsen, went to Morse's office in November, 1950, to have Morse dismiss the second Nevada action. He testified that he and his counsel knew the California action had been commenced; that they talked with Morse about settling the second Nevada action and paid him some money ($1,500 or $1,700) in settlement thereof and Morse had the action dismissed with prejudice as above mentioned. What Morse did with the money does not appear.

Mrs. Anderson testified that she signed the verification of the complaint in the second Nevada action in which she stated she was secretary of the Inn, although she thought she was not at the time because of the purported stockholders' meeting which purported to remove her but Morse told her she was still secretary and she took his advice; that she protested that purported stockholders' meeting.

Plaintiff Gagnon testified concerning the stockholders' meeting in Los Angeles and that he was there elected president of the Inn; that neither he nor any of the other stockholders of the Inn ever authorized or knew about the commencement or dismissal of the second Nevada action and it was stipulated they did not know Morse filed that action.

[21] Insofar as Anderson's authority is concerned, it would appear that the court was justified in concluding she was a director and secretary of the Inn and the attempt to remove her was abortive. There may be a conflict in the evidence on this issue but there is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court. Hence she would not lack authority to commence the second Nevada action by reason of her holding no official position with the corporation.

[22-24] As to Morse's authority to commence the second Nevada action there is a presumption that he had such authority. "The act of the attorney in entering the appearance of a defendant, carries with it a presumption of due authority upon his part to do so." Voinich v. Roller, 203 Cal. 379, 382, 264 P. 240, 241, quoting from Garrison v. McGowan, 48 Cal. 592, 600; see, also, Dale v. City Court of City of Merced, 105 Cal.App.2d 602, 234 P.2d 110; People v. Western Meat Co., 13 Cal.App. 539, 110 P. 338; In re Estate of Pailhe, 114 Cal.App.2d 658, 251 P.2d 76; Wilson v. Barry, 102 Cal.App.2d 778, 228 P.2d 331; Sullivan v. Dunne, 198 Cal. 183, 244 P. 343; 6 Cal.Jur.2d, Attorneys at Law, §§ 154-5. And that presumption may be weighed against evidence to the contrary by the trier of fact. Dale v. City Court of Merced, supra, 105 Cal.App.2d 602, 234 P.2d 110. The question should be decided by the trial court. Sullivan v. Dunne, supra, 198 Cal. 183, 244 P. 343.

[25-29] With reference to an attorney's authority to dismiss his client's action with prejudice it is said: "An important problem is related to the distinction between voluntary dismissals or nonsuits which are without prejudice to the cause of action, and dismissals or nonsuits with prejudice, the last mentioned type being referred to in the cases by the common-law term 'retraxit.' It is clearly within the attorney's authority to dismiss the client's action without prejudice. However, a series of early cases held the general authority of an attorney even sufficient to empower him to effect a retraxit, amounting to a renunciation of the client's substantive right or cause of action. It is hardly possible to reconcile this rule with the established principle that the implied general authority of an attorney does not include any power or authority to dispose of the client's substantive rights, and it would therefore seem doubtful whether, or to what extent, the early cases would now be followed." (6 Cal.Jur.2d, Attorneys at Law, § 164.) And further in that connection: "In civil litigation, the attorney, as the client's agent, and in the absence of fraud, has authority to bind his client in all matters pertaining to the regular conduct of a case. * * * In the absence of such special instructions, the conduct and management of the action is entrusted to the attorney's judgment; he decides what should be contested, what points should be taken, and what should be abandoned. This authority is, however, subject to the qualification that an attorney ordinarily does not have implied authority to do an act which will effect the surrender or loss of a client's substantial rights, for the client determines 'the objectives to be attended.'" (6 Cal. Jur.2d, Attorneys at Law, § 156.) There is, however, a presumption that he has authority to compromise his client's action which he is prosecuting. Church v. Church, 40 Cal.App.2d 701, 105 P.2d 643; Burns v. McCain, 107 Cal.App. 291, 290 P. 623; 66 A.L.R. 107, 126; 30 A.L.R.2d 944, 953; State v. California M. Co., 15 Nev. 234; Deegan v. Deegan, 22 Nev. 185, 37 P. 360. Defendant Burke points out that there are authorities in California and Nevada which hold that on collateral attack the presumption of the attorney's authority is conclusive, Westwood Temple v. Emanuel Center, 98 Cal. App.2d 755, 221 P.2d 146; Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 342, 139 P. 805; May v. Rosen, 91 Cal.App.2d 794, 205 P.2d 1118; Deegan v. Deegan, supra, 22 Nev. 185, 37 P. 360, and it has been held that an attorney has authority to dismiss an action with prejudice, the modern name for retraxit, Ghiringhelli v. Riboni, 95 Cal.App.2d 503, 213 P.2d 17; Robinson v. Hiles, 119 Cal.App.2d 666, 260 P.2d 194, contrary to the rule at common law. Lamb v. Herndon, 97 Cal.App. 193, 275 P. 503; Bogardus v. O'Dea, 105 Cal.App. 189, 287 P. 149; Chase v. Van Camp Sea Food Co., Inc., 109 Cal. App. 38, 292 P. 179; but see 6 Cal.Jur.2d, Attorneys at Law, § 164, supra. While the above cited cases may appear to conflict with the rule that ordinarily an attorney has no authority to surrender his client's rights (see quotation, supra, from 6 Cal.Jur.2d, Attorneys at Law, §§ 156, 164), they may be reconciled on the theory that there is a rebuttable presumption that he had such authority.

[30] It would seem, therefore, that the trial court was justified in concluding that Morse had authority to commence the second Nevada action and to dismiss it with prejudice.

[31, 32] While there may be evidence from which it could be inferred that Morse and Anderson and Burke's counsel and Burke acted collusively and fraudulently the question was for the trial court. Plaintiffs rely in part on the allegations in their complaint in the instant action that Morse, Burke, Anderson and other directors acted collusively and fraudulently, but allegations are not proof. It would seem that Morse's testimony that he did not think the dismissal of the second Nevada action would affect the California action, should not be allowed to alter the res judicata effect on collateral attack. In effect it was only his opinion of the legal effect of the dismissal.

[33, 34] Plaintiffs argue that Burke waived the defense of res judicata and is estopped to assert it, and in that connection, that they were prevented from giving evidence on that issue because the court confined the issue to res judicata. It is doubtful that there was any conduct on which a plea of estoppel or waiver could be based as there was no change in position on plaintiffs' part in reliance on Burke's claim in the second Nevada action that Anderson had no authority to act for the corporation. In any event the question would appear to be one for the trial court. Confining the issue to res judicata, as was done by the trial court, did not foreclose plaintiffs from making a showing that the defense had been waived or that Burke was estopped from raising it, as that would be part of the res judicata issue.

[35] Plaintiffs claim that the case is an unusual one in which the doctrine of res judicata should not be applied. See Greenfield v. Mather, 32 Cal.2d 23, 194 P.2d 1; In re Guardianship of Di Carlo's Estate, 3 Cal.2d 225, 44 P.2d 562, 99 A.L.R. 990. This case does not present the factors present in those cases unless we hold that a dismissal with prejudice of an action by a corporation to recover for a wrong alleged to have been committed as to it cannot be res judicata where the dismissal occurs after stockholders have commenced a derivative action for the same wrong. No authority so holding has been cited and we find none.

Plaintiffs contend that the trial court was "motivated" in making its order of dismissal by its finding that the prayer of the complaint was not sufficient. Even if we delve into the reasoning of the trial court it is clear it based its order on the premise of res judicata.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFITH COMPANY, a corporation,
Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

SAN DIEGO COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

L. A. 23725.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 10, 1953.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1955.

Proceeding upon motion to vacate an arbitrators' award and motion to confirm award. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William R. McKay, J., denied the motion to vacate and granted the motion to confirm. An appeal was taken. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held, inter alia, that it was not improper for one of the arbitrators to talk the matter over with a distinter-ested attorney to check the arbitrator's legal conclusions, and it was not necessary that all arbitrators act as a body in seeking such independent advice.

Affirmed.

Edmonds, J., dissented.

Opinion, 286 P.2d 3, vacated.

1. Arbitration and Award ⚡89

Though an arbitrator cannot impeach the award by testifying to his fraud and misconduct, his testimony is admissible to show what matters were submitted for decision and were considered by the arbitrators.

2. Arbitration and Award ⚡31

It was not improper for one of arbitrators to talk matter over with a distinterested attorney to check arbitrator's legal conclusions, and it was not necessary that all arbitrators act as a body in seeking such independent advice.

3. Arbitration and Award ⚡76

Conclusion of trial court in refusing to vacate award was an implied finding that he believed affidavit of arbitrator wherein it was stated that arbitrator's opinion was reached through his own independent thought and was not that of any other person, and evidence sustained such implied finding of trial court.

4. Appeal and Error ⚡996, 1011(2)

When an issue is tried on affidavits, the rule on appeal is that those affidavits favoring contention of prevailing party established not only the facts stated therein but also all the facts which reasonably may be inferred therefrom, and where there is a substantial conflict in the facts stated, a determination of the controverted facts by the trial court will not be disturbed.

5. Arbitration and Award ⚡53

Under rule of Standard Form of Arbitration providing that award is to be made in writing and signed by a majority of the arbitrators and that it shall be acknowledged when prevailing law so requires, it was unnecessary that dissenting arbitrator be present when the other two arbitrators signed award. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1287.

6. Arbitration and Award ⇨53

Manner of signing whereby one arbitrator prepared and signed award and delivered it by messenger to office of another who then signed same, the award having been previously acknowledged by the notary in the office of the first arbitrator, is not approved practice, but was not prejudicial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1287.

7. Arbitration and Award ⇨76

Evidence on motion to vacate arbitrators' award established that each party was notified at earliest possible opportunity and as nearly simultaneously as could be expected, and rule of Standard Form of Arbitration providing that award shall be delivered simultaneously to each party was substantially complied with.

8. Arbitration and Award ⇨70

Record on appeal from denial of motion to vacate award failed to establish misconduct or abuse of discretion on part of majority in refusing dissenting arbitrator's motion to reopen for purpose of producing additional evidence.

9. Arbitration and Award ⇨82(1)

After arbitration and award, merits of controversy between parties are not subject to judicial review.

10. Arbitration and Award ⇨48

Record on appeal from denial of motion to vacate award, including text of chairman's opinion, disclosed that decision of issue arising out of building construction contract was not "arbitrary, harsh and inequitable" any more than any other decision is such to the losing party. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3300, 3301.

11. Arbitration and Award ⇨31

Where issues arising out of building construction contract were submitted to arbitration, arbitrators were not specifically required to act in conformity with other than "prevailing arbitration law".

12. Arbitration and Award ⇨57

Record on appeal from denial of motion to vacate arbitrators' award failed to support contention that award was not co-extensive with issues submitted.

13. Arbitration and Award ⇨35

Where one arbitrator who was an attorney prepared formal award but award merely followed opinion prepared by another arbitrator in which the first concurred, award was that of a majority of the three-man board of arbitration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1287.

CARTER, Justice.

A rehearing was granted in this case so that plaintiff's supplemental reply brief might be considered by this court. We have examined said brief and find nothing therein which compels any change in our decision as heretofore filed.

Plaintiff Griffith Company appeals from an order denying its motion to vacate an arbitrators' award and from a judgment entered on an order confirming the award in favor of defendant college.

A construction contract entered into between the parties provided for the erection of certain college buildings for defendant by plaintiff on a cost plus and maximum price basis. The contract provided that all disputes subject to arbitration should be settled by arbitration under the "Standard Form of Arbitration Procedure of the American Institute of Architects." The work was delayed beyond the date set for substantial completion and a dispute arose. Plaintiff demanded arbitration and eventually an arbitration panel was agreed upon: Mr. McKittrick, a contractor, was named by the plaintiff; Mr. J. Howard Ziemann, an attorney, was named by the defendant; and the two nominees selected the third, Paul B. Young, as chairman. After several hearings at which evidence and briefs were considered,

Mr. Young, as chairman, with Mr. Ziemann concurring, agreed on an award in defendant's favor. Mr. McKittrick dissented in a written opinion in which he (among other things) accused Mr. Young of not having arrived at his decision by his own independent thought but through the work of an "outside attorney," or, in other words, of misconduct sufficient to justify setting aside the award. Mr. McKittrick's affidavit, as well as those of Mr. Young and Mr. Ziemann are on file.

[1] We said in Sapp v. Barenfeld, 34 Cal.2d 515, 523, 212 P.2d 233, 239, that "Although an arbitrator cannot impeach the award by testifying to his fraud or misconduct, his testimony is admissible to show what matters were submitted for decision and were considered by the arbitrators." This is, apparently, the general rule. In Commercial Arbitrations and Awards, by Sturges, it is said: "While ordinarily an arbitrator may not testify to his own acts of mistake or misconduct any more than he may to those of the members of the arbitral board generally, to establish a cause sufficient to defeat or vacate an award, it has been held that the complaining party may take such testimony of an arbitrator when it implicates the other party in the alleged misconduct, partiality, bias or corrupt action.

"Again, in the case of a dissenting arbitrator, the award not being his, it is uniformly held that he may testify as to the bias, partiality or other misconduct of the arbitrators who rendered the award in question the same as any other witness." (§ 365, p. 787.)

McKittrick, the dissenting arbitrator, by affidavit, stated that Mr. Young, prior to full discussion by the panel members, had submitted the matter to an unnamed attorney who had drafted an opinion; that Mr. Young, at a meeting, signed the original and gave it and a copy thereof to McKittrick; that Mr. Young and Mr. Ziemann desired then and there to make an award but because of Mr. McKittrick's opposition, agreed to a further meeting. At the next meeting, McKittrick moved, on behalf of plaintiff, to reopen the proceedings to permit further testimony on the "items of damage"; that the motion was denied. It is also claimed that Mr. Young and Mr. Ziemann did not sign the award in each other's presence; that the acknowledgment of Mr. Young's signature was made prior to the time he signed it; that the award was not delivered simultaneously to all arbitrators; that the award went outside the issues of the arbitration proceeding. It is also contended that Mr. Young was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in refusing to reopen the proceedings to permit additional testimony on the part of Mr. McKittrick.

Mr. Young's affidavit shows that he took his tentative written opinion to the meeting with him; that it was in a sealed envelope which was not opened until after four and one-half hours of discussion between the three of them. It was also averred that hearings had been held on May 20th, June 15th, June 22nd, June 23rd, June 24th, and July 13th, July 14th, July 15th, July 16th; that briefs were filed on the law and the facts. It is further stated that after hearing the evidence and considering the briefs, Mr. Young formed a tentative opinion of his own and that he then consulted an attorney with whom he had previously discussed the matter so that his opinion could be checked to determine that "it was not grossly erroneous so far as the law was concerned"; that upon being advised by the attorney that his opinion was not erroneous, he dictated the tentative opinion to his secretary from his own notes; that the language thereof was his own except for the citations of legal authority which he had obtained from the attorney; and that "said opinion and the award of the arbitrators were the result of affiant's own judgment and that of said J. Howard Ziemann.

"That during the course of the hearings affiant had informed both his fellow arbitrators that he intended to seek legal confirmation of whatever opinion he might arrive at, and no objection was made by either."

Article 40 of the agreement between the parties provides that any dispute subject to arbitration shall be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Standard Form of Arbitration Procedure of The American Institute of Architects and the "prevailing arbitration law."

It is argued by plaintiff that Mr. Young's conduct in privately consulting an attorney constituted misconduct such as would justify vacating the award. In Sapp v. Barenfeld, supra, 34 Cal.2d 515, 521, 212 P.2d 233, 238, substantially the same point was raised. We said there: "[T]he arbitrators, to determine the amount of the award, consulted ex parte with C. L. Weeks, a skilled cost appraiser, for an estimate of the labor and material cost of remedying the defects. They checked his estimate with several building supply firms and adopted it in making their award after this independent investigation. The award was the result of the arbitrators' own judgment, based, however, on information acquired in this manner.

"There is no error in such procedure. Although a hearing is required on disputed questions of fact, arbitrators may inform themselves further by privately consulting price lists, examining materials and receiving cost estimates. Sturges, Commercial Arbitrations and Awards, § 217, p. 495. This procedure may be ex parte, without notice or hearing to the parties, for 'it is entirely proper for arbitrators, in a case requiring it, to obtain from disinterested persons of acknowledged skill such information and advice in reference to technical questions submitted to them, as may be necessary to enable them to come to correct conclusions, provided that the award is the result of their own judgment after obtaining such information.' 1 Mechem, Agency, § 310, p. 229; City of Omaha v. Omaha Water Co., 218 U.S. 180, 198, 30 S.Ct. 615, 54 L.Ed. 991; California Annual Conf. of M. E. Church v. Seitz, 74 Cal. 287, 295, 15 P. 839; *Dore v. Southern Pac. [2-4] In view of the foregoing, there appears to be no good reason why Mr. Young should not have talked the matter over with an attorney to check his legal conclusions. There was no showing made by plaintiff that the attorney was not a disinterested person. We made no requirement in the Sapp case that all arbitrators must act as a body when seeking independent advice and it would appear that such a requirement would be unnecessarily burdensome and could lead to absurd results. the conclusion of the trial court in refusing to vacate the award is an implied finding that he believed the affidavit of Mr. Young wherein it was stated that his opinion was reached through his own independent thought and was not that of any other person. "An appellate court will not disturb the implied findings of fact made by a trial court in support of an order, any more than it will interfere with express findings upon which a final judgment is predicated. When the evidence is conflicting, it will be presumed that the court found every fact necessary to support its order that the evidence would justify. So far as it has passed on the weight of evidence or the credibility of witnesses, its implied findings are conclusive. This rule is equally applicable whether the evidence is oral or documentary. In the consideration of an order made on affidavits involving the decision of a question of fact, the appellate court is bound by the same rule as where oral testimony is presented for review." 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 614, p. 495; People v. Western Meat Co., 13 Cal. App. 539, 544, 110 P. 338; Maselli v. E. H. Appleby & Co., Inc., 117 Cal.App.2d 634, 638, 256 P.2d 618; Jones v. Lindsey, 114 Cal. When an issue is tried on affidavits, the rule on appeal is that those affidavits favoring the contention of the prevailing party established not only the facts stated therein but also all facts which reasonably may be inferred therefrom, and where there is a substantial conflict in the facts stated, a determination of the controverted facts by the trial court will not be disturbed. Hayutin v. Rudnick, 115 Cal. App.2d 138, 140, 251 P.2d 707.

[5,6] Paragraph 14 of the Standard Form of Arbitration provides that the award is to be made in writing and signed by a majority of the arbitrators and that it shall be acknowledged when the prevailing law so requires. It is contended by plaintiff that Mr. McKittrick was not permitted to participate in the making of the award, or to see a copy thereof, and that the arbitration panel did not meet when the award was made. Mr. Young's affidavit shows that at the close of the meeting when he opened his written opinion, he gave copies thereof to each of the other arbitrators; that no award was made that day, but a meeting was arranged for the following day; and he and Mr. Ziemann signed the opinion that day; that the next day a meeting was had with Mr. Young and Mr. Ziemann adhering to the conclusion previously reached and Mr. McKittrick dissenting therefrom; that Mr. Young asked Mr. Ziemann to prepare the formal award since he was an attorney; that Mr. McKittrick said he would not sign the award. It was further stated that a tentative meeting was arranged for the following day to sign the award but that Mr. Young was unable to be there because of another business engagement; that Mr. Ziemann prepared and signed the award and delivered it by messenger to Mr. Young's office where it was signed, having been previously acknowledged by the notary in Mr. Ziemann's office. Plaintiff's contention is, apparently, that Rule 14 (heretofore set forth) required all the arbitrators to have been together at the time the award was signed. Rule 14 does not specifically so require. Mr. McKittrick had announced his refusal to sign the award and that he would dissent therefrom. There appears to be no reason why it was necessary that he be present when the other two arbitrators signed. It has been held that the arbitrators, having met in consultation at the time of their final decision of the case upon the merits, were not required to meet again for the mere purpose of signing the award. Campbell v. Inhabitants of Upton, 113 Mass. 67, 71; Robinson v. Bickley, 30 Pa. 384; Sturges, supra, § 219, p. 509.

Section 1287 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the award must be in writing and acknowledged or proved in "like manner as a deed for the conveyance of real estate." While the manner in which Mr. Young signed the award is not approved practice, plaintiff has not shown that it was prejudiced thereby.

In Williston v. City of Yuba City, 1 Cal. App.2d 166, 169, 170, 36 P.2d 445, 447, an acknowledgment was taken by an officer out of the presence of the grantor. The court held: "The deed of conveyance was not invalid between the parties thereto merely because it was not acknowledged by the grantors. The purpose of an acknowledgment to a deed is evidentiary in character and is required so as to entitle the instrument to be recorded or to render it competent evidence without further proof. 9 Cal.Jur. 113, § 18; Gordon v. City of San Diego, 108 Cal. 264, 41 P. 301; Knaugh v. Baender, 84 Cal.App. 142, 257 P. 606; section 1161, Civ.Code. The fact that the deed in this case was irregularly acknowledged out of the presence of the grantors is immaterial except for the purpose of determining whether the grantors intended to presently convey their title to the land therein described when the deed was handed to Mr. Weis for the purpose of delivering it to the grantee. There is sufficient evidence in the record to support the finding of the court to the effect that the deed was delivered by the grantors for the purpose of conveying title to the property without any condition or contingency attached thereto, and that the delivery of the deed was absolute." (See, also, 1 Cal.Jur.2d § 28, p. 500.)

[7] Rule 14 of the Standard Form of Arbitration provides that the award shall be delivered simultaneously to each party. Mr. Young's affidavit shows that shortly before 4 p. m. on October 2nd, he received the award which had been signed and acknowledged by Mr. Ziemann; that shortly thereafter he received a phone call from plaintiff's attorneys and that he had his secretary dictate the award to the attorneys' secretary; that thereafter he called defendant's attorney and announced that the award had been signed by him and Mr. Ziemann; that thereafter a copy of the award was delivered to Mr. McKittrick and the original mailed to defendant's attorney. It appears, therefore, that each party was notified at the earliest possible opportunity and as nearly simultaneously as could be expected. Rule 14 was substantially complied with.

[8] It is next contended that Mr. Young was guilty of misconduct in refusing Mr. McKittrick's motion to reopen for the purpose of producing additional evidence. Rule 11 of the Standard Form provides that "The hearing may be reopened at any time before the award is required to be made at the discretion of the arbitrators or upon the request of a party for good cause shown." After Mr. Young had disclosed his tentative opinion, Mr. McKittrick asked for a continuance until the next day to give him an opportunity to consult with "his people." At the time set for the continuance, he moved to reopen. He made no offer of proof by affidavit. Rule 11 leaves the matter of reopening to the discretion of the arbitrators, or a majority thereof, and plaintiff has not shown what competent and material evidence was excluded by reason of the denial of its motion, Moore v. Griffith, 51 Cal.App.2d 386-389, 124 P.2d 900, or that

Mr. Young and Mr. Ziemann were guilty of an abuse of discretion.

[9,10] Plaintiff contends that the decision is arbitrary, harsh and inequitable; that it is contrary to law; and that it is not co-extensive with the issues submitted. The merits of the controversy between the parties are not subject to judicial review. Pacific Vegetable Oil Corp. v. C. S. T., Ltd., 29 Cal.2d 228, 233, 174 P.2d 441; Kerr v. Nelson, 7 Cal.2d 85, 59 P.2d 821; Loving & Evans v. Blick, 33 Cal.2d 603, 204 P.2d 23; 5 Cal.Jur.2d § 52, p. 120.

It was held in Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 165, 260 P.2d 156, 160, that "The opinion and award of the arbitrator are the sole guide to the evidentiary facts upon these appeals. The court is not called upon to review the evidence produced before the arbitrator, and such is not included in the record on appeal. The record consists of the opinion and award of the arbitrator, of the pleadings in the various court actions, and the proceedings upon confirmation of the award."

The "Opinion of the Chairman, Board of Arbitration" sets forth the issues and result as follows: "Griffith Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as the Contractor, entered into an agreement with San Diego College for Women, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as the Owner, on July , 1950, whereby the Contractor agreed to furnish labor and materials for the purpose of constructing a College for Women in the City of San Diego. Under the agreement work was to begin on August 1, 1950, and the construction was to be substantially completed by September 1, 1951. The Contractor agreed to perform its services for the cost of the work and materials furnished, plus a 3 per cent fee, the total price not to exceed $2,995,000. The project was actually not completed until October of 1952, about 14 months beyond the contractual termination date, and the Contractor's records indicate that the cost for labor and materials exceeded the contract price, plus authorized extras, in the sum of $152,239.58. In this proceeding the Contractor alleges that the Owner's delay in furnishing detailed drawings was the sole cause for the over-all delay in completing the job, and resulted in damage to the Contractor in the amount expended in excess of the contract price, plus profit, in the sum of $108,190.37, or total damages in the sum of $260,429.95.

"The evidence discloses that the owner requested several contractors to bid on the job and that Griffith Company submitted the lowest bid. However, the total amount of the Griffith bid exceeded the Owner's budget, and the Owner through its Architect, conferred with Griffith Company for the purpose of eliminating certain items in order to reduce the total cost of the job. After a figure had been reached, which was agreeable to the Owner, the Architect prepared an addendum to the specifications setting forth the changes that were to be made. On page 1 of addendum 3, it is provided that:

"Original plans will be revised to incorporate the above changes.' Both the Owner and the Contractor were fearful that certain materials might not be available unless the job was begun immediately because of the Korean war which had just begun. Consequently, the Contractor agreed to go ahead and start the work without waiting for final working drawings incorporating the changes that were made with the understanding that the drawings would be provided during the progress of the work. The Owner offered evidence to prove that the Architect had informed the Contractor that the working drawings would not be completed for six months. This, the Contractor denies. Article 3 of the contract provides that:

"The Architect shall furnish with reasonable promptness, additional instructions, by means of drawings or otherwise, necessary for the proper execution of the work.'

"Actual construction on the job site began on August 8, 1950. A carpenters' strike prevented the Contractor from obtaining skilled carpenters until September 7, 1950. The Contractor introduced evidence to prove that because of delays in obtaining plans the work progressed very slowly during the first four months of the building operation. Consequently, on December 12, 1950, the Contractor wrote to the Architect complaining of these delays and, among other things, stated:

"Lack of plans and information will require us to take more than three months to do work which normally should require three weeks.

"* * * This type of operation is expensive and accomplishes little. * * *

"At the present time lack of plans and information prevents us from starting any other units. * * *

"In this letter the Contractor requested a conference with the Owner, and such a conference was subsequently held. The subject matter of that conference is in dispute but, thereafter, and on December 18, 1950, the Architect wrote to the Contractor and stated that he believed that the conference had answered the problems raised in the letter of December 12. On December 19, 1950, the Owner granted the Contractor a three months' extension of time within which to complete the project. It should be noted no increase in contract price was demanded or received by the contractors at the time this Change Order was formalized.

"The Contractor's evidence indicates that the job was delayed throughout its entire life because of the Owner's failure to promptly furnish plans and information necessary to the Contractor. Some 52 Change Orders were executed, but these are not included in the Contractor's claim since prices were adjusted at the time each Change Order was executed. No evidence was introduced indicating the Contractors requested time extensions by reason of the changes, with the exception of Change Order No. 3 extending the contract time to December 1, 1951. No evidence was introduced indicating the Contractors were not satisfied with the various Change Order monetary increases. No evidence was introduced indicating the Contractors requested a Change Order for the delays caused by the late delivery of plans and details during the construction period of the contract.

"The Owner has introduced evidence to prove that many other factors, such as labor disputes, material shortages, contractor delays, etc., contributed to the over-all delay of the job. The Chairman of the Board is of the opinion that all of these factors contributed in some degree to delay the job.

"It is the Chairman of the Boards conclusion that the Contractor may not recover because, First, it did not comply with the provisions in the contract pertaining to the filing of claims, and, Second, he is unable to ascertain what proportion of the costs, over and above the contract price, is attributable to the Owner's neglect, and what proportion is attributable to other factors.

"First, he decides that Article 16 of the contract has no application to these proceedings. That article is limited to claims for extra costs caused by positive instructions, not by the failure to give instructions. Article 31 of the contract does apply. It provides that either party shall be reimbursed for damages caused by the "'wrongful act or neglect of the other party, or of anyone employed by him, "'Claims under this clause shall be made in writing to the party liable within a reasonable time at the first observance of such damage, and not later than the time of final payment.

"The letter of December 12, 1950, does indicate dissatisfaction with the manner in which plans were furnished. The letter also indicates that 'this type of operation is expensive and accomplishes little.' But the letter does not specifically register a claim. It requests a conference. Immediately after the conference a three month extension of time was granted, with no increase in contract price, and at least to some degree, this extension of time was predicated upon the carpenters' strike over which the Owner, of course, had no control. Thereafter, no further written notice was given by the Contractor either to the Architect or to the Owner directly. There is evidence to indicate that many oral complaints were made, but it is not unusual in a large construction operation for both the Architect and the Contractor to orally complain to one another about the progress of some of the work. In the opinion of the Chairman of the Board such oral complaints would not put the Owner on notice of the fact that his actions were causing excessive costs which would result in the assessment of damages against him. The purpose of Article 31 is to give the Owner notice so that he may change his course of conduct if, in fact, that course of conduct will result in additional costs. I believe that the Owner never had this opportunity in this case.

"Moreover, the Contractor agreed to start the operation without the customary working drawings usually available at the outset of a job. There was bound to be some delay because of this and, hence, the mere fact that the job was being delayed would not in itself give the Owner notice that his activities might be contributing to that delay.

"But irrespective of the question of liability, we could not award damages in this case because the Contractor has not established what proportion of the total damages were due to the failure of the Owner to promptly furnish plans. As I understand the law, this Board is not empowered to arbitrarily assess damages. Article 1(g) of the contract provides that:

"The law of the place of the building shall govern the construction of this contract."

"Section 3300 of the California Civil Code provides that:

"The measure of damages for the breach of an obligation arising from contract * * * is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." (Emphasis supplied).

"Section 3301 provides:

"No damages can be recovered for a breach of contract which are not clearly ascertainable in both their nature and origin." (Emphasis supplied).

"In the case of Austin v. Roberts, 130 Cal.App. 328, 333, 20 P.2d 97, 99, the Court stated:

"Conceding that plaintiff suffered a loss of profits, there is no evidence showing what part of that loss was caused by the wrongful acts of any of the defendants and what part was caused by the sale of [his property]

* * *. The burden of making the proof rested on the plaintiff.' See also, J. J. Kelly Co. v. United States, 1947, 69 F.Supp. 117, 118, 107 Ct.Cl. 594.

"As a matter of fact Chairman of the Board concludes that the execution of 52 Change Orders caused some delay. We also conclude that certain labor disputes, material shortages, difficulties with suppliers, and contractor delays contributed to some extent in the over-all delay in completing the job. Since I was unable to ascertain what portion of the over-all delay is attributable to these various factors I am unable to determine the Contractor's damages, if any.

"The Chairman of the Board, therefore, recommends this Board decide in favor of the defendant, San Diego College For Women, and against the plaintiff, Griffith Company. Both parties shall pay their costs and Attorneys' fees." (Emphasis added.)

This opinion was signed by Mr. Young and concurred in by Mr. Ziemann. The award followed the recommendation of the opinion.

It is at once obvious from a reading of the chairman's opinion that it is not "arbitrary, harsh and inequitable" any more than any other decision is so to the losing party. The decision is argued to be contrary to law in that Mr. Young's opinion sets forth that he was unable to ascertain what proportion of the damages was attributable to defendant's fault and that he was therefore unable to determine the damages proximately caused thereby to plaintiff.

[11] In Sapp v. Barenfeld, supra, 34 Cal.2d 515, 523, 212 P.2d 233, 239, we held: "Arbitrators, unless specifically required to act in conformity with rules of law, may base their decision upon broad principles of justice and equity, and in doing so may expressly or impliedly reject a claim that a party might successfully have asserted in a judicial action. Gerdetz v. Central Oregon Irr. Co., 83 Or. 576, 580, 163 P. 980; Everett v. Brown, 120 Misc. 349, 198 N.Y.S. 462, 465; Koepke v. E. Liethen Grain Co., 205 Wis. 75, 80, 236 N.W. 544. The claim must be expressly raised at some time before the award." The arbitrators in the instant case were not specifically required to act in conformity with other than the "prevailing arbitration law." In Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., supra, 119 Cal. App.2d 156, 189, 260 P.2d 156, 174, it was held: "Even if the arbitrator decided this point incorrectly, he did decide it. The issue was admitted properly before him. Right or wrong the parties have contracted that such a decision should be conclusive. At most, it is an error of law, not reviewable by the courts." It appears, however, from Allen v. Gardner, 126 Cal.App.2d 335, 340, 272 P.2d 99, 102, that the chairman did not commit an error of law. It was there said: "Uncertainty as to the fact of damage, that is, as to the nature, existence or cause of the damage, is fatal." (Emphasis added.) The chairman's opinion specifically sets forth the finding that plaintiff had not established what proportion of the total damages were due to the fault of the defendant. It appears therefore that the nature, existence or cause of the damage was uncertain.

[12] Plaintiff's contention that the award was not co-extensive with the issues submitted is also without merit. It appears from the record (Mr. Young's affidavit of November 6, 1953) "That said board of arbitrators heard and determined (adversely to defendant) objections to the statement of issues presented by plaintiff on May 20, 1953, and heard and considered plaintiff's evidence in said matter on June 15th, June 22nd, June 23rd and June 24th, and defendant's evidence on July 13th, July 14th, July 15th and July 16th. * * *" Plaintiff's contention appears to be an attempt to re-argue the issues and the evidence. As we have heretofore stated, the merits of the controversy between the parties are not subject to judicial review. Pacific Vegetable Oil Corp. v. C. S. T., Ltd., supra, 29 Cal.2d 228, 233, 174 P.2d 441. "It must be presumed 'That all matters within * * * a submission to arbitration were laid before the arbitrators and passed upon by them". § 1963, subd. 18, Code Civ.Proc." Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., supra, 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 192, 260 P.2d 156, 175. Further, "Under the 1927 statute, it is well settled that both before the superior and appellate courts every intendment of validity must be given the award and that the burden is upon the one claiming error to support his contention. Popcorn Equipment Co. v. Page, 92 Cal.App.2d 448, 207 P.2d 647." Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., supra, 119 Cal.App.2d at page 185, 260 P.2d at page 171.

[13] There is no merit to plaintiff's contention that the award was not that of the arbitration panel but of Mr. Ziemann. It is true that Mr. Ziemann, being an attorney, prepared the formal award but that award merely followed the opinion prepared by Mr. Young in which Mr. Ziemann concurred. It follows, therefore, that the award was that of a majority of the board of arbitration.

Other contentions made by plaintiff do not merit discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, J., concurs in the judgment.

EDMONDS, Justice (dissenting).

To me, the record in this case compels the conclusion that the arbitration proceeding was not the full and fair and unbiased hearing to which the parties were entitled under the fundamental principles of fair trial. To hold that one arbitrator, unknown to his associates, may seek the advice of an attorney and then use the opinion prepared by that attorney as the award of the arbitrators violates every principle of fair trial. If arbitration is to have the place in the administration of justice to which it is entitled, it must be conducted in accordance with the same rules of law which apply to judicial proceedings, insofar as the integrity of decision is concerned.

The identity of the consulting attorney has never been disclosed. For all that appears, he may have been a partisan who acted with entirely improper motives. Secret consultation by a judge with a lawyer who prepared his opinion for him would meet with the unqualified disapproval of bench and bar. I see no difference between that situation and the one shown in this case.

For these reasons and those stated by Mr. Justice Ashburn in the opinion upon which the District Court of Appeal set aside the award, 280 P.2d 203, I would make the same order.

v.

SOCIAL WELFARE DEPARTMENT of the State OF CALIFORNIA, Respondent.
S. F. 19232.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Nov. 15, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 14, 1955.

Proceeding upon petitions for benefits under the Old Age Security Act. The Social Welfare Board denied benefits, and petitioners sought writ of mandamus to review Board's administrative order. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Albert C. Wollenberg, J., denied petition, and petitioners appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that petitioners, who possessed the age and residence requirements for benefits under the Old Age Security Act, who, as members of a religious society, gave all their worldly possessions to the society to promote its objective, and who received $16 to $18 per month in food, clothing, and medicine from society which was not obligated to so provide for them, were "needy persons" under the Act.

Judgment reversed.

Howard B. Crittenden, Jr., San Francisco, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court denying a petition for a writ of mandate to review an administrative order of the State Social Welfare Board.

Appellants, at all times here pertinent, have been and are members of a religious society named Christ's Church of the Golden Rule. The members of the church live together in a seminary or home owned by the church, located in the City and County of San Francisco, and share with each other everything they possess. In the petition it is alleged that they receive the necessities of life to the extent of an average of $17 per month from the religious society although the society is not obligated to so provide such necessities. Appellants were in residence at the seminary at the time they applied for Old Age Security benefits which were denied. (One of the original petitioners left the church and is now receiving benefits under the Old Age Security Act.) Petitioners then applied for aid to the boards of supervisors of the various counties from which they came, under the procedure set forth in the Welfare and Institutions Code, and from the denials thereof, each petitioner filed an appeal with the Social Welfare Board, Welf. & Inst. Code, § 2181.1. The board appointed a referee to hear the appeals. A hearing was had at which petitioners were represented by counsel. The referee submitted his findings to the board; the board denied the appeals. Petitioners then filed a petition for a writ of mandate in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, seeking a review of the matter both as to the law and the facts.

The basic question involved on this appeal is whether or not petitioners are "needy" persons within the provisions of the Old Age Security Act. It is conceded that they all possess the age and residence qualifications set forth in section 2160 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. Before discussing the question of the need of petitioners, however, several preliminary matters must be first disposed of.

[1,2] Petitioners argue that certain findings of the hearing officer were changed by the board without notice to them or an opportunity for them to be heard. They point to no specific finding which was changed. Petitioners contend the procedure outlined in section 11517(b, c) of the Government Code should have been followed; the board contends that the procedure set forth in sections 104.1, 104.2, 104.3, and 104.5 was the proper method. Preliminarily, it should be noted that section 11501 of the Government Code provides: "Extent to which procedure conducted pursuant to chapter: Agencies included. (a) The procedure of any agency shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of this chapter only as to those functions to which this chapter is made applicable by the statutes relating to the particular agency." (Emphasis in body of statute added.) As "included agencies" are set forth the Department of Social Welfare and the Social Welfare Board. It is our opinion that the board's contention that the section means it is to apply only when made applicable by the statutes relating to the particular agency involved is meritorious. In different sections of the Welfare and Institutions Code, the provisions of the Government Code are made directly applicable (see sections 1624, 1625, 2304, 2305, 2355, 2356, all of which relate to permits or licenses or revocation thereof, or supervision of life-care contracts). It appears then that the board is correct in its contention that sections 104.1 et seq. of the Welfare and Institutions Code contain the controlling procedure.

Section 104.1 provides in part that any applicant or recipient for aid who is dissatisfied with the action of the county board of supervisors "shall * * * upon filing a petition with the State Department of Social Welfare, have the right of appeal and shall be accorded an opportunity for a fair hearing. The department shall set such appeal for hearing before the State Social Welfare Board and shall give all parties concerned written notice of the time and place of such hearing." The applicant is to appear in person either with or without counsel of his choice; the board is to consider the appeal and either dismiss it or award aid in compliance with the terms of the code. Section 104.2 provides that if such an applicant feels aggrieved by any decision of the board, he may petition the superior court of the county of his residence for a "review of the entire proceedings in the matter, upon questions of law involved in the case. Such review, if granted, is a distinct and cumulative remedy. The State Social Welfare Board shall be the sole respondent in such proceedings." (Emphasis added.) Section 104.5(c) provides: "[Referee's report: Final decision.] If an appeal, hearing, or rehearing is not heard by the board, a report of the proceedings shall be prepared by the referee conducting it and the report, together with any data the party appealing may desire, shall be presented to the board for final decision. Only the board may make such final decision."

Under section 11517(b) and (c) of the Government Code, if the proposed decision of the hearing officer is not adopted by the agency, "The agency itself may decide the case upon the record, including the transcript, with or without taking additional evidence, or may refer the case to the same or another hearing officer to take additional evidence. * * * The agency itself shall decide no case provided for in this subdivision without affording the parties the opportunity to present either oral or written argument before the agency itself. If additional oral evidence is introduced before the agency itself no agency member may vote unless he heard the additional oral evidence."

[3] Petitioners contend that "unless he who hears decides", Morgan v. United States, 298 U.S. 468, 56 S.Ct. 906, 80 L.Ed. 1288, there has been a denial of due process of law. In Leeds v. Gray, 109 Cal.App.2d 874, 242 P.2d 48, the petitioner was a referee of the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board; charges were preferred against him. He had a hearing before a hearing officer at which no board member was present. The hearing officer made no findings, no decision or recommendation. The Personnel Board reviewed the transcript of the proceedings and made certain findings, after which he was ordered demoted. The court there said in holding there had been no denial of due process: "Petitioner, of course, was entitled to a fair and full hearing. The fact that a fact finding tribunal does not see or hear the witnesses does not in every instance constitute a denial of such hearing. For example, many court proceedings are determined upon affidavits. There the court neither sees nor hears the witnesses. A fair and full hearing is given where the fact finder fully reviews the record and an opportunity is given the parties to argue their contentions as to the credibility of the witnesses and the other matters involved in the proceeding. This was done in our case by briefs. It is true that no proposed findings or decision were submitted to the parties and no opportunity given to argue concerning them, but where the board itself is passing on the record, fully considers it and the arguments presented, on the merits, there is no requirement that the board permit further argument on its proposed findings and decision, and no logical reason therefor." 109 Cal.App.2d at pages 883, 884, 242 P.2d at page 54. See, California Shipbuilding Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 27 Cal.2d 536, 165 P.2d 669; Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593. It would appear that under the situation here present where petitioners were given a full opportunity to be heard before the hearing officer whose report was then reviewed by the board, there was no denial of procedural due process of law.

[4] Petitioners next argue that they should have been given a trial de novo in the superior court. In other words, it is contended that the trial court should have based its decision on the facts as well as the law. Petitioners rely upon Laisne v. California State Bd. of Optometry, 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457, and Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, for the proposition that in reviewing an order of a statewide administrative agency, the superior court must exercise its independent judgment on the law and the facts where constitutional rights are involved. The Drummey and Laisne cases stand for the rule that an "existing valuable privilege" may not be taken away by an administrative order without giving the person so deprived the opportunity of having the finality of such action passed up-by a court of law, 13 Cal.2d 75, 84, 87 P.2d 848, 853. Petitioners here were not possessed of a vested right, but the right to make application for old age benefits provided that they were able to comply with the statutory prerequisites therefor, Welf. & Inst. Code, § 2160 et seq. It would appear, therefore, that petitioners were not entitled to a trial de novo in the superior court.

Petitioners' major contention is that they are deprived of old age benefits by reason of their membership in Christ's Church of the Golden Rule and that such deprivation is a denial of freedom of religion and a denial of equal protection of the laws within the meaning of both the federal and state Constitutions.

The Social Welfare Board found that when petitioners joined the church they gave up all their worldly possessions to promote its objects; that they have performed duties imposed upon them as such members, and that petitioners received "full, complete, and adequate support from said" church; and "That to the extent that any of the appellants were in need within the meaning of the Old Age Security Law, they were so as a result of a continuing voluntary acceptance of lower standards of living in accordance with their adherence to the precepts of Christ's Church of the Golden Rule and their entrance into 'the religious apostolic society form of living.'" Finding VI is "That all or a major portion of any grant of Old Age Security made to the appellants would not be devoted to meeting their individual and personal needs as those needs are defined by the Welfare and Institutions Code and the Manual of Policies and Procedures of the State Department of Social Welfare, but would, on the contrary, be devoted systematically and continuously to the advancement of the objectives of Christ's Church of the Golden Rule." Finding VII is "That none of the appellants is or since January 20, 1948, has been under any so-called 'life care' contract whereby gifts or transfer of property were made to be used for the support, maintenance, or care of the donor thereof."

We said in County of Los Angeles v. La Fuente, 20 Cal.2d 870, 875, 129 P.2d 378, 381, that the "'need' of the applicant necessary to qualify for the benefits of the law is defined by the Legislature to be the absence of actual receipt of support by the applicant from responsible relatives and by the property limitations of the law." Let us then look to see how the law defines "need."

Section 2160, subdivisions (a), (b), (c), sets forth the age and citizenship and residence requirements which are not here involved or questioned. Section 2160(e) provides in part: "Persons who are inmates of a boarding home or other institution not supported in whole or in part by public funds shall be granted aid but no such aid shall be granted if such persons are cared for under a contract for a period of time exceeding one month; * * *." Subsection (f) provides that aid shall be granted to such an aged person "Who is not receiving adequate support from a husband or wife, or child able and responsible under the laws of this State to furnish such support; free board and lodging supplied to an applicant, because of his necessity, by a friend or relative who is not responsible for his support, shall not be grounds for refusing aid"; subsection (g) provides that aid shall be granted to such an aged person "Who has not made any voluntary assignment or transfer of property for the purpose of qualifying for such aid." (Emphasis added.) Section 2160.5 provides: "Notwithstanding any provision of subdivision (e) of Section 2160 to the contrary, aid shall be granted to any person who is an inmate of a home or institution maintained by any fraternal, benevolent, or other nonprofit organization if the organization has not been paid for the life care and maintenance of the person through assessment of or dues of said inmate or otherwise, whether or not the person has agreed or promised to pay for his maintenance in the event that he receives any pension, bequest, devise, or other inheritance.

"The county from which such inmate came to such home shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered the residence of such inmate to grant such aid."

Sections 2163 et seq. set forth the amount of personal property which may be owned by persons otherwise eligible for aid and the valuation of real property which if owned would render such persons ineligible for aid. Section 2010 provides that "No question, inquiry, or recommendation under the authority of this chapter or the rules of the State Department of Social Welfare shall relate to the political or religious opinions or affiliations of any person, and no grant or denial of aid under this chapter shall be in any manner affected or influenced by such opinions or affiliations." A specific finding was made to the effect that this section had not been violated by county or state officials.

Section 2020 provides that "The amount of aid to which any applicant shall be entitled shall be, when added to the income (including the value of currently used resources, but excepting casual income and inconsequential resources) of the applicant from all other sources, seventy-five dollars ($75) per month. If, however, in any case it is found the actual need of an applicant exceeds seventy-five dollars ($75) per month, such applicant shall be entitled to receive aid in an amount, not to exceed seventy-five dollars ($75) per month, which when added to his income (including the value of currently used resources, but excepting casual income and inconsequential resources) from all other sources, shall equal his actual need."

There is no finding that petitioners made any voluntary assignment or transfer of property for the purpose of qualifying for old age assistance, Welf. & Inst. Code, § 2160(g); there is no finding that petitioners are disqualified by reason of owning either personal or real property in excess of the statutory valuations. The finding that petitioners are receiving full, complete and adequate support from their church (if material) must be examined in the light of the record which shows that they each receive from $16 to $18 per month in food, clothing and medicine. This is not denied by the board. The finding that any grant of old age security benefits would not be devoted to the personal needs of the applicants but to the work of the church (if material) does not appear to be supported by the record: many testified that they needed clothing, or medicine, or proper food, or special diets, or dentures, hearing aids, etc. which they were not receiving from the church. We find nothing in the record, nor does the board point to any provision in the Welfare and Institutions Code which places any limitation on the use for which, or to which, money received under the act must be put. As a matter of fact, the board's Manual of Policies and Procedures, section A 140, provides: "No provision of the O. A. S. Law requires or purports to require that income received by any person, whether a recipient of aid or one who has been a recipient of aid, shall be expended by that person for particular purposes or in particular amounts." If the applicants are otherwise qualified for benefits under the act, it would appear completely immaterial and irrelevant for what the money is spent. If they choose to turn it over to a religious institution in return for which they receive care at a lower level than if all the money were spent for food, clothing and the like, is the board to place a monetary value on the satisfaction such applicants may receive in having their spiritual needs fulfilled? If an applicant receives $75 per month and gives $50 of it each month to the Catholic or any protestant church, is the aid to cease because considered unnecessary? We would think not.

[5] Petitioners are under no contract for life care with the Church of the Golden Rule; they are free to leave the church whenever they desire. The seminary in which they live is not supported in whole or in part with public funds. It appears to us that as a matter of law, petitioners come directly within the provisions of section 2160.5 which provides that aid shall be granted to any person who is an inmate of a home or institution maintained by any benevolent "or other non-profit organization if the organization has not been paid for the life care and maintenance of the person through assessment of or dues of said inmate or otherwise, whether or not the person has agreed or promised to pay for his maintenance in the event that he receives any pension, bequest, devise, or other inheritance." In addition, they are not receiving assistance from any legally responsible relative, Welf. & Inst. Code, § 2160(f).

The board makes much of the fact that when the church corporation was organized in 1944 as a nonprofit organization, all members turned over all their property to the corporation which purchased various business organizations therewith in which all members able to work were required to do so. This corporation went through bankruptcy in 1945. In 1946, some of the original members, including petitioners, organized a "nonincorporated association" and had released to themselves certain of the commercial projects which had been operated by the bankrupt corporation. It is apparently the board's position that the income from the various enterprises is sufficient to support, adequately, the petitioners. A complete answer to this contention is that whether or not $16 or $18 per month is adequate support, the church is not obligated to provide it. The code, Welf. & Inst. Code, § 2160, provides that "Aid shall be granted under this chapter to any person * * * (f) Who is not receiving adequate support from a husband or wife, or child able and responsible under the laws of this State to furnish such support; free board and lodging supplied to an applicant, because of his necessity, by a friend or relative who is not responsible for his support, shall not be ground for refusing aid." (Emphasis added.) As we said in the La Fuente case, 20 Cal.2d 870, 875, 129 P.2d 378, 381, " * * * the 'need' of the applicant necessary to qualify for the benefits of the law is defined by the Legislature to be the absence of actual receipt of support by the applicant from responsible relatives and by the property limitations of the law." We also said, 20 Cal.2d at page 876, 129 P.2d at page 381, "Both the letter and the spirit of the Old Age Security Law clearly show that only the receipt of support from responsible relatives should render the applicant ineligible for benefits under it."

[6] The board argues that if old age benefits are paid to these petitioners it would be, in fact, a grant of aid to a religious sect and unconstitutional as a gift of public funds. We held in County of Los Angeles v. La Fuente, supra, 20 Cal.2d 870, 876, 877, 129 P.2d 378, that the care and relief of aged persons who are in need is a special matter of state concern and that the enactment of the Old Age Security Law, based upon a broad social policy, did not constitute a gift of public money within the constitutional prohibition.

[7] The board argues that the question of "need" is one of fact for the board and cites Newbold v. Social Welfare Board, 76 Cal.App.2d 844, 174 P.2d 482, and Kelley v. State Board of Social Welfare, 82 Cal.App.2d 627, 186 P.2d 429, in support of the statement. With this statement there can be no argument. However, the Legislature has seen fit to set the standard of need and the board must act in accordance with the statutory definition. We have heretofore discussed the statutory requirements to be met by persons applying for old age assistance and it appears to us that petitioners, so far as can be ascertained, meet those requirements.

It is our opinion that the findings that petitioners are receiving adequate support from Christ's Church of the Golden Rule and that they are in need because of their "voluntary acceptance of the lower standards of living" prescribed by the church, as well as the finding that all, or a major portion, of any aid received would be devoted to the church are immaterial when considered in the light of the applicable statutes as heretofore set forth and discussed.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

The majority opinion concedes, as it must, that "the question of 'need' is one of fact for the board [Social Welfare]" but avoids the board's finding by holding that "the Legislature has seen fit to set the standard of need" and that petitioners as a matter of law come within the prescribed standard. Certainly I agree that the Legislature has, within limits, set the standard, but in respect to the fact question as to whether the petitioners, upon the record, as a matter of law fall within that standard, I agree with the Social Welfare Board and with the superior court rather than with the majority. In my view the majority opinion unduly extends the concept of "need" which is basic to the philosophy and required by the letter of the statutes governing the granting of old age security. The opinion relies, among other things, upon isolated statements from County of Los Angeles v. La Fuente (1942), 20 Cal. 2d 870, 129 P.2d 378, a case which dealt with a situation materially different from that presented here, and which is herein-after discussed.

The law which provides for the payment of aid by the state to the aged has since its inception been based upon the concept of need. It was provided by Stats.1929, ch. 530, p. 914, § 1, as it is now provided by section 2001 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, that residents of the state are entitled to aid in old age "if in need." The petitioners here, according to the findings of the State Social Welfare Board, and of the superior court, are not in need. In accord with their beliefs they have transferred all their property to Christ's Church of the Golden Rule. They all perform tasks, according to their abilities, at the theological seminary. In accord with the canon law of the church, "As the material needs of the various persons and their families and dependents must of necessity be met to permit these persons to dedicate their work, services, and studies to carry out the religious purposes of the ecclesiastical society, the religious apostolic society form of living is selected as the means to accomplish these results * * *" and "The ecclesiastical Church Government shall determine how much is necessary for the common community treasury to carry out the religious purposes through the apostolic society form of living." The petitioners subscribe to these tenets.

The board has further found that petitioners "are now receiving, full, complete, and adequate support including incidental expenses from said Christ's Church of the Golden Rule, of which they are members, through the Elected Delegates Committee, a temporal agency of said Christ's Church of the Golden Rule in accordance with their needs as they and the said Christ's Church determined them to exist"; "That to the extent that any of the appellants were in need within the meaning of the Old Age Security Law, they were so as a result of a continuing voluntary acceptance of lower standards of living in accordance with their adherence to the precepts of Christ's Church of the Golden Rule and their entrance into 'the religious apostolic society form of living'"; and "That all or a major portion of any grant of Old Age Security made to the appellants would not be devoted to meeting their individual and personal needs as those needs are defined by the Welfare and Institutions Code and the Manual of Policies and Procedures of the State Department of Social Welfare, but would, on the contrary, be devoted systematically and continuously to the advancement of the objectives of Christ's Church of the Golden Rule."

It thus appears that although petitioners do not have enforceable, temporal contracts for receipt of their material needs, they do in fact, in accord with the canon law, which they continue to espouse, receive such needs.

In County of Los Angeles v. La Fuente (1942), supra, 20 Cal.2d 870, 129 P.2d 378, this court affirmed a judgment for plaintiff county for reimbursement for old age benefits furnished to the parents of defendant. It was shown that defendant was financially able to contribute to the support of her parents. The parents had refused the child's offer to support them in her home. It was held (at page 875 of 20 Cal.2d at page 381 of 129 P.2d) that this refusal of support in the home did not render the parents ineligible for old age assistance.

In the La Fuente case it is said (as stated, in 289 P.2d 491, the majority opinion) that "the 'need' of the applicant necessary to qualify for the benefits of the law is defined by the Legislature to be the absence of actual receipt of support by the applicant from responsible relatives [those who, according to law, owe a duty of support] and by the property limitations of the law" (at page 875 of 20 Cal.2d, at page 381 of 129 P.2d). But this statement should be considered in the context in which it was made; i.e., in a case where this court was considering, in effect, whether aged parents should be deprived of old age assistance because they preferred to maintain their own home with such aid rather than to be forced to accept the offer of an inharmonious residence with their child. If the quoted statement from the La Fuente case is read literally out of context, then every aged person in the state who has no relatives liable for his support, and whose property is less than that stated in sections 2163 and 2164 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, is entitled to old age assistance regardless of his income. Such is not the law. (See Welf. & Inst. Code, § 2020: "The amount of aid to which any applicant shall be entitled shall be, when added to the income (including the value of currently used resources, but excepting casual income and inconsequential resources) of the applicant from all other sources, eighty-five dollars ($85) per month. If, however, in any case it is found the actual need of an appellant exceeds eighty-five dollars ($85) per month, such applicant shall be entitled to receive aid in an amount, not to exceed eighty-five dollars ($85) per month, which when added to his income (including the value of currently used resources, but excepting casual income and inconsequential resources) from all other sources, shall equal his actual need.") Thus "actual need" and "income * * * from all other sources" are elements integral to the legislative plan; being integral to the plan, it seems essential that the agency charged with its administration shall have power within the scope of the plan to make the practical factual determinations incidental to its application.

Some argument has been advanced to the effect that petitioners are being deprived of a right to dispose of their state aid as they may see fit. There is such holding either by the administrative agency or the superior court. The argument begs the question by assuming that petitioners are entitled as a matter of law to receive the aid. Until and unless they become entitled to receive it, they should not be heard to argue a right to dispose of it. We therefore need not consider an opposing argument suggesting the profits which might be garnered by a smooth-talking promoter who under the guise of religious, political or social theme could sell old persons on a plan of contributing $85 a month to the "Master," together with such personal services as they were able to render, all for a roof and keep on frugal scale.

These petitioners have elected to live modestly in their communal, religious fashion; they are enjoying the material, social and spiritual compensations which they find therein. In my view, the finding of the board, in substance, made on substantial evidence, that they have voluntarily accepted such a standard and circumstances of living as fulfilling their needs, and hence are not persons in need, is not, as held in the majority opinion 289 P.2d 491, immaterial, but is vital and determinative. I would affirm the judgment.

Nov. 7, 1955.

Action for breach of contract. The Superior Court, Riverside County, Russell S. Waite, J., entered judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that where total cost for each item in contract and total price for entire work had been stricken, and no substitutions were made, although the unit prices of the various items were altered and new prices substituted, evidence supported findings that defendant had paid plaintiff in full for work done by him under contract, and that it had been terminated by mutual agreement.

2. Evidence $\S$ 458, 461(1), 462

Where total cost for each item and the total price for the entire work had been stricken from written contract and no substitution had been made, although the unit prices for the various items were altered, and new prices substituted, instrument contained sufficient uncertainty and ambiguity to justify the admission of oral evidence as to the circumstances under which the changes were made, and intent and purpose of the parties with respect to the meaning of the agreement as finally approved. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. $\S$ 1856, 1860.

3. Contracts $\S$ 322(3), 350(3)

In action for breach of contract where total cost for each item in contract and total price for entire work had been stricken, and no substitutions were made, although the unit prices of the various items were altered and new prices substituted, evidence supported findings that defendant had paid plaintiff in full for all work done by him under contract, and that it had been terminated by mutual agreement.

Willard H. Winder, Riverside, for appellant.

S. Thomas Bucciarelli, Riverside, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages. The defendants owned 60 lots of a subdivision containing 160 lots, and planned to build certain houses and eventually to build houses on the remainder of the tract. They entered into some sort of a contract with the plaintiff and his partner for certain sewer work on part or all of this tract. They built houses on the 60 lots and the plaintiff and his partner did a certain amount of sewer work, for which they were paid in full. The plaintiff brought this action claiming that the defendants had prevented him from performing the remainder of the contract, and that he had been damaged in the sum of $3000. The plaintiff's partner refused to join him in the action.

The complaint alleged that the parties entered into a written contract on April 6, 1950, by the terms of which it was agreed that the plaintiff was to make certain sewer improvements in Magnolia Manor consisting of laying 6285 linear feet of 8" sewer pipe at $1.85 per lineal foot; installing 16 manholes at $150 each; and laying 7,200 linear feet of 4" pipe for house connections at $1.30 per foot; with an additional $15 for each sewer line which was obstructed by a curb and gutter. It was further alleged that the plaintiff performed one-half of this work, was ready, willing and able to perform the remainder, but was prevented by the defendants from so doing. The written contract attached to the complaint was in the form of a "bid" dated April 6, 1950, addressed to the defendants, signed by the plaintiff and approved by one of the defendants. So far as material here, this bid refers to "Magnolia Manor Sewer Improvements" and states "I submit for your approval the price, as quoted below for the above mentioned improvements." It then lists as Item 1, 6285 lin. ft. of 8" sewer pipe at $2.25 per lin. ft., $14,421.25; as Item 2, 16 manholes $160 each, $2560; as Item 3, 7200 lin. ft. of 4" house connections at $1.45 per lin. ft., $10,440: total price $27,141.25. The figure $2.25 in the first item is struck out and $1.85 inserted. The figure $160 in the second item is struck out and $150 inserted. The figure $1.45 in the third item is struck out and $1.30 is inserted. All of these changes are initialed by the plaintiff. The three totals for each item and the total price of $27,141.25 are all struck out, with nothing inserted in lieu thereof.

The answer admitted that the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiff on or about April 6, 1950, but alleged that by the terms thereof it was agreed that the plaintiff was to do so much of the sewer work on this subdivision as the defendants should from time to time request him to do; that such work was to consist of installing not more than 6285 lineal feet of sewer lines at a price of $1.85 per linear foot, not more than 7200 feet of 4" pipe for housing connections at a price of $1.30 per linear foot, and not more than 16 manholes at a price of $150; that it was further agreed that said agreement could be terminated at any time, with the plaintiff being paid at the agreed rates for all work done up to that time; that the plaintiff installed 2950 lineal feet of 8" sewer line, 3854 lineal feet of house connections, and ten manholes, for which he had been fully paid at the rates provided in the agreement; that the defendants then notified the plaintiff that they did not desire him to do any more of said work; and that the contract was then terminated, to which termination the plaintiff agreed.

The court found that all of the allegations of the defendants' answer are true; that the defendants had paid the plaintiff in full for all work done by him under the contract; that the contract was terminated by mutual agreement; that all sums due the plaintiff under the contract have been paid to him; and that the plaintiff has suffered no damages whatever. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment which followed.

The evidence received, if admissible, amply sustains all of the court's findings. The only claim to the contrary is with respect to the finding that the contract was terminated by mutual agreement. While there was no direct evidence that the appellant agreed to such a termination after his work was done, the oral evidence disclosed that this was a part of the original agreement as made by the parties. Moreover, that finding is immaterial in view of the other findings made.

The appellant contends that the intention of the parties must be gathered from the written contract itself; that the written contract sued on is clear and unambiguous, and provides on its face for the installation of certain amounts of material at named prices, the amount due being merely a matter of computation; that under section 1625 of the Civil Code oral testimony could not be received to change the written terms of that contract; that the oral testimony supporting the findings was inadmissible; and that it follows that there is no evidence to support the findings and judgment.

[1,2] Section 1625 of the Civil Code must be considered in connection with sections 1856 and 1860 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Greathouse v. Daleno, 57

Cal.App. 187, 206 P. 1019. Under the latter sections, oral evidence may be received in many cases in order to show the surrounding circumstances, to the end that the trial judge may be in a position to establish the intention of the parties where that intention does not fully and clearly appear on the face of the instrument. Not only did this bid fail to set out a number of the matters which would be required in a complete contract, but it showed on its face that it had been changed by striking out certain things, only a part of which were replaced. While it purported to be submitted as a bid for "the price" of certain improvements, and originally gave a total price, the alterations made disclosed a pattern which might well indicate a contrary intention. The total cost for each item and the total price for the entire work were stricken, and no substitutions therefor were made, although the unit prices of the various items were altered, and new prices substituted. Evidence as to the circumstances and understanding of the parties in connection with these changes, as to why they were made and as to what was intended thereby, was essential in order that the intention of the parties and the meaning of the bid, as approved, could be determined. On the face of the instrument sufficient uncertainty and ambiguity existed to justify the admission of oral evidence as to the circumstances under which these changes were made, and the intent and purpose of the parties with respect to the meaning of the agreement as finally approved. Parnell v. Stanfield, 135 Cal.App.2d 804, 288 P.2d 118.

The appellant testified that when he delivered his bid to the respondents on or about April 6, 1950, he was told that they did not have the final profile of the sewers yet; that he went back a couple of days later and they then had the final profile; that "So we rechecked the job and changed the price, and put the lineal foot price on it, and I initialed it, each one"; and that Mr. Shidler then signed it. He also testified that his partner was not present when the bid was signed.

[3] The testimony of the respondents was to the effect that the appellant and his partner were both present when the bid was presented, and that the changes were made at that time, before the bid was approved; that it was known to all parties that the respondents did not own all of the tract and intended to develop 60 lots only, with the hope of developing more later; that the bid was accepted on a "unit price basis"; that the bid as originally submitted covered the work on the entire 160 lots; and that the totals of the various figures were not changed because it could not be known at that time how much work would be required. The appellant's partner testified that he and the appellant entered into the agreement with the respondents with respect to this work; that he was present when the bid was presented to the respondents; that when the bid was presented there was a discussion with respect to the unit prices; that as a result of the discussion the unit prices were changed; that those changes were initialed by the appellant; that the total figures were crossed out; that "There was no use changing totals of figures because Mr. Shidler at that time didn't know how many houses he was going to build so we couldn't estimate how much work was to be done so we bid on a unit price basis"; that the understanding was that the agreement could be terminated at any time providing he and his partner were paid for the work they had already done; and that he later told his partner that he could see no basis for a suit "because all that work was based on a unit price bid." There was no evidence that the respondents built any houses other than those on the 60 lots which they originally owned. The evidence supports the court's findings with respect to the terms of the agreement that was actually made.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff,

v.

Fred BATES, Defendant.

Cr. 5086.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 7, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 7, 1955.

Proceeding on a petition for writ of error coram nobis. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that coram nobis was not available since the errors complained of were all correctible on appeal or motion for new trial.

Petition denied.

1. Criminal Law §997(2, 6)

Writ of error coram nobis issues to correct error of fact existing at time of trial but unknown to trial court through no fault of petitioner and which fact, had it been known, would have resulted in different judgment or would have prevented rendition of challenged judgment; but writ does not issue to correct error of law or to redress irregularity occurring at trial that could be corrected on motion for new trial or by appeal.

2. Criminal Law §997(4, 5)

Coram nobis could not be availed of to challenge sufficiency of evidence to establish guilt, to challenge adequacy of representation at trial, or to charge prejudicial misconduct on part of trial judge and deputy district attorney.

3. Criminal Law §997(6)

The writ of error coram nobis is not a catch-all by which those convicted may litigate and relitigate propriety of their convictions ad infinitum, but serves limited useful purpose of correcting errors of fact which cannot be corrected in any other manner.

4. Criminal Law §997(2)

The writ of error coram nobis is not available where other and adequate remedies exist.

No appearance for plaintiff.

Fred Bates, in pro. per.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant filed this petition for a Writ of Error Coram Nobis in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Because the judgment rendered herein had been affirmed by this court, People v. Bates, 126 Cal.App.2d 144, 271 P.2d 963, the petition was transmitted to this court for consideration. Penal Code, § 1265.

After trial before a Judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, defendant was convicted of two counts of first degree robbery. He admitted a prior conviction of the crime of grand larceny for which he served a term of imprisonment in the penitentiary of the state of Virginia. After commission of the crimes charged against him in California, he went to Louisiana and was there convicted of armed robbery. Upon his release from the Louisiana penitentiary he was returned to Los Angeles for trial. Following his conviction and denial of his motion for a new trial defendant was sentenced to State Prison.

From the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial he prosecuted an appeal to this court on the sole ground that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of guilt. On June 22, 1954, both the judgment and the order were affirmed People v. Bates, supra.

In his petition now before us, defendant again challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to establish his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. He makes the further claim that the attorney whom he employed to defend him at the trial (now deceased) "failed, neglected or refused to give proper and adequate representation and protection of your affiant's rights in that he failed and refused to ask for and secure a jury trial which your affiant demanded * * *".

It is also alleged that said attorney "failed, and neglected and refused to make the necessary motions and objections to protect his (affiant's) rights * * *"; that his attorney failed to obtain the presence of his witnesses to testify for defendant, and otherwise failed to properly represent the accused. He also charges prejudicial misconduct on the part of the trial judge and the deputy district attorney. Error is also claimed because of the allegation charging defendant with the aforesaid prior conviction (which he admitted at the trial).

[1-4] Defendant's petition is totally insufficient to warrant issuance of the writ prayed for. As was said in People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 771, 199 P.2d 375, 378:

"The writ of error coram nobis never issues to correct an error of law, nor to redress an irregularity occurring at the trial that could be corrected on motion for new trial or by appeal. It is issued to correct an error of fact, existing at the time of trial but unknown to the trial court through no fault of the petitioner, and which fact, had it been known, would have resulted in a different judgment, or would have prevented the rendition of the challenged judgment. [Citing cases.]

"These cases dispose of the contentions that the evidence produced on the hearing at the time of fixing the degree of the crime was insufficient to show first degree and, at most, showed manslaughter; that if his counsel had not advised him improperly to plead guilty he would never have been convicted of first degree murder; that by failing to move for a reduction of the degree of the crime, or by failing to appeal, his counsel caused him to be deprived of his liberty without due process. The choice of counsel was defendant's. It was at all times within the power of defendant to choose his own counsel or to appeal."

In the case now engaging our attention, defendant was represented at the trial by an attorney of his own choosing and again, on his appeal, was likewise so represented. One of the claimed errors set forth above, viz., insufficiency of the evidence, was determined adversely to the defendant on his appeal, and the other claimed errors could have been corrected on the appeal or on the motion for a new trial interposed by defendant. "The writ of error coram nobis is not a catch-all by which those convicted may litigate and re-litigate the propriety of their convictions ad infinitum. In the vast majority of cases a trial followed by a motion for a new trial and an appeal affords adequate protection to those accused of crime. The writ of error coram nobis serves a limited and useful purpose. It will be used to correct errors of fact which could not be corrected in any other manner. But it is well-settled law in this and in other states that where other and adequate remedies exist the writ is not available." People v. Martinez, supra, 88 Cal.App.2d at page 774, 199 P.2d at page 379.

The petition is denied.

Everett L. BURCH, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

John D. SLAMIN et al., Defendants and Respondents.
Civ. 16434.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California,
Nov. 15, 1955.

Action growing out of automobile collision. Defendants moved to dismiss the action upon the ground that it had not been brought to trial within the five year period prescribed by code provision. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Herman A. Van der Zee, J., entered an order granting the motion and dismissing the action. The plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where party did not show that attempted plea in abatement, on ground of pendency of action in other county involving same subject matter, was, in fact, a good plea, its filing did not preclude dismissal of action for failure to bring it to trial within five year period prescribed by code provision.

Order affirmed.

1. Abatement and Revival ⇨6

Where complaints are filed in two counties involving the same subject of action, the county in which summons is first served acquires jurisdiction of entire controversy, and the action in the other county is subject to abatement on the ground of pendency of other action.

2. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(2)

Where party did not show that attempted plea in abatement, on ground of pendency of action in another county involving same subject matter, was, in fact, a good plea, its filing did not preclude dismissal of action for failure to bring it to trial within five year period prescribed by code provision. Labor Code, § 3852; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583; Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 501 et seq.

3. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨71

Upon defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to bring action to trial within five year prescribed period, where plaintiff showed that defendants had filed an answer which included a plea in abatement on ground of pendency of another action in another county involving same subject matter, but record did not show that summons had been served first in the other action, plaintiff did not sustain burden of proving the impossibility or impracticability of bringing action to trial within period. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

4. Pleading ⇨106(2)

In action for damages arising out of automobile collision, where defendants filed an answer which included a plea in abatement on ground of pendency of another action in another county involving same subject matter, but plea did not allege that summons had been served first in the other action, plea in abatement was insufficient.

5. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨50

Where parties, who had filed answer which included a plea in abatement, on ground of pendency of action in another county involving same subject matter, later moved to dismiss action for failure to bring it to trial within five year period prescribed by code provision, parties were not estopped from taking advantage of delay parties themselves had induced by their plea in abatement. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 583, 597.

Delany, Fishgold, Freitas & Rowe, Matthew M. Fishgold, San Francisco, for appellant.

Daniel J. O'Brien, Jr., Daniel J. O'Brien, III, San Francisco, for respondents, Frank McNulty and L. M. McNulty, doing business as McNulty Lumber Company, and Andrew Conway, Mary M. Conway, Thomas A. Culligan, Jr., and Kathleen Culligan, doing business as Conway and Culligan.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an order granting a motion to dismiss his action on the ground that it had not been brought to trial within five years. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 583. The action grows out of a three-automobile collision in which the plaintiff and the defendants Slamin and McNulty was each the driver of one of the three cars. Plaintiff had with him as a passenger at the time of the collision one Belfield, an employee, who was killed. His wife was awarded $8,550 against plaintiff by the Industrial Accident Commission. The present action was brought in San Francisco by plaintiff under Labor Code, section 3852 to recover the amount of this award on his own behalf and additional damages for Belfield's widow.

Defendant Slamin did not appear in the action but defendant McNulty and other named defendants filed an answer which included an attempted plea in abatement based on a pending action in San Mateo County arising out of the same collision in which McNulty was plaintiff and Burch, Slamin et al. were defendants. Nothing further was done in the San Francisco action until the motion to dismiss was made.

In opposition to the motion to dismiss one of plaintiff's attorneys filed an affidavit reciting the fact and date of the bringing and the pendency of the San Mateo County action, the purported plea in abatement based thereon, and counsel's failure to set the cause for trial "relying upon the contention of the moving parties" and "waiting for the final disposition of the action pending in San Mateo County as alleged in the Answer filed by the defendants making the Motion to Dismiss." Affiant concluded: "That until the final disposition of the action pending in San Mateo County * * * it would be impracticable and futile to try this action * * * for the reason that said defendants contend that a disposition and determination of the action pending in San Mateo County would determine in substantial measure the issues pending in this action."

[1] Where complaints are filed in two counties involving the same subject of action the county in which summons is first served acquires jurisdiction of the entire controversy and the action in the other county is subject to abatement on the ground of another action pending. M. H. Golden Const. Co. v. Superior Court, 98 Cal.App.2d 811, 815-816, 221 P.2d 218; Myers v. Superior Court, 75 Cal.App.2d 925, 930, 172 P.2d 84; Gorman v. Superior Court, 23 Cal.App.2d 173, 72 P.2d 774.

[2] If the plea in abatement was in fact good, under the doctrine of Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 61, 168 P.2d 665, it appears that the failure to bring the action to trial during the time that the San Mateo County action was pending would be excused on the ground that it was impossible or impracticable to do so. In the Greyhound case the court held that where one party was in the military service during World War II, even though he had not in fact asked for a stay, the failure to bring the action to trial was excused where a stay, under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 501 et seq., would have been mandatory if applied for. So here, while the trial court in the San Francisco action did not enter an interlocutory judgment of abatement, if it was mandatory that it do so if the question had been brought to trial, the rule of the Greyhound case would appear to be applicable.

[3, 4] The burden was on the plaintiff in opposition to the motion to establish facts showing the impossibility or impracticability of bringing the action to trial. Appellant did not meet this burden. While he showed that the San Mateo County action was filed prior to the filing of his action in San Francisco he did not show, and it nowhere appears in the record, that summons was served in the San Mateo County action before it was served in the action in San Francisco. Indeed respondents' attempted plea in abatement was insufficient in the same particular and would have been subject to general demurrer on that ground.

Appellant states in his closing brief that summons was first served in the San Mateo County action, but there is nothing in the record to support this assertion. Even if it is the fact that fact was not proved in the trial court and the trial judge was required to act on the evidence produced before him. That evidence failed to show that the San Mateo County court first acquired jurisdiction and therefore failed to show that the San Francisco action was in fact subject to abatement.

[5] Appellant argues that in any event respondents should be estopped by their conduct to take advantage of the delay which they induced by their plea in abatement. It is impossible to find the elements of estoppel in this case, even if estoppel is available in this type of situation, which seems doubtful. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Moore & Harrah, 54 Cal.App.2d 37, 43-44, 128 P.2d 623. How could appellant be misled?

Appellant knew when summons was served on him in the San Mateo County action. He therefore knew whether or not the plea in abatement was good in fact. He had a ready remedy if it was not good under Code of Civil Procedure, section 597, by asking the court to try first and separately the issue raised by the plea in abatement.

There is nothing in the facts of this case to make the rule announced in Rose v.

Knapp, 38 Cal.2d 114, 237 P.2d 981, applicable. There the result in the main case depended on the outcome of another action pending on appeal. Here the court having jurisdiction could proceed to trial without regard to the other pending action.

The order is affirmed.

PACIFIC CONCRETE PRODUCTS CORPORATION, a California Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

John S. DIMMICK and E. T. Dimmick, co-partners doing business under the name and style of Adobe Engineers, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21133.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 9, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Claim and delivery action for possession of equipment for manufacture of concrete blocks, wherein plaintiff procured immediate possession of the equipment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., rendered judgment for defendants for agreed value of the equipment, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that finding that defendants had purchased the equipment from plaintiff and had paid for it and were entitled to possession of equipment when action was commenced was supported by substantial evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Replevin ⇨103(3)

Where plaintiff in claim and delivery action procured immediate possession of personal property and was unable to restore possession to defendants who were entitled to possession of such property at time of commencement of action, defendants were entitled to judgment for agreed value of such property. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 509 et seq., 667.

2. Replevin ⇨8(4)

The right of plaintiff to possession of personalty at time of commencement of action determines plaintiff's right to relief in claim and delivery action and plaintiff's right to possession at any other time is not in issue. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 509 et seq.

3. Replevin ⇨71(2)

In claim and delivery action for possession of personalty, evidence as to earlier contract with a stranger to action for conditional sale of the personalty to plaintiff was properly excluded. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 509 et seq.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Where it is contended on appeal that there was no evidence to sustain trial court's finding, all conflicts in the evidence must be resolved in favor of respondent and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged to uphold finding, if possible.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨989

Where verdict or judgment is attacked as unsupported by the evidence, the power of reviewing court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support conclusion reached by jury or trial judge.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨996

Where two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial court.

7. Replevin ⇨72

In claim and delivery action for possession of equipment for manufacture of concrete blocks, finding that defendants had bought and paid for equipment and were entitled to possession thereof when action was commenced was supported by substantial evidence as to oral agreement with vice-president and general manager of plaintiff corporation for purchase of equipment and payment therefor by delivering concrete blocks on general manager's order for account of plaintiff corporation. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 509 et seq.

8. Frauds, Statute of ⚡139(1)

Where oral agreement for exchange of personal property had been fully performed, failure of record to disclose written confirmation of oral agreement was immaterial.

9. Appeal and Error ⚡931(7)

On appeal from judgment for defendants in claim and delivery action for possession of equipment for manufacture of concrete blocks, in support of finding that defendants had bought and paid for equipment pursuant to oral agreement with vice-president and general manager of plaintiff corporation, reviewing court must assume that trial court found that equipment was not vital or essential to operation of business of plaintiff corporation and that sale of $2,752 worth of equipment was in the regular course of business of plaintiff corporation which was then buying on contract and presumably had possession of some $40,000 worth of equipment. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 509 et seq.

10. Corporations ⚡542(1)

Statute governing sale or other disposition by corporation of all or substantially all of its property had no application to sale of $2,752 worth of equipment for manufacture of concrete blocks in regular course of business by corporation which was buying on contract and presumably had possession of some $40,000 worth of equipment. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 3901.

11. Corporations ⚡405

Except as expressly restricted, general manager of a corporation has power to do in the name of corporation everything the corporation itself could do, and power of general manager to perform a particular act will be inferred from his general authority.

12. Corporations ⚡405

Vice-president and general manager of corporation, in absence of express restriction had authority to do anything which in his judgment was suitable to protect the interests of corporation or preserve its property.

13. Corporations ⚡432(12)

In claim in delivery action by corporation for possession of equipment for manufacture of concrete blocks, trial court could infer under evidence that vice-president and general manager of corporation, who attended to and managed all its affairs both before and after corporation became financially embarrassed, had full authority to act for and bind corporation in the making and performance of oral agreement with defendants to sell such equipment to defendants in exchange for concrete blocks to be delivered by defendants for account of corporation. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 509 et seq.

Dely T. Walton, Los Angeles, for appellant.

John W. Pares, Long Beach, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In this action, plaintiff, Pacific Concrete Products Corporation, sought and procured the immediate possession of certain personal property under the provisions of Section 509 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. During the trial it was stipulated by the parties that the property was worth $2,742 and that, in the event of judgment for defendants, plaintiff was unable to restore possession to them. Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment for defendants for $2,742 and costs.

[1] One of appellant's contentions is that "where the cause of action is in claim and delivery, no authority appears to embrace a claim for damages * * *" In the instant action, however, the judgment is not for damages but for the value of the property. "In an action to recover the possession of personal property * * * if the property has been delivered to the plaintiff * * * judgment for the defendant may be for * * * the value thereof, in case a return cannot be had * * *." Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2, 3] As stated by appellant in its opening brief, the right to possession by plaintiff at the commencement of the action determines its right to relief in claim and delivery. It follows that appellant's right to possession of the property at any other time is not in issue. The trial court did not err in excluding evidence respecting appellant's earlier unrecorded conditional purchase contract with a stranger to this action.

The court found, among other things, that it is not true that at the time of the commencement of the action plaintiff was entitled to the possession of said property; and that the allegations of respondents' affirmative defense are true. In effect, the affirmative defense was that respondents had bought and paid for the property and were at the time of the commencement of the action entitled to possession thereof.

In appellant's opening brief it is stated that "There is absolutely no evidence in the record to sustain any such purchase from plaintiff of the personal property which is the subject matter of this litigation, or any writing confirming any such arrangement, alleged to be oral and later reduced to writing. No evidence was offered of any such character, and we are convinced none is or was ever in existence."

[4-6] "In reviewing the evidence on such an appeal, all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the verdict if possible. It is an elementary, but often overlooked, principle of law, that when a verdict [or judgment] is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury [or judge]. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court." Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184.

In support of the judgment from which the instant appeal was taken, we find in the record before us the following:

John S. Dimmick, one of the defendants testified that he and his mother are partners doing business under the fictitious firm name of Adobe Engineers; that plaintiff was not on the commencement of the action entitled to possession of the "racks and pallets" (equipment for the manufacture of cement blocks) because plaintiff had sold them to defendants; that defendants had paid for them by delivering $3,200 worth of cement blocks; that Nathan D. Gorin, plaintiff's vice-president and general manager, had told Dimmick where to deliver the blocks; that the blocks had been delivered as indicated on the delivery slips put in evidence; that most of the persons and firms to whom they had been delivered were unknown to defendants, and the blocks were shipped to them on Gorin's order for the account of Pacific Concrete Products Corporation; that he understood that all these operations were the business of Pacific Concrete Products Corporation. Defendant first learned of Mr. Gorin's connection with Pacific Concrete Corporation when the manager of the Produce Branch of the Bank of America introduced them to each other as managers of similar businesses in the latter part of 1952. That at the time of defendants' purchase of the racks and pallets, he knew that Mr. Gorin was vice-president and general manager, that Laurence Holzman was president and was ill, and he believed that Mr. Walton was secretary-treasurer, and had no active part in the business. Defendants' arrangement was with Mr. Gorin as such general manager. Defendants' own truck was sent to plaintiff's El Monte plant to pick up the racks and pallets. At that time Mr. Gorin told defendant that the corporation owned them, and that he had authority to sell them. Defendant believed Gorin and relied upon his statements and took the racks and pallets in good faith. Defendant did not know that the racks and pallets were being purchased by plaintiff on conditional sale contract.

Gorin testified that he was the vice-president and general manager of the plaintiff corporation; that as such he agreed to sell to defendants the racks and pallets; that at that time Mr. Holzman was in the hospital in Cleveland; that there was a total of issued stock of $25,000; that Mr. Holzman had $15,000 and Gorin himself had $10,000; that when he saw Mr. Holzman in the hospital, both thought he was getting well; that the corporation's need of funds was discussed; and Mr. Holzman told Gorin to use his own judgment about selling some of the equipment they were not using to obtain money to keep things going until Holzman returned. That the object of the transaction with defendants was to raise money to continue the operation of plaintiff corporation and to pay its obligations, including the covering of checks which had been written and returned by the bank; that he sold the racks and pallets in order to make those checks good; that whatever he got from time to time he applied to whatever had to be paid first in his estimation; that he got in close to $3,000 for those blocks; that he paid the corporation for the portion of the blocks delivered to his own place in Newport; that those blocks were part of the consideration for the racks and pallets; that he did not know that he "could not dispose of any of the equipment unless he got a release under the chattel mortgage"; that he did not tell Dimmick that the corporation did not own the racks and pallets; that all the money received through this transaction with defendants was used for corporate purposes, but none of it was paid on the $40,000 conditional sale contract covering machinery and equipment which included the racks and pallets.

Delvy T. Walton, attorney for plaintiff, stated during the trial that the conditional sale contract referred to had not been recorded before the sale to defendants.

[7] There is substantial evidence in the record supporting the finding that respondents had bought and paid for the racks and pallets and were entitled to possession thereof when the instant action was commenced.

[8] That the record fails to disclose a written confirmation of the oral agreement of exchange of personal properties is of no consequence, since the agreement had been fully performed.

[9, 10] Appellant further contends that its general manager had no power to bind the corporation by such an agreement and states that no corporate agent has the right to sell "vital property * * * without which it could not operate" and that "the power to operate a business is radically different from the authority to sell its essential machinery". No doubt, that argument was first made in the trial court and we must assume that the trial court found that the racks and pallets were neither vital nor essential and that the sale of $2,752 worth of equipment was in the regular course of business of a corporation which was then buying on contract and presumably had possession of some $40,000 worth of equipment, and, according to its general manager, did not need all of it. Section 3901 of the Corporations Code has no application to the facts of the instant action.

[11-13] "The general manager of a corporation is more than a mere agent. Except as expressly restricted, he is empowered in the name of the corporation to do everything the corporation itself could do, and the power to perform a particular act will be inferred from his general authority." (13 Cal.Jur.2d 108, Corporations, sec. 336, and cases there cited.) In the instant action, Gorin, as such vice-president and general manager, had authority to do any act which in his judgment was suitable to protect the interests of the corporation, or to preserve its property. Los Angeles Lighting Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 156, 161, 39 P. 535. From the facts that he was the corporation's vice-president and general manager, and that he attended to and managed all its affairs both before and after it became embarrassed from financial difficulties, the trial court had the right to infer that he possessed full authority to act for and bind it on the occasion of the making and performance of the oral agreement. Ray v. Borgfeldt, 169 Cal. 253, 265, 146 P. 679.

The judgment is affirmed.

Alleen S. MILDREN, Plaintiff and Appellant, v.Paul S. MILDREN and Jessie Mildren,
Defendants and Respondents
(two cases).Civ. 5073, 5074.*District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.Nov. 4, 1955.

Actions of claim and delivery and for forcible detainer against plaintiff's husband and his mother to recover possession of furniture and furnishings or damages and for waste and use and occupancy of realty allegedly conveyed to plaintiff by husband pursuant to property settlement agreement. Defendants filed cross-complaint and the actions were consolidated for purpose of trial and on appeal. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., J., entered judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that the findings and judgments in favor of defendants were sufficiently supported by the evidence.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Gifts ⇨49(1)

In claim and delivery action against plaintiff's husband and his mother to recover possession of furniture and furnishings or damages, evidence sustained finding that furniture which plaintiff claimed had been given to her and husband by husband's mother, had been merely loaned to them.

2. Replevin ⇨72

In claim and delivery action against plaintiff's husband and husband's mother to recover furniture and furnishings or damages, evidence sustained findings in favor of defendants on issue of title to property removed by defendants from former marital home, and that other missing property had been removed by others, unknown to defendants, and that remaining furniture had been damaged by others through no fault of defendants.

3. Divorce ⇨255

Interlocutory decree of divorce determining property rights of the parties was res judicata, barring subsequent claim by wife for proceeds of sale of refrigerator disposed of by husband before divorce trial.

4. Use and Occupation ⇨9Waste ⇨20

In forcible detainer action against plaintiff's husband and his mother for use and occupancy of realty conveyed to plaintiff as her separate property pursuant to property settlement agreement and for claimed waste in failing to care for orange grove thereon, evidence was sufficient to support findings in favor of defendants.

5. Waste ⇨20

In forcible detainer action against plaintiff's husband and his mother, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff suffered no damage to orange grove conveyed to plaintiff by husband pursuant to property settlement agreement by reason of any claimed negligence of defendants from lack of water or cultivation.

6. Landlord and Tenant ⇨183

Pending trial of divorce action involving validity and effect of claimed property settlement agreement and conveyance of former marital home to wife pursuant thereto, husband and his mother who occupied realty only as a member of his family and not on her own account, were not liable for rental of premises in independent action by wife for forcible detainer, particularly where wife had left premises voluntarily after living with husband thereon for several years after claimed execution of property settlement agreement and there was no agreement to pay rent or any unauthorized holding or retention of premises after separation and prior to trial of divorce action in which rights and obligations of the parties were determined.

7. Use and Occupation ⇨9

In forcible detainer action against plaintiff's husband and his mother for use and occupancy of former marital home allegedly conveyed to plaintiff by husband pursuant to property settlement agreement, evidence sustained finding that husband's mother occupied the premises only as a member of his family and not on her own account.

Taylor F. Peterson, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Robert McWilliams, Altadena, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Alleen obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from Paul on the ground of extreme cruelty on April 8, 1953. The main issue presented by defendants' cross-complaint was the question of the nature, character, and title of their home property and its furnishings, in Fontana, on September 20, 1950, the date of separation of the parties. Alleen was awarded the home, together with certain other described personal property, as her sole and separate property, in accordance with the provisions of some previous property settlement agreement entered into by them on or about January 28, 1948. At the trial Paul was given other property and each was ordered to deliver over possession of it accordingly.

On May 13, 1953, Alleen commenced an action in claim and delivery against Paul and his mother, Jessie Mildren, for possession of certain itemized furniture and furnishings, alleging that their value was $12,500. Damages, in case delivery was not made, were also sought. Jessie answered, denied she was wrongfully or otherwise in possession of them and claimed that certain described items on the list belonged to her, denied that Alleen was the owner of any of them, and alleged that plaintiff was not entitled to possession of them. She also denied that Alleen ever demanded possession of them from her or that she was damaged in any sum.

Paul alleged he was the owner of certain of the articles named and admitted certain allegations of plaintiff's complaint in respect to other items. He alleged that the parties still were husband and wife when the claim and delivery action was filed and claimed that the interlocutory decree was a binding adjudication as to their property rights and as to all issues raised by plain-tiff's complaint, the answers thereto, and defendants' cross-complaint.

After trial of the issues, the court specifically found that Paul took some of the articles listed by Alleen as belonging to her, but that he had returned everything but a "deep freezer"; that before the trial of the divorce action he sold the freezer for $75 and never accounted for it; that Jessie took certain of the items listed but these articles belonged to her and not to plaintiff; that all other remaining articles listed were owned by plaintiff on September 20, 1950, and were then in her possession or had been destroyed or were taken by others than these defendants through no fault of theirs. Judgment was entered on May 7, 1954, in favor of defendants.

On May 27, 1953, Alleen filed another action against these defendants for forcible detainer, for waste, and for value of the use and occupation of the home and real property involved, alleging that she was entitled to the possession thereof on September 20, 1950, the date of the separation; that defendants peaceably, but without right, took possession of the same and occupied it until February, 1953, by virtue of threats, etc.; that the reasonable rental value thereof was $250 per month; that during this period defendants allowed 4½ acres of citrus trees to die for lack of water, to her detriment in the sum of $10,000. As a separate cause of action she alleged defendants vacated possession on February 1, 1953, and during the period from the date of separation to February 1, 1953, they committed waste thereon in the sum of $10,000. Defendants separately denied generally these allegations. Paul alleged that on September 20, 1950, this was their marital home; that they were then living together with their minor son Donald in said home; that Alleen voluntarily left it and he continued to live in it with the boy and the boy's grandmother Jessie, who cared for him and the home until February 1, 1953; that no final decree of divorce was ever obtained; that since September 20, 1950, Alleen caused an action to be brought against him in which she made an application for an order requiring him to surrender possession of the property to her; that the application was denied, and no appeal was taken from that order. He claims that this order became final and now constitutes a final binding adjudication of that issue; that on April 9, 1953, an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered setting forth the respective rights of these parties in and to the property involved and that it became final; and claims that the use and occupation of the property, from the date of the separation until the trial of the divorce action was taken into consideration in making disposition of the property in the interlocutory decree.

The court found generally in favor of the defendants and that Alleen voluntarily left the home on September 20, 1950; that Paul maintained it and brought his mother in to care for the minor child and the home and that her occupancy was only as a member of the family; that Paul permitted certain orange trees to die for lack of water but that plaintiff was not damaged to the extent indicated by her, and any claimed damage became res judicata by reason of the interlocutory decree which finally and subsequently adjudicated their property rights. Judgment was entered on July 16, 1954, for defendants. These two actions were consolidated for the purpose of trial and on appeal.

Without setting forth in detail the contradictory evidence pertaining to the title and claimed ownership of the furniture and furnishings of the home and of the property, and the claimed damage to it, we will give a résumé of the several claims. After 25 years of married life Alleen and Paul came to unhappy differences and Paul, under the provisions of the property settlement agreement, deeded the home property and assigned his interest in the community furnishings which they then owned, to Alleen, as part of that settlement on January 28, 1948, but the parties continued to live on the premises with their two boys, Donald and Paul, Jr., until September, 1950, at which time Alleen voluntarily left the home. Paul, Sr. and Jessie, his mother, remained on the property and occupied it. Alleen subsequently commenced her action for divorce and Paul contested it, claiming that the property listed by Alleen as her sole and separate property was community property, or property belonging to his mother, himself or others, and asked the court to make a determination of this issue. Paul, his mother and his minor son Donald continued to remain on the property and occupied it until the latter part of January, 1953, or the first part of February, 1953, at which time Paul and his mother moved out, shut off the gas, lights, locked up the house, and told Paul's attorney to notify Alleen's attorney about his removal. Donald returned to live with his mother. During the time Paul and Jessie occupied the premises considerable of the furnishings were removed by them. They claimed it belonged to them. On April 8, 1953, the interlocutory decree of divorce was entered, as heretofore indicated. After Paul and Jessie removed from the premises, apparently Paul, Jr., then about 24 years of age, remained on the premises and slept in the shed. He had no key to the home.

[1,2] At the trial of these actions Alleen had a prepared list of property which she claimed was in the home at the time she left. She admitted some of this had been returned to her by Paul. She testified that considerable portions of it had been removed from the house and that which remained in the home had been damaged to a great extent. There is a conflict in the evidence as to when this loss and damage occurred. It affirmatively appears that after Paul, Sr. and his mother left the home Paul, Jr. found a way to enter the house, and held numerous parties, which included as guests many women of questionable character, for a period of some time thereafter. Portions of the furnishings were destroyed or were taken during this period. The police were called on one occasion and Paul, Jr. was taken to jail. About this time, on February 11, 1953, Alleen came back to the home and occupied the house. She said for some time thereafter men called and inquired for certain girls. The claim of ownership of the furniture by Alleen is that Jessie gave them a considerable portion of it when they were married and during their married life and that they bought some of it from her. Jessie and Paul denied this and said it was only loaned to them by Jessie. The trial court found in favor of defendants on this issue and found in their favor as to the title of the property taken by defendants from the premises. There is sufficient evidence to support that finding and the further finding that the other missing articles were taken by others, unknown to defendants and that the damage to the remaining furniture was through no fault of defendants.

[3] The court also found that Paul, Sr. disposed of a refrigerator for $75 prior to the divorce trial and did not account to plaintiff for the proceeds. In failing to give a judgment to plaintiff for this amount apparently the court felt that this item was one of the issues that was or should have been determined in the divorce action when their property rights were in issue and were determined. It properly held that the interlocutory decree was res judicata as to this claim. Lang v. Lang, 182 Cal. 765, 190 P. 181.

[4] As to the claim that defendants were liable for the use and occupancy of the property from the date of separation until February, 1953, and for claimed waste in reference to the lack of care of it and the orange grove, there is sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding in favor of the defendants. From the evidence it does appear that the grove never did operate as a net gain of any import. In most years it was otherwise. There was evidence that the surrounding community grew up with residences and was near certain smog drifts from the Kaiser Steel Mill which it is claimed affected production in the orange grove. It was further shown that Dr. Paul Mildren was then retired on disability insurance, was not able to care for the grove, and was advised by experts that it would not be profitable to further cultivate it. It was further shown that its value had greatly increased for subdivision purposes. There was evidence that the parties owned certain shares of water rights in connection with the property; that plaintiff allowed these shares to become subject to sale by delinquency in payments for water; that they were sold by reason thereof; and that Paul purchased them under the sale and resold them for about $150. No water was furnished to the premises thereafter. Plaintiff claims damages by reason of this claimed neglect, which she said occurred subsequent to her separation from Paul and prior to the trial of the divorce action.

[5] In this respect the trial court here found, not only that this claim was barred by the interlocutory judgment in the divorce action under the doctrine of res judicata, but it also found that by virtue of the trees dying from lack of water plaintiff suffered no damage. Regardless of the question of the application of the doctrine of res judicata, the evidence supports the finding that plaintiff suffered no damage by reason of any claimed negligence of defendants from lack of water or cultivation. The evidence shows that on near-by property orange trees were being torn out and the property was being subdivided for homes at greatly increased prices.

[6,7] Since the question of the effect and validity of the claimed property settlement agreement and the deed of the property here in question was being tested in the divorce action, pending the trial of said action, defendants would not be liable for rental of the premises to plaintiff in an independent action such as the one here under consideration, particularly where the court found that plaintiff voluntarily left the premises after living with her husband thereon for several years after the claimed execution of the property settlement agreement, and particularly when there was no agreement to pay rent, nor any unauthorized holding or retention of the premises after the separation and prior to the trial of the divorce action involving and declaring their respective rights and obligations to each other. The court specifically found, upon sufficient evidence, that Jessie occupied the property only as a member of the family of defendant Paul Mildren, and not on her own account. The findings and judgments rendered in each action as to each defendant are sufficiently supported by the evidence.

Judgments affirmed.

v.

The CITY OF EUREKA, a municipal corporation, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 8673.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Nov. 8, 1955.

Quiet title action by record holders against city, which claimed to hold title to record holders' property under tax deed. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, Delos A. Mace, J., quieted title in record owners, and city appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that record owners, who knew of city's liens on their property by reason of delinquent assessments, and who relied on Civil Code provisions relating to recording as their assurance such liens were extinguished when the property was purchased, would not be precluded from asserting that they were bona fide purchasers for value, even though they had not investigated city clerk's files for existence of a tax city to city, since charter provision, when considered as recording statute, was not one properly within realm of municipal affairs.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨982

Even if city charter provision included within its scope a conveyance running to city, and if filing of deed to city with city clerk was compliance with terms of such provision, provision could not be construed as provision for giving public notice of tax deeds in view of fact that provision is concerned with qualifications and duties of city tax collector and with keeping of books and records so that public will be informed as to administration of the office, not condition of land titles. St.1895, p. 373, § 57; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1214.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨57

Cities should restrict themselves to municipal affairs. West's Ann.Const. art. 11, § 8.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨78

A freeholders' charter does not supersede any general law which affects and applies to or involves matters concerning welfare of people of the state as a whole.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨79

Civil Code provisions relating to recording are matters of general state concern and are not to be abrogated or enlarged by a municipal charter. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1214, 2911.

5. Quieting Title ⇨43

In quiet title action against city, city could, under answer denying plaintiffs' title and right to possession, have proved whatever claim it might have, including a tax title.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨519(5)

Record owners, who knew of city's liens on their property by reason of delinquent assessments, and who relied on Civil Code provisions relating to recording as their assurance such liens were extinguished when the property was purchased, would not be precluded from asserting that they were bona fide purchasers for value, even though they had not investigated city clerk's files for existence of tax deed to city, since charter provision, when considered as recording statute applicable to tax deeds, was not one properly within realm of municipal affairs. St.1895, p. 373, § 57; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2911.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇨982

City, which had received tax deed to tax delinquent property, was not excluded from operation of recording statute contained in the Civil Code. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1214; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 6103.

Thomas Cotter, City Atty., Mitchell & Henderson, Eureka, for appellant.

Falk & Falk, Eureka, for respondents.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs are the record owners of the real property here involved. They purchased it for value on December 15, 1950. At the time of the purchase they knew of claims of the defendant city on account of certain assessments but claim that they are bona fide purchasers for value under Section 2911 of the Civil Code. There were two street assessments which became liens against the property for improvements made on June 19, 1921, and July 21, 1926, respectively, and bonds upon the security of these assessments were issued by which the last installments became due on the above assessments on July 2, 1937, and July 2, 1942, respectively. No judgment foreclosing said liens has been entered although an action was brought therefor against plaintiffs' predecessor in title on June 5, 1941, and dismissed on August 1, 1952, for lack of prosecution. There are no other taxes or liens due and owing defendant city at this time which are a lien against the property.

On May 6, 1941, defendant city's tax collector conveyed this property to defendant by a tax deed for non-payment of delinquent taxes levied against the property for the fiscal year 1922-1923. This deed was not recorded in the Recorder's office of Humboldt County, the county in which the real property is situated, but was filed in the City Clerk's office of said city; the plaintiffs had no actual knowledge thereof.

The above facts were stipulated to in the trial court and defendant city appeals from the judgment quieting plaintiff's title.

Appellant city contends that since the 1941 tax deed was filed in the City Clerk's office the respondents were charged with notice thereof as such filing was in accordance with the provisions of Section 57 of the Charter of the City of Eureka. This provision reads as follows:

"Tax Collector.

"Tax collector, "The Tax Collector shall have been a citizen of the State, and a resident and qualified elector of the city, for at least five years next

"Duties." before his election. It shall be his duty to receive and collect all city taxes, general and special; he shall also collect all city licenses, water rates, harbor dues, cemetery receipts, and such other branches of the city revenue, not otherwise herein provided for, as the Council may direct. He shall keep proper books, showing all moneys collected by him as Tax Collector, and also a book which shall contain a record of every deed given by or on behalf of the city for real estate sold for delinquent taxes or assessments, which book shall be properly indexed, and shall be at all suitable times subject to public inspection; and do and perform such other duties as may be required of him by law or ordinance of said city. He shall pay all moneys collected by him, as Tax Collector, into the City Treasury, weekly. The time and manner of collecting all licenses shall be provided for by the Council." Stats.1895, pp. 356, 373.

By the use of considerable ingenuity appellant urges that this provision is a recording statute since a city charter has the dignity of a state law and must be accorded such weight by the courts. (18 Cal.Jur., Municipal Corporations, sec. 78.) It is seriously contended that this section of the charter, by providing for a "properly indexed" book which is "at all suitable times subject to public inspection", has made provision for giving notice of its tax deeds in such manner as to give notice thereof to all persons and that such provision is an alternative to the provisions of Civil Code, Section 1214, relating to recording conveyances.

[1] Even assuming that the language of this section of the Eureka charter, "every deed given by or on behalf of the city for real estate sold for delinquent taxes or assessments," includes a conveyance running to the city, and further assuming that a filing of such a deed with the City Clerk was a compliance with the terms of this section, nevertheless we do not think that the section can be construed as a provision for giving public notice of tax deeds.

Section 57 of the charter is entitled "Tax Collector," the marginal note states "Tax Collector, qualifications. Duties." There is no indication of any intention to establish a method of giving notice as to tax deeds. A fair reading of the section must result in a determination that it is concerned with the qualifications and duties of the city tax collector and that the provisions of the section are limited to that office. The provisions as to keeping books and records are to assure that the public will be informed as to the administration of the office, not as to the condition of land titles.

Furthermore, to give an interpretation to the charter section whereby it becomes a recording statute would extend the charter beyond the regulation of municipal affairs. It would be to foster chaos to allow cities to establish recording requirements in addition to those covered by state general laws, the certainty required to expedite title searches would be impaired and rendered more difficult and uncertain if each chartered city were to establish special recording laws.

[2,3] That cities should restrict themselves to "municipal affairs" is explicit in Article XI, section 8, of the Constitution. A freeholders' charter does not supersede any general law which affects and applies to or involves matters concerning the welfare of the people of the state as a whole. Whyte v. City of Sacramento, 65 Cal.App.

534, 224 P. 1008; City of Pasadena v. Charleville, 215 Cal. 384, 10 P.2d 745.

[4] We think the provisions of the Civil Code relating to recording are matters of general state concern and not to be abrogated or enlarged by a municipal charter.

[5] Respondents point out that the pleadings and the original theory of the case were based upon the street assessment liens and that there has been a change in theory to one of reliance on the unrecorded tax deed on this appeal. This appears to be true, but since the stipulated facts did refer to the tax deed it is properly before us. Under an answer denying plaintiffs' title and right to possession, the defendant may prove whatever right he may have, including a tax title. Smart v. Peek, 213 Cal. 452, 454, 2 P.2d 380.

[6] Appellant attacks the bona fides of respondents, arguing that since respondents knew of the city's liens on the property they should have "suspected the existence of a tax deed and investigated the files of the city clerk's office to allay his suspicions. Having failed to do so, Respondents should be charged with notice of the tax deed." This somewhat novel proposition is based upon the contention that being charged with notice of the provisions of section 57 of the city charter, the failure to go to the city clerk's office (not mentioned in the section) "to allay his suspicions" shows a lack of the good faith required to constitute one a bona fide purchaser. Having held that the provision of the charter relied upon, considered as a recording statute, is not one properly within the realm of municipal affairs, we do not now agree with appellant's position on this phase of the case.

Respondents, knowing of the city's liens on the property by reason of delinquent assessments, relied upon the provisions of Section 2911 of the Civil Code as their assurance that these liens were extinguished when the property was purchased. This reliance was well founded and was upheld by the trial judge on the basis of Scheas v. Robertson, 38 Cal.2d 119, 238 P.2d 982, wherein it is pointed out that Civil Code, Section 2911, allows one to be a bona fide purchaser for value if he relies on the section for the extinguishment of the liens therein set forth.

Appellant cites many cases relating to notice other than record notice as affecting the status of a grantee. All of the cases correctly state the law applicable to their facts, but none are analogous to the instant case.

[7] If appellant had recorded the tax deed in the County Recorder's office pursuant to Section 1214 of the Civil Code it would have prevailed here. We find no exception in that code section excluding appellant from its operation. In view of the provisions of Government Code, Section 6103, exempting cities from payment of fees for certain filings or for the performance of any other official service, it is difficult to understand appellant's reluctance to comply with the general laws of this state.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. Judgment for the wife in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, C. Clinton Clad, Judge pro tem., and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that where the evidence was conflicting and sole claim on appeal was insufficiency of evidence, the appellate court had no other function to perform than that of affirming the judgment.

Judgment affirmed and penalty imposed for frivolous appeal.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Upon an appeal, every intendment is to be indulged in which tends to support the judgment, and every reasonable inference which tends to support a finding must be accepted.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨930(1)

On appeal, the evidence is to be construed most strongly in favor of the respondent, and all conflicts resolved in support of the verdict.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨1001(1)

8. Divorce *§*184(6), 194

Where wife was granted a divorce on conflicting evidence and the sole claim on appeal was insufficiency of evidence, seeking to have the appellate court reweigh the evidence, judgment was affirmed and $100 imposed for taking a frivolous appeal. Rules on Appeal, rule 26.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

[1-5] Defendant husband appeals from an interlocutory judgment of divorce which was granted upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Under a claim of insufficiency of the evidence appellant's counsel argues the weight of the same, endeavoring to induce this court to reweigh it. "Upon an appeal every intendment is to be indulged in which tends to support the judgment, Hind v. Oriental Products Co., Inc., 195 Cal. 655, 661, 235 P. 438, and every reasonable inference which tends to support a finding must be accepted. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal. 2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689. The evidence is to be construed most strongly in favor of the respondent and all conflicts resolved in support of the verdict. Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v. McConville, 219 Cal. 161, 164, 25 P.2d 429. And where appellant urges the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the jury the rule is that, 'Such contention requires defendants to demonstrate that there is no substantial evidence to support the challenged findings.' Nichols v. Mitchell, 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550, 552. (Emphasis added.) It is said in Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184, that: 'It is an elementary, but often overlooked, principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court.'" Hartzell v. Myall, 115 Cal.App.2d 670, 672, 252 P.2d 676, 677. To the same effect see Dubosclard v. Dubosclard, 112 Cal.App.2d 342, 343, 246 P.2d 124. That this is especially true with respect to the issue of extreme cruelty appears from numerous decisions exemplified by Polk v. Polk, 50 Cal.App.2d 653, 123 P.2d 550; Ganann v. Ganann, 109 Cal.App.2d 346, 240 P.2d 722; Margolis v. Margolis, 115 Cal.App.2d 131, 251 P.2d 396; Fleming v. Fleming, 95 Cal. 430, 30 P. 566; Bixby v. Bixby, 120 Cal.App.2d 495, 261 P.2d 286.

[6,7] Appellant's brief shows that the evidence at bar is conflicting and leaves no function for this court to perform other than that of affirming the judgment. Sonkin v. Hershon, 130 Cal.App.2d 491, 492, 279 P.2d 156, 157: "It is not the province of a reviewing court to present a detailed argument on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings where it appears that the question is one purely of determining which side shall be believed. The trial court having determined this with the witnesses before it, the controversy is settled. Gillespie v. Gillespie, 121 Cal.App.2d 95, 97, 262 P.2d 607." And in Re Estate of Phelps, 132 Cal.App.2d 850, 853, 283 P.2d 293, 295: "Where an appellant has failed to show that the trial court was wrong it is not incumbent upon a reviewing court to engage in a dissertation upon the law for the purpose of demonstrating that the court was right."

[8] The rule to which we have just adverted has been reiterated so often and with so little effect upon certain segments of the bar that it seems to call in this instance for application of rule 26 of Rules on Appeal, which provides that in case of a frivolous appeal, "the reviewing court may impose upon offending attorneys or parties such penalties * * * as the circumstances of the case and the discouragement of like conduct in the future may require."

The judgment is affirmed and the attorney for appellant is fined the sum of $100 for taking a frivolous appeal, such amount to be added to respondent's costs on appeal.

v.

George B. WORKMAN, Defendant and Appellant.
Crim. 3107.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Nov. 14, 1955.

Prosecution for two counts of lewd and lascivious conduct with minor children and one count of sodomy. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Louis B. Dematteis, J., entered judgment of conviction on one count of lewd and lascivious conduct and on count charging sodomy, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that mother of prosecution witness should have been permitted to testify as to her son's bad reputation for truth among his fellow workers even though she had not heard his reputation discussed in the community at large, but refusal to permit such testimony did not constitute reversible error.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1153(2)

Witnesses ⇨354

Whether witness is sufficiently qualified to express an opinion on reputation is a matter primarily in the discretion of trial court and such discretion will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse appears.

2. Witnesses ⇨355

A witness may base his testimony of good reputation on the fact that he has never heard anything against the person's reputation, but to establish a bad reputation, a bad report must of necessity have been discussed generally in the community.

3. Criminal Law ⇨1186(4)

Witnesses ⇨355

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious conduct with minor child and sodomy, mother of prosecution witness should have been permitted to testify as to her son's bad reputation for truth among his fellow workers even though she had not heard his reputation discussed in the community at large, but refusal to permit such testimony did not constitute reversible error. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½; Pen.Code, §§ 286, 288.

4. Criminal Law ⇨706

Where district attorney recalled prosecution witness in rebuttal and witness testified briefly to some matters that he had already testified to and there was no objection to the recalling of such witness nor to any of his testimony, there was no misconduct in act of district attorney even though defendant claimed witness was recalled merely to appeal to sympathy of jury.

5. Criminal Law ⇨683(1), 1171(1)

Where prosecution failed to cross-examine defense witness but after defendant rested his case, recalled such witness and asked if he had ever been convicted of a felony, such testimony was not proper surrebuttal, but was not prejudicial misconduct by district attorney.

Thomas B. Gallen, Daly City, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., of Cal.,
Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Victor
Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant was tried on three counts: (1) violation of section 288, Penal Code—commission on October 14, 1954, of a lewd and lascivious act upon the person of Virgil, a child of 7 years; count 2, violation of section 286, Penal Code—commission on the same day of sodomy upon the person of the same child; count 3, violation of section 288, Penal Code—commission on October 17, 1954, of a lewd and lascivious act upon the person of Joseph, a child of 9 years. A jury acquitted defendant of count 1 and convicted him of the other counts. Defendant appeals from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

Questions Presented.

1. Should testimony of defendant's mother as to the bad reputation of her son James for truth and integrity have been admitted?

2. Alleged misconduct of district attorney

(a) in recalling Virgil in rebuttal;

(b) in recalling in surrebuttal one of defendant's witnesses to impeach that witness because of conviction of a felony.

Evidence.

Virgil and Joseph are the sons of James Workman. His wife is confined in a state hospital. The boys lived with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy. Mrs. Murphy is the mother of both James Workman and defendant. Mr. Murphy is their stepfather. James lived in a nearby house. Defendant, therefore, is the brother of James and the uncle of the boys. He lived with the Murphys, occupying a bedroom adjoining that of the boys. In fact to enter his bedroom he was required to pass through the boys' bedroom. Virgil testified to an act of sodomy committed on him the evening of October 14th, in the latter bedroom, and to prior acts. Joseph testified to a similar act on him on October 17th, and to prior acts. The morning of the 18th Joseph reported defendant's acts to his father. Later that day, on being asked, Virgil told of the acts committed on him. Defendant made an equivocal statement to the officers arresting him. On the stand he denied the charges. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy and two friends of the family testified to being in the house the night of October 14th, playing cards in the living room with the Murphys. Defendant came in and out of the living room with frequency, and none of the four noticed anything amiss. James testified that the relations between him and the Murphys and defendant were friendly and that Mrs. Murphy at no time had asked him to remove the children from her home. Defendant and the four witnesses above mentioned testified that Mrs. Murphy had requested James to remove the children and as a result James thereafter evidenced ill feeling towards defendant and the Murphys. One of Joseph's school teachers testified that Joseph's reputation for truth was bad. James confronted defendant with the charges made by the boys and was so angry that he threatened to kill defendant with a knife, and would have done so if their mother had not intervened.

With the exception of the equivocal statement of defendant to the arresting officers, the testimony of the boys is uncorroborated. Defendant concedes that their evidence, if believed, and it was by the jury, is sufficient to support the verdicts. He argues, however, that the case being primarily the testimony of the boys against that of defendant, makes the case a close one and hence any error would be prejudicial.

1. Mother's Testimony As To James' Reputation.

[1, 2] Whether a witness is sufficiently qualified to express an opinion on reputation is a matter primarily in the discretion of the trial court, which discretion will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse appears. See 27 Cal.Jur. 131-139; Khan v. Zemansky, 59 Cal.App. 324, 329, 210 P. 529. There seems to be a difference in the foundation necessary to prove good reputation from that necessary to prove bad reputation. A witness may base good reputation on the fact that he has never heard anything against the person's reputation. On the other hand, a bad report must of necessity have been discussed generally in the community. See 1 Wharton's Criminal Evidence, 465-466; vol. V Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd ed., § 1614, pp. 484-486. It has been held that evidence of bad reputation for truth, honesty and integrity is properly excluded where the reputation is confined to the vicinity of the person's place of business or among the members of a restricted group of persons. Cosler v. Norwood, 97 Cal.App.2d 665, 667, 218 P.2d 800, witness' knowledge of the person's bad reputation for truth limited to the person's fellow cafeteria workers; People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 162, 30 P. 620, witness' knowledge of the person's bad reputation for truth and integrity limited to police officers; People v. Carnavacci, 119 Cal.App.2d 14, 17, 258 P.2d 1121, witness' knowledge of the person's bad reputation for peace and quiet limited to three or four people who came into the garage where witness worked. In People v. Markham, supra, 64 Cal. 157, 30 P. 620, the court said "to impeach him when the inquiry is as to his reputation for truth, he must have reached the bad eminence of notoriety as a liar." 64 Cal. at page 163, 30 P. at page 623. In People v. Schmidt, 79 Cal.App. 413, 249 P. 832, 250 P. 1104, a witness was permitted to testify as to the person's bad reputation where the witness knew his reputation in the locality where the person did business but did not know it in the locality where the person lived. The court said, 79 Cal.App. at pages 418-419, 249 P. at page 834: "A person in a large city may not be known to his next door neighbor, but may be known 20 miles away where he does his business. The former strict ruling on this class of testimony has been relaxed, in view of our modern methods of rapid transit, which enable a person to have his home in one place while he does business in another far away." V Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd ed., p. 488, points out that the old rule of "neighborhood" reputation is not appropriate to modern conditions, that today, "especially in large cities, a man may have one reputation in the suburb of his residence and another in the office or the factory at his place of work; or he may have one reputation in his place of technical domicile in New York and another in the region of the mines of Michigan or the steel-mills of Ohio where his investments call him for supervision for portions of time. There may be distinct circles of persons, each circle having no relation to the other, and yet each having a reputation based on constant and intimate personal observation of the man."

The latest expression of the California Supreme Court on this subject appears in People v. Cobb, 45 Cal.2d 158, 287 P.2d 752.

There the character witness was offered to testify to the defendant's good reputation in the neighborhood where the defendant worked although the witness did not know his reputation where the defendant lived. The trial court rejected the offer. The Supreme Court in holding that the trial court erred, stated, 45 Cal.2d at page 164, 287 P.2d at page 755: "Therefore, it would be illogical to say that reputation evidence should be limited to the community of one's residence to the exclusion of the community of one's place of business; and if it is shown that a general reputation exists in the community of one's place of business, and that the witness has sufficient knowledge of it, the witness should be permitted to testify concerning such general reputation."

We like the language of Mr. Presiding Justice White in his dissenting opinion in the Cobb case, Cal.App., 279 P.2d 997, the Supreme Court's decision on hearing we have just stated. After referring to cases which held that reputation in the vicinity of the person's place of business or among a restricted group of persons could not be shown, such as People v. Soules, 41 Cal. App.2d 298, 306, 106 P.2d 639; and People v. Griner, 124 Cal. 19, 21-22, 56 P. 625, he stated, 279 P.2d at page 1000: "We are persuaded that the true and correct rule is that stated in People v. Derrick, 85 Cal.App. 406, 409, 259 P. 481, 482, as follows: 'In this age of rapid transit and quick communication it is not only conceivable, but a matter of common knowledge, that business men may acquire no reputation one way or the other in the community in which they actually reside, and bear an excellent reputation miles distant where they follow their daily vocations and come in contact with many associates. People v. Schmidt, 79 Cal.App. 413, 249 P. 832 (250 P. 1104); see also State v. Henderson, 29 W.Va. 147, 1 S.E. 225-240; State v. Cushing, 14 Wash. 527, 45 P. 145-147, 53 Am.St.Rep. 883. Any other view would prevent many eminent citizens from proving well-earned reputations.'" While both the Supreme Court and Mr. Presiding Justice White were considering evidence of good reputation, we can see no reason why the same rule would or should not apply to evidence of bad reputation.

[3] In our case, defendant's mother, Mrs. Murphy, first said she knew her other son's, James', reputation for truth and honesty in the community where he lived for the past 16 years and that it was bad. On recross-examination she stated that she had not heard his reputation discussed by the community at large but by his fellow workers. Defendant then asked her if she had discussed his reputation with his circle of friends and the people who came to visit in her home. Objection was sustained to this question, the court holding that the witness had not shown familiarity with James' general reputation in the community. Defendant made no effort to qualify the witness further, and the court struck out Mrs. Murphy's testimony as to James' reputation. The court should have permitted Mrs. Murphy's testimony to stand. James' reputation among his fellow workers would be in line with modern conditions. Mrs. Murphy should have been permitted to show that added to that there was a like reputation among his circle of friends and the people who visited at their home.

However, under the circumstances of this case we do not feel that the error was prejudicial. The prosecution's case did not, in any material degree, depend upon his testimony. Art. VI, § 4½, Const.

2. District Attorney.

[4] (a) At the close of defendant's case, Virgil was recalled in rebuttal. He testified briefly to some matters to which he had already testified. Defendant contends Virgil was recalled merely to appeal to the sympathy of the jury, by showing again "a little boy whose family situation—completely apart from the issues on trial—cried aloud for that sympathy." Defendant at no time objected to the recalling of Virgil, nor to any of his testimony. While the testimony was merely repetitious, and could have been ruled out on objection, we see no misconduct in the act of the district attorney. There was a time element which was important in the case and which the district attorney apparently wanted to narrow down.

[5] (b) James Murphy, stepfather of defendant and James Workman, testified for the defense, and was not cross-examined by plaintiff. After defendant rested his case, plaintiff recalled Murphy and asked him if he had ever been convicted of a felony. He replied that he had. Thereupon defendant objected on the ground that this was not proper surrebuttal and that plaintiff could not impeach its own witness. The court struck out the answer and instructed the jury to disregard it. Defendant assigns the asking of this question as misconduct. While it is true it was not surrebuttal, nevertheless the question could have been asked on cross-examination, and had plaintiff asked permission to recall the witness for cross-examination instead of calling it surrebuttal, it would have been in the discretion of the trial court to have allowed plaintiff to do so, even though it was at the end of the case. Moreover, plaintiff was not attempting to impeach its witness. Murphy was defendant's witness. See People v. McFarlane, 134 Cal. 618, 620, 66 P. 865, 67 P. 138. There was no misconduct here.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Gregory LILLEY, a Minor, by his Guardian ad litem, Robert Lilley, and Robert Lilley, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

KEY SYSTEM TRANSIT LINES, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 16470.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Nov. 4, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action by guardian ad litem on behalf of minor for personal injuries and guardian's medical expenses incurred when bus passed over minor's foot after minor alighted from bus. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Chris B. Fox, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs and denied defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that allowing plaintiffs during rebuttal to introduce evidence which might have been part of their case in chief and also allowing plaintiffs to amend their complaint at that time were matters within the sound discretion of the trial court and not prejudicial to defendant, and also instructions given by trial court were proper and adequate.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trial ⚡59(2)

The order of proceedings at a trial is within the sound discretion of the court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 607.

2. Trial ⚡63(2)

In action by guardian on behalf of minor for personal injuries and medical expenses incurred by guardian, permission by court allowing plaintiffs during rebuttal to offer evidence that was really part of their case in chief was not an abuse of discretion by the trial court, where defendant did not object or claim surprise or prejudice for allowing such testimony.

3. Appeal and Error ⚡1041(4)

Pleading ⚡236(6)

In action by guardian on behalf of minor for personal injuries and medical expenses incurred by guardian, allowing plaintiffs during the rebuttal, to amend complaint to allege that minor plaintiff was passenger of defendant at time he was injured, was not an abuse of discretion of trial court, and was not reversible error, where there was no prejudice to defendant.

4. Carriers ⚡320(2, 25)

In action by guardian on behalf of minor for personal injuries and medical expenses incurred by guardian when minor's foot was run over by bus, evidence as to whether minor had reasonable opportunity to leave bus and whether he had safely left the bus when the accident occurred, and also whether he had reached a place outside the sphere of any activity of the carrier which might reasonably constitute a mobile hazard to him as a passenger, was sufficient for the jury.

5. Appeal and Error ⚡882(12)

Instructions to jury on carrier-passenger relationship and degree of care required of carrier could not be complained of by defendant on appeal who had requested two instructions upon this very subject.

6. Trial ⚡260(8)

In action by guardian on behalf of minor for personal injuries and medical expenses incurred by guardian when bus from which minor had alighted passed over his foot, refusal of trial court to give requested instruction on "unavoidable or inevitable accident", was not error as subject was adequately covered by instructions which court gave on "negligence" and "proximate cause".

Donahue, Richards, Rowell & Gallagher, Oakland, for appellant.

Robert A. Kaiser, Oakland, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

The jury awarded the minor plaintiff $1,250 for personal injuries and his father $273 for medical expenses incurred. Defendant moved for and was denied a new trial and then appealed from the judgment. It claims error in the admission of certain testimony, the allowance of an amendment to the complaint, and the giving and refusing of certain instructions.

(1) Over the objection that it was not rebuttal testimony, plaintiffs were allowed, during their rebuttal, to adduce evidence that was really a part of their case in chief.

[1] The order of proceedings at a trial is within the sound discretion of the court; e. g., after the plaintiff has adduced evidence on his part and defendant has put in his defense, they "may then respectively offer rebutting evidence only, unless the court, for good reason, in furtherance of justice, permit them to offer evidence upon their original case". Code of Civ.Proc., § 607.

[2] Here, defendant did not claim surprise or that the defense was prejudiced by allowing this testimony out of order; nor did it move for a reasonable continuance to meet the situation thus presented. It claimed merely that this was "improper" rebuttal testimony. This testimony was not upon a new subject. It bore directly upon matters mentioned in plaintiffs' opening statement and concerning which testimony had already been received. Also, it was adduced on a Monday and there was evidence that the witness was out of the state the preceding week (during which plaintiffs presented their case in chief), that plaintiffs' counsel found the witness on the preceding day (Sunday) and then went out to talk to her.

Under these circumstances we find no abuse of discretion in the allowance of this testimony out of order.

(2) Defendant claims it was reversible error to allow plaintiffs, during their rebuttal, to amend the complaint to allege that the minor plaintiff was a passenger of defendant at the time he was injured.

[3] This, too, is a matter that rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. The evidence showed that the injury occurred shortly after plaintiff got off defendant's bus. Defendant's objection was that the motion was "untimely"; that plaintiffs' counsel had known for at least 11 months that the boy was possibly a passenger; and that it was not fair to expect a defendant retroactively to defend a case on the basis that plaintiff was a passenger rather than a member of the ordinary public. Nothing further was then said by the defendant concerning any possible prejudice to the defense and no request was made then or later during the trial for an opportunity to adduce further evidence on that subject, nor for a continuance thereafter.

Under these circumstances (see cases collected in 2 Witkin on California Procedure 1605-1606 and 1611-1613) we find no abuse of discretion in the allowance of the amendment.

(3) Defendant says that the minor plaintiff was obviously not a passenger at the time of the accident; therefore, instructing the jury on the carrier-passenger relationship and the degree of care required of a carrier was prejudicial error.

The weakness of this argument lies in the premise that he "obviously" was not a passenger. We can not say that as a matter of law. There was evidence for the jury to determine as a fact whether the passenger relationship still existed or not.

There was evidence that the bus was crowded with school children, some standing in the aisles. They were very noisy, there was quite a bit of yelling. The windows were open and children were leaning out the windows. The bus stopped and plaintiff got out the back door. The front end of the bus was a foot or two from the curb, the back was about five feet from the curb. Plaintiff, when he alighted, started to walk alongside and waived to his boy friends when one of the boys, leaning out of a window, grabbed plaintiff's hand and in a couple of seconds the bus started. He was a foot or two from the bus at the time. Plaintiff then fell and the bus ran over his foot. The bus driver, who had had this school bus for some time, admitted the windows could have been open and that children could have been riding with their heads out of the windows. He had seen them doing it before. It was a usual occurrence for the children to do so. The children on the bus yelled to the driver to stop (immediately after the accident), a fact which the driver denied.

[4] This evidence presented a question for determination by the jury: Did the minor plaintiff have a reasonable opportunity to leave the bus, had he safely left the bus, when the accident occurred, Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland T. Rys., 182 Cal. 93, 98-101, 187 P. 2? Had plaintiff reached a place outside the sphere of any activity of the carrier which might reasonably constitute a mobile hazard to him as a passenger, Dayton v. Yellow Cab Co., 85 Cal.App.2d 740, 745, 193 P.2d 959?

In cases upon which defendant relies, it either clearly appeared, or the trier of the facts had found upon sufficient evidence, that the passenger had reached a place outside the sphere of danger: Choquette v. Key System Transit Lines, 118 Cal.App. 643, 5 P.2d 921, passenger had left street car and walked to a train crossing, where she was hit by a train; McAlpine v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 67 Cal.App.2d 486, 154 P.2d 911, passenger had alighted, stepped into a loading zone and walked 50 feet to front end of zone; MacLean v. City & County of San Francisco, 127 Cal.App.2d 263, 273 P.2d 698, passenger, after alighting, stepped upon a slippery substance on the street and fell. Cary v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 157 Cal. 599, 108 P. 682, 27 L.R.A.,N.S., 764, is inapplicable because defendant was not negligent. The motorman started in response to an unauthorized bell signal rung by a passenger, which the conductor immediately countermanded.

[5] Moreover, defendant is not in a position to complain, for upon its request the court gave two instructions upon this very subject. (See cases collected in 4 Cal.Jur. 2d 422 at 423, Appeal and Error, § 557.)

[6] (4) Defendant complains of the refusal to give its instruction on "unavoidable or inevitable accident." The gist of the instruction was a definition of that term as simply denoting "an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence."

That subject was adequately covered by instructions which the court gave on "negligence" and "proximate cause." As said in Parker v. Womack, 37 Cal.2d 116, 230 P.2d 823, "if the accident was inevitable or unavoidable that is the same thing as to say that the defendant was not negligent, or that his negligence, if any, did not cause the accident. In other words, it is to say that the plaintiff has failed in his proof." 37 Cal.2d at pages 121-122, 230 P.2d at page 826, quoting an earlier case. See also Johnston v. Orlando, 131 Cal.App.2d 705, 711-712, 281 P.2d 357.

(5) Defendant claims, also, prejudicial error in the court's refusal to give its proffered instruction on proximate cause, but the subject matter of that instruction was fully and adequately covered by instructions which the court did give.

The judgment is affirmed.

Nov. 9, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of murder. The Superior Court, Tuolumne County, J. A. Smith, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that victim's statements, which were made in response to questions over a considerable period of time and at indefinite period after shooting and which contain material which might be inferred to have been defensive in respect to possible burglary charge against victim should not have been received as spontaneous statements.

Judgment and order reversed.

1. Criminal Law — 366(6)

In murder prosecution, victim's statements, which were made in response to questions over a considerable period of time and at indefinite period after shooting and which contain material which might be inferred to have been defensive in respect to possible burglary charge against victim, should not have been received as spontaneous declarations.

2. Criminal Law — 735(1)

A trial court's ruling admitting extrajudicial statements as spontaneous declarations is preliminary only, and jury must ascertain ultimate fact of admissibility before it can consider the evidence.

3. Criminal Law §363

Homicide §200

Both spontaneous declarations and dying declarations, if conditions for admission are found to exist, may be received as exceptions from exclusionary hearsay rule.

4. Homicide §218

It is the function of the trial court primarily to pass upon admissibility of alleged dying declarations, and function of jury to determine whether they were in fact made under a sense of impending death, and, if so, then to determine the credibility and weight to which they are entitled.

5. Criminal Law §777

In murder prosecution, wherein certain of victim's statements were admitted as spontaneous declarations, trial court erred in failing to submit to jury under appropriate instructions the ultimate determination as to admissibility of such statements, with instructions that jury was to disregard statements if it determined them not to have been spontaneous declarations.

6. Homicide §218

In murder prosecution, wherein certain statements of victim were admitted as spontaneous declarations and there was no testimony that they were made while victim was under a sense of impending death, submitting issue as to whether statements constituted dying declarations was error, even though both state and the defendant requested the submission.

7. Homicide §203(1), 214(1)

Where there was no showing, in murder prosecution, that victim, at time he made statements, knew his condition or believed he had been mortally wounded, and statements themselves indicated that they may have been made to shield himself from consequences of a charge that he had stolen money from defendant, statements were not admissible as dying declarations.

8. Criminal Law §1137(2)

It is not every case in which invited error will free trial from challenge when such error caused or contributed to a miscarriage of justice.

9. Witnesses §257

A writing used to refresh recollection of a witness does not by such use become itself admissible as evidence.

10. Criminal Law §1169(1)

Witnesses §257

In murder prosecution, wherein police officer testified that his testimony concerning witnesses' statements was based in part on recollection and in part on his unofficial written report, the written report, which officer used to refresh his memory, was not admissible, and its admission was prejudicial.

11. Criminal Law §406(2)

Where defendant in murder prosecution was held four days without being advised of his right to a hearing or right to counsel, and was interrogated during this period, and then taken before coroner's inquest and there, after being advised that district attorney was his attorney, was questioned, and subsequently was held until he was produced before grand jury, admission of evidence of defendant's statements at inquest violated defendant's constitutional right not to be compelled to be a witness against himself.

James R. Hardin, Sonora, Edmund L. Gorgas, Modesto, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was indicted by the grand jury of Tuolumne County under a charge of murdering one Raymond T. Etherton. He was tried and the jury found him guilty of murder of the second degree. He appeals from the judgment, which followed and from the order denying him a new trial.

We may say generally that it was the theory of appellant that on the occasion of the killing Etherton had burglariously entered appellant's domicile and was in the act of stealing money; that whatever wounds appellant inflicted upon Etherton were inflicted at that time and place and that, under the circumstances, the homicide was justifiable. It was the theory of the prosecution that, although some shots had been fired in appellant's domicile, nevertheless no serious wounds had been then inflicted and that Etherton had left the domicile and been gone therefrom for some time when appellant followed him and fired the fatal shots without excuse or justification. There is in the record substantial evidence in accordance with the theory of the prosecution, which supports the judgment. There is also substantial evidence in the record which supports the theory and the defense of appellant. The errors complained of have to do with the admission of evidence and with instructions given, and these errors are claimed to have been magnified in legal effect by the denial to appellant of his constitutional rights. We agree with appellant that the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed.

In order to present the assignments of error we think it necessary to state the pertinent evidence substantially in the order in which it was introduced in the trial court. By stipulation a map was received which shows the following physical facts concerning the scene of the crime: As one leaves the City of Sonora on highway 108 and travels north he passes the intersection of a road leading to the east. At a distance of 980 feet from the highway on that intersecting road is a place called "Indian Camp". At that point defendant, hereinafter called "appellant", lived in a trailer house owned by him. Etherton lived in a lean-to contiguous to appellant's trailer. Along the westerly side of the highway there is an abrupt upslope or bank with a height varying from four to ten feet.

A Doctor Boice was called. He had performed an autopsy upon the body of Etherton. He testified that he observed on the body the following bullet wounds: One bullet had entered at the left side below the rib cage, traversed upward and to the spine and had shattered into small bits when it contacted the spinal column. It had passed through several loops of intestines on the way. Another bullet had entered below the rib cage, had gone through the liver, severing the main branch of the hepatic artery and had lodged back of the liver. Two other bullets had inflicted only flesh wounds. There was also a large stellate lesion on the forehead of the decedent, presenting a jagged, torn area. Its appearance indicated that it had been made by some type of blunt instrument or, as the witness stated, "it looked like a rock * * * like something a rock had produced." The witness said that, considering that the body of decedent was found on the highway 980 feet from the trailer, he could have walked or run from the trailer house to the highway, although he would have been in great pain; that such a journey would be improbable but not impossible; that he would have been bleeding profusely; that the witness had found two quarts of free blood in the abdominal cavity; that when an artery of that size is bleeding it is improbable that a man would go very far; that if he ran or walked the exertion would increase the flow of blood from the wound. The witness said further that either of the two abdominal wounds could have caused death; that from the wound which perforated the bowel death would be expected within 24 hours, but that, considering the wound that severed the hepatic artery, it would be inconsistent with probability "that he would have lived at all." Said the doctor: "With either [wound] it was unlikely for him to live over 10 to 15 minutes, half an hour at the longest, even if he were lying down." The foregoing testimony was given on direct. On cross-examination the witness testified as follows: With respect to the wound which severed the hepatic artery he would doubt that Etherton could have walked more than a few steps, and that from the loss of blood he would not have expected him to live very long and would say he would go into such profuse shock that he wouldn't be able to walk; that he would pass right out; that he doubted if with that wound he could walk the length of the court room in which the trial was held; that he would go into shock; that notwithstanding all that, it might be possible to walk a greater distance as sometimes under such circumstances humans will do very remarkable things; that the witness doubted it would be possible for Etherton to walk 980 feet with the amount of blood he had lost since blood pours out rapidly from a blood vessel like the hepatic artery and the victim would go into shock in 2 or 3 minutes at the very minimum—profound shock. The witness' attention was called to his testimony at the coroner's inquest preceding the trial in which he stated that in his opinion it would be possible for Etherton to have walked appreciable distances, although awfully hard. Said the witness: "It would be awfully hard for him to walk with this one [the wound that severed the artery], but I suppose he did." The witness said that with the wound that severed the bowels, it would have been difficult for him to have walked any appreciable distance, but he could have done it; that it wasn't absolutely impossible. Said the witness after reading his previous testimony: I couldn't say it is absolutely impossible. Like I said there, I think it's highly unlikely a man could walk that far." Concerning the stellate wound upon Etherton's forehead, the witness said he thought it could not have been caused by falling and hitting his head on the ground, although if he pitched down a bank it could have happened; that in his opinion a blunt instrument had been used to inflict that wound.

The Sonora Chief of Police testified. He said they had arrested the appellant at his trailer house and that a search of the trailer house disclosed a wallet containing something over $60, and a second wallet with $1 in it; that, although they had found a bullet hole in the wall of the trailer and several spent cartridge cases and a rifle, they found no bloodstains; that going down the road toward the highway, which road was wet and muddy, they had found no bloodstains until near, and upon, the highway.

Two men, a Mr. Johnson and a Mr. Bezemer, at 5 o'clock on the morning of the homicide had left Sonora and just before reaching the intersection of the state highway with the side road had observed in the darkness what appeared to be the figure of a human being lying on the side of the road. Another figure appeared to be bending over it. They passed the spot and then determined to return and investigate. They then saw the figure of Etherton on the highway and observed, upon the bank, another person, who quickly disappeared. Johnson was the first of the two to testify. He said that he observed the two figures on the highway, one bending over the other and when he had turned his car about and come back to the scene the one that had been standing was on the bank. He could not say whether that person was large or small or whether it was a man or a woman, although it looked to be a man. The figure wore a long brown coat, but he couldn't tell whether it was a raincoat or an overcoat, it was so dark. He had not noticed whether the figure wore a hat or not and he had not had a look at the features. He said he could not recall anything except that it was someone dressed in a long coat who was on the bank. He said he had asked Etherton as he lay on the road if he had been run over and Etherton replied "No" and said he had been shot. The witness then told Bezemer to stay there while he went to get the police. He drove to Sonora and after the police arrived he left the scene. He had observed a rock about a foot from Etherton's body and saw no other rocks in the immediate area. On cross-examination he said as to the person he had seen standing over Etherton that he could not tell whether he was tall or short, heavy or slight. Bezemer next took the stand and testified much as had Johnson. He had seen the figure which had been bending over Etherton, going up the bank. He said the figure wore a long overcoat; that he couldn't swear it was a man; he couldn't recollect the color of the overcoat, nor identify the coat as the coat of appellant which was shown to him. He spoke to Etherton and asked him what had happened. At this point counsel for appellant objected that no proper foundation had been laid to introduce any statement of Etherton. Said the court: "Are you going to introduce a dying declaration?" Prosecuting attorney: "Not at this time, Your Honor. [Counsel for Appellant]: The answer would be hearsay, except only a dying declaration. The Court: I think it would be hearsay unless you are going to introduce a dying declaration. [The Prosecuting Attorney]: We'll just wait then." After a few questions had been asked and answered, the court, interrupting the examination, said: "It might be part of the res gestae. I think it probably would be. I think I'm going to reverse myself if he wishes to ask that question. I'm going to reverse that. Mr. Bezemer would you state what the person on the road said to you? [To defendant's counsel]: That may go in over your objection." The witness said he had asked Etherton what had happened and Etherton had said: "I been shot". Said the court: "I think you ought to ask him to give all the conversation. A. I said 'Who shot you?' He said 'Frank.' I said, 'where does he live?' He said 'lives in a trailer court, Indian Trailer Court, or something like that.' Q. Did he say how long he had been out on the road? A. He said between two and half to three hours." The witness said that while he talked to Etherton nothing was said as to where Etherton had been when he was shot and that the witness had not asked him that.

The next witness whose testimony is pertinent here was one of the two officers whom Johnson had summoned. The officers had come together. Kalakian was the superior and a police sergeant of the Sonora Police Department. His companion, Shelton, was a patrolman. Kalakian said that they found Etherton "lying there [in the road] in a lot of blood. He was covered with blood." The following then occurred:

"Q. Now, did you talk to the man at all on the road? A. I did.

"Q. And what did he say to you? A. I asked him what happened to him.

"[Counsel for Appellant]: I take it we can make the same objection and have the same exception?

"The Court: I will overrule the objection."

The witness then stated that he had asked Etherton what had happened and had been told that he had been shot. The witness continued: "I said 'how many times and where?' He said 'Three times in the guts.' I said, 'Who shot you?' He said, 'Frank.' I said 'Frank who?' He said, 'I don't know his last name.' I said, 'Where does he live?'

He says, 'He lives in a trailer house in the Indian Camp.' When I got that information, I asked, 'What else happened?' He said, 'Then he tried to finish me off with a rock, bash me in the head with a rock, finish me off.' Officer Shelton was there. He kept questioning him while I went to telephone for the ambulance." He stated that Etherton was still conscious when he returned, but he remembered no further statements. "Q. How long was it from the time you summoned the ambulance until the man was taken away by the ambulance? A. Not very long. I would say ten or fifteen minutes possibly. Q. Was the man conscious at the time he was loaded into the ambulance? A. He was." On cross-examination he added: "One thing I forgot to mention. I said, 'why did he shoot you?' He said, 'He claimed I robbed him of $80.00, but I didn't.' Q. He mentioned a figure? A. Yes. Q. $80.00? A. Yes." When asked if Etherton mentioned where he, Etherton, had been when the shooting took place, the witness said he remembered nothing of that. On redirect he supplemented Etherton's statement by saying that Etherton had told him appellant had shot him with a pistol. Officer Shelton followed Kalakian to the stand. He said Etherton was lying on a rock that was covered with blood. He was then asked to relate the conversation he had with Etherton. No further objection was made at that time to the introduction of that evidence. Shelton testified as follows: "Well, the first thing that was asked him was 'What happened?' And he said that he had been shot, and then he was asked 'Where?' and he said 'In the guts.' And 'how many times?' and he said 'Three times,' and then he was asked 'Who shot you?' and he said, 'Frank.' The next question was 'Frank who?' and he didn't know the last name. He said, 'I don't know', and then the next question was 'Where does Frank live?' and his answer was 'In the Indian Camp in a trailer house.'" Said the witness: "There is one thing I would like to add there. When he said he was shot, he said, 'and he tried to finish me off with a rock in the head.'" The witness said that when Etherton was asked what he had been shot with he said he had been shot with a pistol and when asked where he was when he had been shot Ether-ton replied that he had been in bed when he was shot. On cross-examination the witness stated with regard to elapsed time that he and Kalakian had been contacted in front of the Sonora Inn at 5:10 A.M., December 5, 1954; that when the ambulance was called it was 5:15; that the ambulance arrived at 5:28; that Etherton was alive when he entered the ambulance.

In a statement made by officers Kalakian and Shelton to Police Chief Campbell, which report, signed by both officers, was later introduced into evidence upon the theory that it constituted past recollection recorded, there was the following statement: "The victim was lying in a pool of blood, and good deal of smeared blood near where his pants was found. The pants was also soaked with blood. A bloody rock was found under the victim's left hip, with which the victim claimed Frank had used to beat him on the head, trying to finish him off."

We think the court erred in admitting in evidence the statements of Etherton, and that nothing occurred thereafter to cure the error. As we have noted, when the subject was first touched upon counsel for the appellant objected that the statements were hearsay unless brought within the dying declaration exception to the hearsay rule. This objection was sustained by the court. Quickly thereafter, however, the court announced that it would permit the statements as being part of the "res gestae". By this we feel sure the court referred to spontaneous declarations, rather than verbal acts. Wigmore, 3rd ed., Vol. 6, sec. 1745, at page 132, discusses the distinction and quotes the following from Keefe v. State, 50 Ariz. 293, 72 P.2d 425, 427:

"There has been such a confusion of ideas and such indiscriminate use of the words 'res gestae' that it is almost impossible, on reading the decisions involving this question, to discover the real extent of the exceptions and the principles involved therein. The phrase 'res gestae' means literally 'the thing done' and it is used in law as meaning the circumstances which are the automatic and undesigned incidents of the particular act in issue, and which are admissible in evidence when illustrative and explanatory of the act.

* * * The phrase is frequently applied to statements or explanations made in regard to an act in question by witnesses thereof. Such statements or explanations, however, are properly divided into two classes, and the admissibility of the respective classes is based upon entirely different principles of law and logic. They may be defined as 'spontaneous exclamations' and 'verbal acts.' It is generally due to a confusion of these two classes of evidence and the principles governing their admissibility that the conflict between the many apparently irreconcilable decisions has arisen.

"A spontaneous exclamation may be defined as a statement or exclamation made immediately after some exciting occasion by a participant or spectator and asserting the circumstances of that occasion as it is observed by him. The admissibility of such exclamation is based on our experience that, under certain external circumstances of physical or mental shock, a stress of nervous excitement may be produced in a spectator which stills the reflective faculties and removes their control, so that the utterance which then occurs is a spontaneous and sincere response to the actual sensations and perceptions already produced by the external shock. Since this utterance is made under the immediate and uncontrolled domination of the senses, rather than reason and reflection, and during the brief period when consideration of self-interest could not have been fully brought to bear, the utterance may be taken as expressing the real belief of the speaker as to the facts just observed by him. * * *

"Verbal acts are utterances which accompany some act or conduct to which it is desired to give a legal effect. When such act has intrinsically no definite legal significance, or only an ambiguous one, its legal purport or tenor may be ascertained by considering the words accompanying it, and these utterances thus enter merely as a verbal part of the act. * * *

As to the conditions under which spontaneous declarations may be admitted, the authority referred to says in section 1749, at page 139:

"* * * [T]he statement must have been made under circumstances calculated to give some special trustworthiness to it, and thus to justify us in exempting it from the ordinary test of cross-examination on the stand. This principle is represented, in the present Exception [spontaneous statements], by the phrase, often repeated, that the statement must from the circumstances 'derive a degree of credit independently of the declaration', i. e. other than the faith to be given to an ordinary extrajudicial assertion. This circumstantial guarantee here consists in the consideration, already noted (ante, sec. 1747), that in the stress of nervous excitement the reflective faculties may be stilled and the utterance may become the unreflecting and sincere expression of one's actual impressions and belief. The utterance, it is commonly said, must be 'spontaneous', 'natural', 'impulsive', 'instinctive', 'generated by an excited feeling which extends without let or break-down from the moment of the event they illustrate.' * * *

After quoting from many decisions, Professor Wigmore (sec. 1750, p. 142 et seq.) summarizes as follows:

"From the judicial expositions the following limitations, and these only, may legitimately be deduced:

"(a) Nature of the occasion. There must be some occurrence, startling enough to produce this nervous excitement and render the utterance spontaneous and unreflecting. * * *

* * * * *

"(b) Time of the utterance. The utterance must have been before there has been time to contrive and misrepresent, i. e. while the nervous excitement may be supposed still to dominate and the reflective powers to be yet in abeyance. This limitation is in practice the subject of most of the rulings.

* * * * *

"Furthermore, there can be no definite and fixed limit of time. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances: * * *

"Thus the application of the principle thus depends entirely on the circumstances of each case.

* * * * *

"(c) Subject of the utterance. The utterance must relate to the circumstances of the occurrence preceding it."

[1] As we have noted, the trial court admitted Etherton's statements over objection and at a time when it had before it only the bare facts that Etherton had been killed by gunfire, and the testimony of the autopsy surgeon which indicated that in the witness' opinion little time elapsed between the entrance of the bullet that severed the hepatic artery and ensuing profound shock and death. The witness' testimony on this did not exclude the possibility of the lapse of considerable time. Before admitting the extrajudicial statements it was the duty of the trial court to preliminarily go into and receive available evidence touching the quality of the statements as coming within the spontaneous statement exception to the hearsay rule. This was not done and over objection the conversations held with Etherton were admitted. Twice the objection was made and twice it was overruled. While it was not repeated as to succeeding witnesses, it is not to be held that the objection was thereby waived. Without there being any attempt to qualify the hearsay statements, other than such qualification as was furnished by the testimony of the autopsy surgeon, the extrajudicial statements were admitted as spontaneous declarations. The statements themselves contained much from which it could be inferred that they were not qualified as spontaneous declarations. They were made in response to questions; they were made over a considerable period of time; they indicated at least this much reflection, that when Etherton was asked why appellant had shot him he had replied that appellant claimed he, Etherton, had robbed him of $80, but that the charge was not true. It certainly could be inferred from the defensive matter included in Etherton's extrajudicial statements that he was protecting himself from a charge that might be made that he had burglariously entered the trailer house of appellant with intent to rob him. If there had been an inquiry into the qualifications of the extrajudicial statements as being either dying declarations or spontaneous declarations, the matters later appearing in the case would have been revealed. It would have been revealed that Etherton had said he had been shot in bed, by which he must have meant his bed in the lean-to contiguous to appellant's trailer, indicating again a considered defensive statement against a possible charge of burglarious entry. On this point it is the claim of the prosecution that Etherton could not have been shot, as he said he was, in his bed. In short, the prosecution finds itself arguing that there was fabrication in fact in Etherton's extrajudicial statements. It would have been further revealed that Etherton said he had been lying on the highway for two and a half to three hours, a period of time affording ample opportunity for reflection and for fabrication. Etherton's statements also conflict with the inferences to be drawn from the autopsy surgeon's testimony as to the length of time Etherton could have lived and spoken after the severance of the hepatic artery. If it be considered that he falsified when he said he had been shot in his bed, then he had had time enough to fabricate, for fabricate he did. We think from a consideration of all of the testimony in the record when the ruling was made that the extrajudicial statements of Etherton should not have been received.

[2-4] When at the close of the evidence the cause was submitted to the jury all of the evidence we have related touching the admitted statements as properly qualified spontaneous statements had been received. The question of whether or not these statements qualified as spontaneous declarations was clearly and seriously at issue. Research has not disclosed any ruling by the appellate courts of this state on the subject of whether or not, when conflicting evidence has been received or conflicting inferences can be drawn touching the matter of qualification of spontaneous statements, the ruling of the trial court admitting the statements is final, or, on the contrary, whether or not that issue must be resolved by the jury under instructions by the court defining spontaneous declarations and telling the jury how they are to determine whether or not the statements were qualified; and that if they find them not to have been qualified they are to disregard them. However, we think the issue must be submitted to the jury. We think the ruling of the trial court is preliminary only and that the jury must ascertain the ultimate fact of admissibility before it can consider the evidence. We can see no difference between the issue of admissibility of spontaneous declarations and the issue of admissibility of dying declarations. Both sorts of declarations can only be admitted as exceptions from the exclusionary hearsay rule. Both sorts of declarations are hearsay and both, if the conditions for admission are found to exist, may nevertheless be received in evidence. The proper procedure as to dying declarations and the rule as to who shall ultimately determine if the declarations are dying declarations is well settled in this state. In People v. Rulia Singh, 182 Cal. 457, 476, 188 P. 987, 995, it is said:

"The weight of authority in respect to the relative functions of the court and the jury touching the admission and determination of dying declarations is that the court alone shall pass on the admissibility of this character of evidence, and that the jury shall exclusively determine its probative value. * * * Whatever the law may be in other jurisdictions, it is well settled in this state that it is the function of the trial court primarily to pass upon the admissibility of the alleged dying declarations and of the jury to determine whether they were in fact made under a sense of impending death, and, if so, then to determine the credibility and weight to which they are entitled. If the jury is not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the declarant was in extremis and believed at the time that he was, they must, in arriving at their verdict, disregard such declarations. But if, on the other hand, the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the declarant acted under a sense of impending death, they must then determine what facts, if any, are established by his declarations and apply them accordingly. People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32; People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 P. 11; People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 P. 435; People v. Proffumo, 23 Cal.App. 376, 138 P. 109; Greenleaf on Evidence, § 161."

[5] Under the circumstances, therefore, we hold that it was incumbent upon the trial judge, having admitted the statements, to submit to the jury under appropriate instructions the ultimate determination as admissibility with instructions that they were to disregard the statements if they determined them not to have been spontaneous declarations. This was not done.

Upon the subject we have just been discussing the record presents a puzzling situation. Although the statements of Etherton made to the two arriving witnesses and to the two officers and containing so much that was damaging to appellant were by the trial court ruled out when first offered as constituting dying declarations and then admitted upon the theory that they were spontaneous declarations, yet both sides requested that the court give to the jury the instruction found in CALJIC and therein appearing as Number 330, reading as follows:

"Evidence has been received tending to show that the deceased made a statement concerning the circumstances under which he received the injuries which later caused his death. The evidence of that statement may not be considered and must be entirely disregarded by you unless you find from all the pertinent evidence that at the time the deceased made the statement, he was under a sense of impending death, that he then believed that he was going to die from the injuries thus inflicted, and that he then had no hope of recovery from such injuries. If the statement was made under the conditions I have specified, the jury may and ought to consider it as evidence,

* * *"

If this instruction had been given at the request of the People only, error would have to be declared because the objection of the defense that the declarations of Etherton had not been qualified as dying statements had been sustained by the court. And since thereafter no further attention was paid to the statements as perhaps constituting dying declarations the defense had had no opportunity to present evidence bearing upon the nonexistence of a belief upon the part of Etherton that his death impended and that he had no hope of recovery. But the defense also asked that the same instruction be given. What occasioned this mutual request does not appear in the record.

[6-8] It was error for the trial court to submit to the jury the issue as to whether or not the statements admitted in evidence constituted dying declarations of Etherton. Whenever a dying declaration is offered in evidence the burden is cast upon the one offering the same to establish primarily that it possesses the qualifications of such a declaration. To do this the offeror must establish that the declaration was made under a sense of impending death, that the declarant believed he was going to die from his injuries and had no present hope of recovery therefrom. Preliminarily, it is for the court to determine the admissibility of the proposed declaration and it is the duty of the court to inquire into the facts and circumstances under which the declaration was made and to offer opportunity, if requested, to the party opposing the admission of the declaration to disprove its admissibility. In this case the only time when the question of the admissibility of Etherton's statements as dying declarations was questioned the court sustained defense objections that they were not admissible. Certainly it could not be said that at that time the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the statements were not admissible as dying declarations. It had before it only the testimony of the doctor that in his opinion Etherton was gravely wounded and probably would soon, after receiving the wound that severed the hepatic artery, pass into profound shock and speedily expire. There was no other attempt by the prosecution to prove that Etherton knew his condition or that he believed he had been mortally wounded. And the prosecution acquiesced in the court's ruling. When the statements had been received they themselves afforded much persuasion that he did not know of the gravity of his wounds and he did not believe that he was about to expire, much less that he had no hope of recovery, for, as we have noted, his statements were those of a man seeking to shield himself from the consequences of appellant's charge that he had stolen money from appellant. We have no hesitancy in declaring that at the close of the evidence, and as a matter of law, the statements of Etherton could not be considered as dying declarations. It was, therefore, error to tell the jury that they could independently pass upon that issue and from the evidence could determine that his statements were dying declarations and so determining could consider them as evidence in the cause, testing their credibility, of course, under the rules given them for that purpose and applicable to all evidence before them. But, as we have said, both the prosecution and the defense requested the court to give this instruction and, therefore, it is apparent that the error, so far as the defense be concerned, is open to the charge that it was invited error of which they cannot complain. Nevertheless, error is nonetheless error and is no less operative on deliberations of the jury because the erroneous instruction may have been requested by counsel for the defense. After all, it is the life and liberty of the defendant in a case such as this that is at hazard in the trial and there is a continuing duty upon the part of the trial court to see to it that the jury are properly instructed upon all matters pertinent to their decision of the cause. It is not every case in which invited error will free the trial from the challenge that such error caused or contributed to a miscarriage of justice. The jury were told that it was for them to determine whether or not they were dying declarations. We cannot say, as a reviewing court, that the jury may not, incapable as they were of testing these statements by the somewhat technical rules of law governing their admission, have considered them to be such, and if they did, then there was injected into the trial considerations that ought not to have been before the jury. In summation upon this matter of the statements of Etherton, it is our view that these statements ought not to have been introduced in the cause either as dying declarations or as spontaneous declarations and that their injection into the cause must have been seriously detrimental to appellant's defense.

[9] Appellant contends that the trial court committed prejudicial error in admitting into evidence the written report which the two investigating officers made to their chief. We think this contention must be sustained. This document was admitted after cross-examination of officer Shelton, the last to testify of the four witnesses who saw Etherton as he lay upon the highway. The two arriving witnesses, Johnson and Bezemer, had said that they could not by any means describe the figure they had seen stooping over Etherton and later ascending and disappearing over the bank of the highway; that they could not be certain whether it was a man or a woman they had seen and could only say that it wore a long overcoat. They had given their reasons for this, that is, that it was dark, they did not get a good look, and were concerned with the man lying in the road. Of course, and properly enough, neither of the officers testified that either Johnson or Bezemer had made statements to them contradictory to their direct statements on the stand, nor was any effort made to impeach either Johnson or Bezemer upon the ground that he had made such statements. Nevertheless, the typewritten and signed report which the two officers gave to their chief contained this matter: "Mr. Harry Johnson stated that he saw a man running from the scene when they first discovered the victim.

Mr. Johnson described the man as being elderly, slender built, and wearing glasses." Appellant was an elderly, slender man who wore glasses, and the sentence we have quoted from the typewritten report was the only evidence of a descriptive nature that identified appellant with the figure seen bending over Etherton. Appellant denied that he had approached Etherton on the highway or that he had been the person seen climbing the bank and disappearing from the roadway. When counsel for the appellant cross-examined officer Shelton he sought to develop that there were certain things testified to by him that had been omitted from his official report, and Shelton, evading this charge of omission, stated that the things inquired about had been contained in his unofficial typewritten report to the police chief; that he had this typewritten report in his pocket where he had had it for several days and that the matters inquired about did appear in that report. On counsel's request the officer produced the report and counsel called his attention to the sentence containing the detailed description of appellant which we have quoted above. The following occurred:

"Q. I want you to read to yourself, if you will, this paragraph right there, starting 'Mr. Harry Johnson' and ending with that word. Just read it to yourself if you will. A. Yes, sir, that is what he said.

"Q. What you have got here in this report is this: 'Mr. Harry Johnson stated that he saw a man running from the scene when they first discovered the victim. Mr. Johnson described the man as being elderly, slender built, and wearing glasses.' That is tailor-made for this defendant, isn't it? A. It could be.

"Q. Tailor-made—slight, elderly, and wearing glasses. A. It could fit him.

"Q. It sure could, couldn't it? As a matter of fact, Mr. Johnson didn't tell you any one of the things in the report. A. Yes. He said he was wearing a long overcoat, and if I've got it in the report, he must have said something about the rest of it.

"Q. He doesn't say one word in your description about a long overcoat, and you told me a minute ago the best description he could give was a man wearing a long overcoat. A. Yes. I remember that long overcoat.

"Q. You told me just a little while ago he didn't mention any of these things about being elderly, or slightly built, or wearing glasses. Isn't that a fact—about two minutes ago? A. I said I didn't remember, I believe. I think I said I didn't recall that."

Upon redirect the prosecuting attorney offered the report in evidence as an exhibit upon the basis that it represented past recollection recorded. Its receipt into evidence was objected to upon the ground that it was hearsay; the objection was overruled and the document was received in evidence. A writing used to refresh the recollection of a witness does not by such use become itself admissible as evidence in the cause. In re Estate of Packer, 164 Cal. 525, 530, 129 P. 778, 780. We quote the following from that decision:

"* * * Even if it be assumed that the circumstances were such as to authorize the use of the letters to refresh the witness' recollection * * *, the party calling her was not thereby authorized to put the papers before the jury. Such a paper is 'in no sense testimony. * * * The opponent, but not the offering party, has a right to have the jury see it. * * * That the offering party has not the right to treat it as evidence, by reading it or showing it or handing it to the jury, is well established.' 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 763. And such seems to be the fair construction of section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which expressly declares the right of the adverse party to read the writing to the jury. * * * To permit this to be done by the party producing the witness would open the door to the admission of hearsay and manufactured evidence without limit." See also In re Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; People v. Lanterman, 9 Cal.App. 674, 100 P. 720; Hawkins v. Sanguinetti, 98 Cal.App.2d 278, 220 P.2d 58.

Seeking to justify the introduction of this document in evidence, the Attorney General here argues as follows: "The witness testified in effect that the contents of the report were accurate; that the report was made shortly after the occurrence of the offense related therein, and that at the time of the trial he had no independent recollection of the contents of the report. The rule is that a written memorandum which contains a statement of facts which were fresh in the writer's mind at the time [of] the memorandum may be introduced in evidence as past recollection recorded if the witness at the time of the trial testifies that after looking at the memoranda he is unable to refresh his memory therefrom and is unable to testify independently concerning the facts stated in the memorandum." We do not read the record as being in accord with these statements as to its contents nor as measuring up to the rule relied upon. The following occurred:

"Q. I will ask you this, Mr. Shelton. * * * How much of your testimony that you gave here in Court yesterday and today is based upon this report? A. Quite a bit of it.

"Q. How much of the testimony that you have given is based upon your independent recollection of events as they happened? A. I believe it's about half and half. * * *

"Q. How much of the testimony that you have given, Officer, relative to the statements of either the deceased or Mr. Keelin is based upon your accurate memory at this time of what happened, or upon any report you made, or any discussion you had with other officers? A. I tried not to talk about it to other people, because I don't think that's right—people that weren't involved in the case. * * *

"Q. You are quite sure all of these items you have mentioned here—this very definite description, was given to you on that morning by Mr. Johnson? A. That was given to Sergeant Kalakian and I.

"Q. You are quite sure? A. As far as I know, yes, sir.

"Q. Were you mistaken then in your testimony a little while ago when you stated

Mr. Johnson told you the man was going up the bank and had an overcoat on and he couldn't see much else because he went out of sight? A. I hadn't read that report for quite a while, so I didn't recall that.

"Q. How long has it been since you read the report? A. Two or three days. * * *

"Q. Now, Mr. Shelton, as I understand it, this all took place December 5. It's now March 3, is it not, or March 2, three months ago. A. Yes.

"Q. Now, when Mr. Gorgas [Counsel for appellant] talked to you about that and you got it out of your pocket and he mentioned the statement that Mr. Johnson had stated that he saw a slightly built man with glasses and a long coat leave and go up a bank, does that refresh your recollection? A. After I read this.

"Q. Do you now recall whether Mr. Johnson actually told you those things? A. The way I remember it he says that he may have been wearing glasses. He seen a flash or something of light. I don't recall the exact words, but I got it down in the report."

[10] In our view the foregoing will not support a claim that the witness had no recollection at the trial independently of the memorandum or of the contents thereof. The document was inadmissible and its admission may well have gravely prejudiced the defense. For instance, in addition to the paragraph in which was contained the description of the figure as being "elderly, slender built and wearing glasses" there was the following matter which had not been theretofore testified to: "A bloody rock was found under the victims left hip, with which the victim claimed Frank had used to beat him on the head, trying to finish him off." Up to that time and on this subject there had been testimony that Etherton had claimed Frank had tried to finish him off with a rock, but there had been none in which he referred to a certain bloody rock found under his left hip and identified as the rock with which appellant had tried to "finish him off." The significance of this additional hearsay statement not otherwise introduced in evidence can hardly be minimized when we recall again that it was the theory of the prosecution that the fatal shots had been fired and the beating had occurred after the affair in the trailer house had been closed out by the departure of Etherton, and at a time when appellant had followed Etherton down to the highway. It is also passing strange that if Etherton claimed that the bloody rock found under his left hip was the one with which he had been beaten by appellant, it was never brought to the trial and placed in evidence as an exhibit. Such treatment of the memorandum "spotlights" the direct testimony of its maker; and the memorandum may, along with other exhibits, find its way into the jury room and its effect thus be magnified out of all proportion to the oral testimony of the various witnesses.

[11] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence, over his objection, testimony given by him before the coroner's inquest. In examining this contention it should be stated that appellant was arrested early in the morning of December 5th and was kept in custody until the inquest was held on December 9th at 7:30 in the evening. During that time he had asked for and had been denied counsel. He was produced at the coroner's inquest by the officers in whose custody he had remained, was sworn as a witness and questioned at considerable length by the sheriff, by the district attorney and by one or more coroner's jurors. He had at no time been informed of his right to counsel nor had he been taken before a magistrate who might inform him thereof. In fact, he testified that it was during this period he demanded to be allowed to have an attorney and was told by his custodians that the district attorney was his attorney. There appears to be no denial in the record that this occurred. During the trial the People called the sheriff to the stand and began to question him concerning statements made by appellant at the inquest. Objection was made, based on the facts and circumstances we have related, that to permit these statements to be used would violate the appellant's constitutional right not to be compelled to be a witness against himself. The objection was overruled. Although a transcript of the testimony before the coroner was not admitted in evidence, the sheriff was questioned at some length as to the questions asked the appellant at that inquest and as to the appellant's answers to the questions. There can be no doubt from the record that a great deal of his testimony before the coroner was thus introduced into the record, it being the theory of the district attorney that the objection was not good as against admissions. He said, "It was my understanding admissions could be introduced even if extracted by force." The use of these statements was error. The matter is covered by the case of People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 61, 130 P. 1042, 1044. In that case the statements used were elicited from the defendant when he had been taken before a grand jury. We see no difference in so far as the protection of the Constitution be concerned. The Supreme Court said:

"This testimony should not have been admitted. The course pursued was in violation of the constitutional right of every person not to 'be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself.' Const. Cal., art. 1, § 13. The defendant could not, of course, have been called and required to testify against himself at the trial. The guaranty against being so compelled would be of little value if the same result could be attained by the indirect method of compelling him to testify at some antecedent step of the proceedings against him, and then offering in evidence his statements so extracted. We do not mean to suggest that under no circumstances can testimony given by a person before a grand jury be given in evidence in a subsequent trial of a criminal charge against him. The Constitution protects a person from being compelled to be a witness against himself. If, at the time he appears, no accusation, formal or informal, has been made against him, he does not in testifying become a witness against himself. Or if, even though charged with crime, he voluntarily gives evidence against himself, his rights are not infringed by the use of such evidence thereafter. These distinctions are well illustrated by a series of New York cases [citing cases], the result of which is summed up in People v. Molineux, 168 N.Y. [264] 331, 61 N.E. [286] 308, 62 L.R.A. 193, in these words: 'When a person testified at an inquest as an accused or arrested party, his testimony cannot be used against him upon a subsequent trial of an indictment growing out of the inquest, unless his testimony has been voluntarily given after he has been fully advised of his rights and has been given an opportunity to avail himself of them.' Here the defendant when brought before the grand jury was in custody under an accusation of guilt of the crime under investigation. Taken into the presence of that body by the sheriff, sworn and examined without the aid of counsel, and without any instruction as to his rights, it cannot be said that his submission to the interrogation was in any fair sense voluntary. The great preponderance of authority is that testimony so given by a defendant is not to be used against him."

It has been frequently held that a defendant, subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury, who appeared and answered questions in regard to matters on which he was later indicted could have the indictment quashed on application to the court because it was deemed that being subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury investigating a charge or a proposed charge against him was such compulsion that the Constitution was violated. These cases are collated in an annotation appearing in 38 A.L.R.2d at pages 225, 300-301. We have no doubt that under the circumstances disclosed by this record the use of appellant's statements before the coroner at his trial was a violation of his constitutional rights. In saying this we consider what occurred after the coroner's inquest was held. When he testified before the coroner he had been in custody four days, during which time he had been frequently questioned by the police officers and by the district attorney. They continued to hold him in custody in violation of his right to be taken before a magistrate, to have an attorney and to be informed of his rights, for an additional 7 days, at which time he was taken before the grand jury and again examined by the district attorney and various grand jurors. During that examination he was questioned regarding inconsistencies between statements to the grand jury and statements he had made to the coroner. His indictment followed. Appellant did not seek to appear before either the coroner or the grand jury and it is apparent that he did no more than ignorantly submit to being haled about by his custodians. It was not until 12 days after his arrest and detention that he was arraigned in the superior court and counsel was appointed to represent him.

Appellant contends that his long detention without benefit of counsel and his being compelled to testify against himself before the coroner and before the grand jury while that body was investigating the charge of murder proposed to be placed against him so prejudiced his defense as to amount to a denial of his constitutional right to due process. In addition to what has been heretofore discussed, appellant, in support of this contention, further argues that delay in obtaining counsel deprived him of any representative who could act in his behalf while the facts surrounding the killing of Etherton were still fresh. The truth of this observation cannot be denied. The purposes of the statutes which require that a person detained be taken before a magistrate at the earliest practicable moment which provide penalties if counsel be denied when counsel have been requested, and which punish a refusal to permit counsel to talk with the person detained, are all to provide early representation if it is desired. We think it highly improbable that, had appellant's request for counsel been heeded, he would have been a witness either before the coroner or before the grand jury. The conduct of the prosecuting attorney and of the police officers cannot be too strongly condemned in this respect. (It should be said here that the district attorney in office when these things happened was not in office when the trial was had.) It is altogether likely that had they kept their oaths to support the Constitution of this State and of the United States and had they kept their oaths to perform their duties under the law this trial would have had a different complexion. We cannot measure the prejudice to appellant; we cannot even say with certainty that prejudice was suffered; but we can be sure that such conduct will not receive the sanction of this Court.

For the reasons given, the judgment and the order appealed from are reversed.

PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

S. W. THEUS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5437.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 3, 1955.

Murder prosecution wherein defendant admitted altercation which resulted in fatality but contended that victim had pulled knife on him and that he had struck victim in self-defense. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., rendered judgment of conviction of murder in second degree, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §1159(2)

Reviewing court will not reverse judgment of conviction on ground of insufficiency of evidence unless upon record it can be found that sufficient facts could not have been found by trier of facts to warrant inference of guilt.

2. Criminal Law §554

In evaluating testimony of defendant accused of murder, trial judge was entitled to take into consideration defendant's interest in case.

3. Criminal Law §260(11)

Argument that witness in murder prosecution was biased in favor of victim and unworthy of belief was proper before trial court where it was trial judge's responsibility to pass upon credibility of witnesses and weight to be given to their testimony, but such argument was futile before reviewing court.

4. Criminal Law §260(11)

Truthfulness of testimony of defendant accused of murder first had to be accepted by trial judge, and argument on appeal from conviction that defendant's testimony alone created reasonable doubt as to his guilt and that such doubt should have been resolved in his favor, was without merit.

5. Criminal Law §260(11)

Where circumstances created conflict with testimony of defendant accused of murder as to whether defendant was belligerent party, trial judge's resolution of conflict was controlling on appeal from conviction.

6. Criminal Law §260(11)

On appeal from conviction, reviewing court was not permitted to reevaluate credibility of witnesses, reweigh evidence, and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by court below.

7. Homicide §244(1)

In murder prosecution wherein defendant admitted altercation resulting in fatality, but contended that victim had pulled knife on him and that he had struck victim in self-defense, evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction of murder in second degree.

FOX, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of murder in the second degree. His only ground for a reversal is the asserted insufficiency of the evidence. Examination of the record, however, in the light of applicable legal principles, fails to sustain his position.

Defendant and the victim, James Lord, had an altercation on Christmas Day, 1954. He hit Lord three times with a piece of iron pipe, thus causing the latter's death. Defendant plead self-defense on the claim that Lord attacked him with a knife.

Defendant spent the night before Christmas at the home of Miss Cary Williams and Henry Brown on East 99th Street, in Los Angeles. The victim, Lord, lived about a block away. Mattie Bursey, a friend of Miss Williams, roomed in Lord's house. On Christmas morning, at the request of Miss Williams, defendant went over to Lord's residence "to get some coffee from Mattie Bursey." Defendant arrived there between 6:30 and 7:00 o'clock. Upon asking for coffee, he was told by Miss Bursey that she had none. Defendant and Lord then engaged in an argument in the living room. Defendant, however, soon returned to the Williams-Brown address where he spent portions of the day. About 8:30 that morning, Miss Bursey visited her friend Miss Williams and stayed there the rest of the day. Some time before noon, Lord came to the Williams-Brown home. During the course of the day, both defendant and Lord consumed quantities of liquor and had an argument in which defendant used strong and abusive language toward Lord. As a result of his vituperative conduct, defendant was put out of the house. He later returned and was readmitted. Another argument ensued whereupon Harry Brown put defendant out of the house again. Defendant remained outside "walking up and down the south side of the street with what appeared to be a base ball bat in his hand * * *." He then left in his car but soon returned. He "came to the back of the porch" but Miss Williams would not let him in. He again drove away. Soon thereafter, Lord stated, "I'm going home" and left the Williams-Brown residence. Mattie Bursey then observed defendant following the route in his car that Lord had taken home. Sensing trouble, she ran after them and came upon the scene of the crime where she saw defendant standing over the victim's prostrate body with a club in his hand. This was on a vacant lot right off the sidewalk. Defendant then got into his car and drove away. The victim told the officers "that he had been attacked by a Mr. Theus." Defendant returned to the scene of the fight. Upon being hailed by the officers, he pulled over to the curb. He freely admitted the altercation, stating to the officers that Lord "pulled a knife on him" and that he struck Lord three blows in self-defense with a piece of pipe that he had in his car and which he showed to the officers.

Upon defendant's arrest, a two-bladed clasp knife was found in his hip pocket. He stated that "it was his." At the trial, however, defendant claimed that the knife found in his possession was taken by him from Lord. Miss Bursey, who had roomed at Lord's home for about three months, had never seen a pocket knife in his possession.

At the time of his arrest, defendant complained to the officer about a scratch on his neck. An inspection, however, by the officer failed to reveal any evidence of such a scratch.

The victim was a man about 59 years of age and weighed 127 pounds. Defendant was 38 years old and weighed 150 pounds.

[1] The law is settled that a reviewing court will not reverse a judgment of conviction on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence unless upon the record it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the trier of the facts to warrant the inference of guilt. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778.

Defendant takes the position that since there was no direct evidence to contradict his version of how the fight started and as to what occurred during the altercation, the trial court should have found him not guilty. True there was no eye witness to the fight.

But there were circumstances that inculpated defendant. He admitted hitting the victim three times with a piece of pipe. He was found standing over decedent's prostrate body with what was described as a club in his hand. The victim told the officer that defendant attacked him. Defendant had assumed a vituperative and belligerent attitude toward the victim earlier in the day. Following this incident and prior to the fatal fight, defendant was seen walking up and down the street in front of the house where the victim was and from which he (defendant) had been ejected because of his belligerent attitude toward Lord, carrying what appeared to be a baseball bat. Not without significance is the circumstance that defendant followed the route the victim had taken on his return journey to his own residence. Finally, there was testimony indicating the victim did not possess a knife.

[2] Defendant's credibility was seriously impaired in two important respects. The first relates to the ownership of the knife found on his person at the time of his arrest. He then told the officers that the knife was his. At the trial he claimed the knife belonged to the victim; that he took it away from him during the course of the fight and put it in his own pocket. The second relates to his complaint to the officers relative to a scratch on his neck that "bled a little" causing his shirt to have "blood on it." This he asserted was the result of Lord's attack upon him with the knife. But an examination by the officers failed to reveal any evidence of such a scratch. In evaluating defendant's testimony, the trial judge was also entitled to take into consideration his interest in the case.

[3] Defendant charges that Mattie Bursey was "obviously biased in favor of the victim" and unworthy of belief. Such an argument was proper before the trial court since it is the trial judge's responsibility to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony. It is, however, a futile argument before a reviewing court.

[4] Defendant seems to take the position that by his testimony alone a reasonable doubt as to his guilt was created and that such doubt should have been resolved in his favor. His premise is completely without legal support. The truthfulness of his story first had to be accepted by the trial judge, which it was not. As said in People v. Smith, 35 Cal.App.2d 73, 76, 94 P.2d 633, 634, "it is a matter for the trial judge to be persuaded beyond a reasonable doubt and not this court."

[5] Defendant relies upon People v. Estrada, 60 Cal.App. 477, 213 P. 67. That case, however, is not here applicable. In the cited case it appeared that the decedent had been belligerent toward the defendant. No contrary evidence was produced. The evidence tended to show that the decedent attacked the defendant. There was no evidence to contradict such an inference. In the instant matter, the evidence tended to establish that the defendant assumed a belligerent attitude toward the deceased. True, defendant testified that Lord attacked him with a knife, but circumstances herein pointed out created a conflict in the evidence on that question and tended to discredit defendant's story. The trial judge's resolution of this conflict is controlling on appeal.

[6] The basic difficulty with defendant's argument is that he would have this court reevaluate the credibility of the witnesses, reweigh the evidence, and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the court below. Under accepted legal principles, we are not permitted to do this. People v. Gould, 111 Cal.App.2d 1, 8, 243 P.2d 809.

APPLICATION of Jack HOWARD
For a Writ of Habeas Corpus.District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Proceeding on petition for writ of habeas corpus whereby petitioner seeks relief from order of Superior Court, Sonoma County, adjudging him to be in contempt for refusing to answer certain questions propounded to him. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that fact that parts of newspaper story, which merely related to information concerning speech made by union leader, were set out in quotation marks, did not disclose the source from which story was obtained and thus constitute a waiver of privilege of nondisclosure under statute providing any publisher, editor, reporter, or other person connected with or employed upon newspaper can not be adjudged in contempt by court, Legislature, or any administrative body, for refusing to disclose source of information secured for publication when published in newspaper.

Petitioner discharged from all restraint, and bail exonerated.

Witnesses  219(1)

Fact that parts of newspaper story, which merely related to information concerning speech made by union leader, were set out in quotation marks did not disclose source from which story was obtained and thus was not a waiver of privilege of nondisclosure under statute providing any publisher, editor, reporter, or other person connected with or employed on a newspaper can not be adjudged in contempt of court, Legislature, or any administrative body, for refusing to disclose source of information secured for publication when published in newspaper. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc.   1881, subd. 6.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland, San Francisco, amicus curiae, for petitioner.

Joseph Maddux, Dist. Atty., Santa Rosa, for respondent.

Severson, McCallum & Davis, Nathan R. Berke, George Brunn, San Francisco, amicus curiae, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

By habeas corpus, petitioner seeks his release from an order of the Superior Court of Sonoma County adjudging him to be in contempt for refusing to answer certain questions propounded to him.

The controversy arises out of a labor dispute between certain employers engaged in processing apples in Sonoma County and the General Truck Drivers, Warehousemen and Helpers Union, Local 980, of the A. F. of L. The employers obtained a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not be granted. At the hearing on the preliminary injunction petitioner was called as a witness for plaintiffs. He testified he was a reporter for a San Francisco newspaper; that he had been in Sebastopol on August 11 and 12; and that he had written a story about the labor dispute which was published on August 14 under his byline. The story referred to many of the individuals involved in the strike, one of whom was Peter Andrade, an officer of the Teamsters Union, who was quoted as follows in the article: "We'll observe the order," Andrade told the special meeting. 'But as individual American Citizens, anyone has the right to refuse to handle hot apples. And we're telling this to all union members in the West.'" Petitioner further testified he was acquainted with Andrade; that he had "covered the story" of the strike for his paper and that he had seen Andrade in the Sebastopol area. When he was asked by the employers' counsel if he had a conversation with Andrade on August 12, he stated to the court, "I'd like to seek some advice here if I may. It is my intention here to claim privilege of the law, Section 1881-6, referring to disclosure of the source of a news story."

Considerable discussion then ensued between the court and counsel as to the propriety of the question. Plaintiffs' counsel contended that since the article contained a quotation of remarks attributed to Andrade, the source of Howard's information was thereby disclosed and hence he had waived the privilege. In order to give time for further study of the question and to enable the witness to obtain the advice of counsel, the court sustained petitioner's claim of privilege and continued his interrogation to the following day.

Upon reconvening, the court commented that the "article as written, purports to divulge the source of the information" and concluded that the privilege afforded under the applicable section "has been waived." On the previous day the court had stated that it appeared he would "have to assume" that petitioner "got the story" from the people whose names appeared in the story. And that "when you write a story and in that very story disclose the sources of information of the story, * * * you have waived any privilege that you might claim." The court then ordered the witness to answer the following question: "Mr. Howard, when you were in Sebastopol area as you have testified, did you have a conversation with Mr. Peter Andrade which became the subject of the article which you subsequently wrote and which is now in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 7a and No. 7b?" To this question the witness answered, "I respectfully decline to testify under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, Section 1881, subdivision 6."

The subsection referred to was added in 1935 and provides as follows:

"A publisher, editor, reporter, or other person connected with or employed upon a newspaper can not be adjudged in contempt by a court, the Legislature, or any administrative body, for refusing to disclose the source of any information procured for publication and published in a newspaper."

It thus appears that in order for the statute to apply two elements are necessary.

First, that the information must have been procured for publication, and second that the information so received must have been published before the privilege arises. Therefore, in view of the record before the court, the sole question presented is whether or not the article, as published, automatically constituted a waiver of the privilege of nondisclosure. We believe it did not.

As written the story in question merely related information concerning a speech made by Andrade at a special union meeting. But nothing which was written by petitioner can be said to have disclosed the source of his information. It cannot be assumed from the use of quotation marks that the statement attributed to Andrade was made directly to the petitioner. As he notes, his information could have been secured in many ways; that is, he might have been at the meeting openly or otherwise; he might have talked to Andrade before or after the meeting; he might have learned of Andrade's speech from another person; he might have received his information from a printed press release; he might have listened to a recording of the speech; or the story might have been telephoned to his newspaper and re-written by someone else under his by-line. It is readily apparent from the above illustration that the literary form in which information secured for publication is cast does not necessarily disclose the source from which it is obtained. It follows then that in the absence of any showing other than the published news story, which for the reasons hereinbefore noted we hold to be indecisive, the petitioner did not waive the privilege contained in section 1881(6) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Numerous additional contentions are made; however, in light of what we have heretofore said, any further comment by the court would be but dicta.

The petitioner is discharged from all restraint under the judgment of contempt, and bail is exonerated.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 9, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 8, 1955.

Prosecution for petty theft after a previous conviction of petty theft. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Orla St. Clair, J., granted defendant's motion to set aside information, and the People appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that defendant who failed to interpose his plea of double jeopardy in proper manner waived the defense and could be tried and convicted, and thus could not obtain release under statute providing for release on habeas corpus where party has been committed on a criminal charge without reasonable and probable cause.

Order reversed.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen. of the State of California, Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momnoisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Edward T. Mancuso, Public Defender, City and County of San Francisco, Abraham M. Dresow, Chief Deputy, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

The People appeal from an order of the superior court granting respondent's motion to set aside an information charging him with a violation of Penal Code, section 666 (petty theft after a previous conviction of petty theft). The motion was made and granted on the ground that respondent had been once in jeopardy.

Respondent was charged with petty theft, Penal Code, sec. 488, in the municipal court. He pleaded guilty on January 20, 1955; his plea was regularly entered and the municipal judge continued the case to January 27, 1955, for judgment. On January 21, 1955, the district attorney filed a complaint in the municipal court charging the violation of Penal Code, section 666. It is agreed that this complaint is based on the identical taking of property which was the basis of the charge of petty theft to which respondent had already pleaded guilty.

Upon motion of the district attorney the municipal court set aside respondent's plea of guilty to the charge of petty theft. Over respondent's objection that by reason of the entry of his plea of guilty to the petty theft charge he had been once in jeopardy the municipal court held a preliminary hearing on the complaint charging violation of Penal Code, section 666 and held respondent to answer.

On his arraignment in the superior court on the information charging this violation respondent moved to set aside the information under Penal Code, section 995 on the ground that he had been once in jeopardy. After being once denied this motion was later renewed and granted.

Appellant makes two points: 1. That the defense of once in jeopardy cannot be raised by a motion under Penal Code, section 995; 2. That jeopardy had not attached in this case upon the entry of respondent's plea to the charge of petty theft.

The attorney general asks us to decide the second question even though we agree with his argument on the first. This seems proper since the same question will recur in this very case at a later stage if we reverse the present order on the technical ground that a motion under Penal Code, section 995 is not the proper manner in which to present the defense of once in jeopardy. We therefore consider first the question whether jeopardy did attach on the entry of respondent's plea of guilty to the charge of petty theft.

[1] It is agreed that the charge of petty theft to which respondent pleaded guilty was an offense necessarily included in the later charge of violating Penal Code, section 666, and it is settled that where jeopardy has attached on a charge of an offense necessarily included in another the jeopardy in the lesser is a bar to a prosecution for the greater offense. People v. Greer, 30 Cal. 2d 589, 597, 184 P.2d 512; People v. Krupa, 64 Cal.App.2d 592, 598, 149 P.2d 416; People v. Ny Sam Chung, 94 Cal. 304, 29 P. 642.

The appellant relies heavily on Penal Code, section 1429 which provides, so far as relevant here, that: "In the case of a misdemeanor triable in any inferior court * * *. If such defendant pleads guilty, the court may, before entering such plea or pronouncing judgment, examine witnesses to ascertain the gravity of the offense committed; and if it appear to the court that a higher offense has been committed * * * the court may order the defendant to be committed or admitted to bail, to answer any indictment * * * or any complaint which may be filed charging him with such higher offense." Appellant points out that this section is in the alternative ("before entering such plea or pronouncing judgment") and argues that it authorizes a holding to answer for the higher offense at any time before judgment even though a plea of guilty has been entered to the lesser.

[2] The right not to be placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense is constitutional. Cal.Const. Art. I, sec. 13. It follows that if jeopardy does in fact attach upon the regular entry of the plea of guilty that part of section 1429 which provides for a holding to answer for a higher offense after the entry of a plea of guilty to a lesser necessarily included offense must be held unconstitutional.

Both parties rely heavily upon People v. Krupa, supra, 64 Cal.App.2d 592, 149 P.2d 416. In People v. Krupa the defendant after pleading guilty to the lesser included offense was actually sentenced. Judgment having been pronounced on the plea of guilty in the Krupa case anything said by the court about the effect of a plea of guilty before judgment is only dictum. The question was squarely presented however in People v. Goldstein, 32 Cal. 432. In that case after a plea of guilty had been entered but before judgment a second indictment was returned for the same offense. The court said at page 433:

"Where a defendant pleads guilty, and his plea is entered of record as provided in the Criminal Practice Act, (Sec. 300,) he stands convicted in the eye of the law as fully as he would have been by a verdict of guilty. He is convicted by his plea, and there is, therefore, no occasion for a trial, and nothing remains to be done except to pronounce judgment. On the question of former conviction there can be no distinction between a plea and a verdict of guilty, for both are followed by the same consequences.

"Nor is it necessary that a judgment should have been pronounced upon the conviction to make the plea of former conviction good."

[3, 4] The reasoning of this case appears to us to be unanswerable, but even if it were open to question, under a well settled principle of constitutional construction, we are foreclosed from reexamining it now. The right not to be placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense was contained in the California Constitution of 1849. Const. of 1849, Art. I, sec. 8. It was that constitutional provision which the Supreme Court construed in People v. Goldstein, supra. The same provision against being placed twice in jeopardy was readopted in the present Constitution. It is settled by a long line of authorities that where a provision of the earlier Constitution had been construed by the Supreme Court it must be presumed that the framers of the present Constitution in readopting it intended it to have the same effect. In re Lavine, 2 Cal. 2d 324, 331, 41 P.2d 161, 42 P.2d 311; People v. District Court of Appeal, 193 Cal. 19, 222 P. 353; United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 763, 151 P. 129; People v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 168 Cal. 496, 499, 143 P. 727; Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 483, 50 P. 644; McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 168, 44 P. 358,

31 L.R.A. 794; Ex parte Ahern, 103 Cal. 412, 414, 37 P. 390; People ex rel. Parsons v. Edwards, 93 Cal. 153, 158, 28 P. 831; Lord v. Dunster 79 Cal. 477, 485, 21 P. 865; Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 189, 7 P. 456, 635, 8 P. 709. We conclude that the regular entry of the plea of guilty placed respondent in jeopardy within the meaning of Article I, section 13 of our Constitution.

[5] This being so, that portion of Penal Code, section 1429 which reads "or pronouncing judgment" must be held unconstitutional as applied to the facts of this case where the plea of guilty to the necessarily included offense had been accepted by the municipal court and regularly entered in its minutes. A like question was considered in People v. Hunckeler, 48 Cal. 331. In that case the defendant had been placed on trial before a jury for manslaughter, and after witnesses had been examined the court without the defendant's consent dismissed the jury so that the defendant might be indicted for murder. On the subsequent murder charge the defendant pleaded once in jeopardy and the Supreme Court held that this plea was good. In dismissing the jury in the manslaughter proceeding the trial judge relied on a then section of the Penal Code, sec. 1112, which provided: "If it appears by the testimony that the facts proved constitute an offense of a higher nature than that charged in the indictment, the court may direct the jury to be discharged * * * and may order the defendant to be committed or continued on, or admitted to bail to answer any indictment which may be found against him for the higher offense." The court disposed of this statute in a single sentence, 48 Cal. 334: "And when a person has been placed in actual jeopardy, the jeopardy cannot be repeated without his consent, whatever statute may exist on the subject." Similarly it has been repeatedly held that a statute cannot constitutionally confer on the People the right to appeal in any criminal case in which jeopardy has actually attached to the defendant. (14 Cal.Jur.2d, Criminal Law, sec. 192, pp. 436-437 and cases collected in the notes.)

made is provided in Penal Code, sections 1016 and 1017 and the cases hold that the plea must be entered in the manner provided by statute or it is waived. In re Harron, 191 Cal. 457, 467-468, 217 P. 728; In re Burns, 78 Cal.App.2d 294, 301, 177 P.2d 649; People v. Allen, 47 Cal.App.2d 735, 748, 118 P.2d 927; In re Perry, 94 Cal.App. 235, 237, 270 P. 996; 14 Cal.Jur.2d, Criminal Law, sec. 195, pp. 440-441. Penal Code, section 995 makes no provision for raising the question of once in jeopardy. Respondent contends that, since the addition of subdivision 2 to the grounds for attacking an information under section 995, i. e.: "That the defendant had been committed without reasonable or probable cause", the motion under that subdivision is as broad as an attack on an information by habeas corpus under the similar language of Penal Code, section 1487, subdivision 7.

[6-8] Counsel has cited no case, and we have found none, in which the court has held that the defense of once in jeopardy can be raised by habeas corpus under Penal Code, section 1487, subdivision 7. The reasoning of the decided cases indicates that this cannot be done. The defense, as we have seen, may be waived and is in fact waived if the defendant does not interpose the plea in the manner provided by section 1017. Since the defense may be waived it is not jurisdictional. In re Collins, 151 Cal. 340, 350, 90 P. 827, 91 P. 397; In re Burns, supra, 78 Cal.App.2d 294, 302, 177 P. 2d 649; People v. Allen, supra, 47 Cal.App. 2d 735, 748, 118 P.2d 927. Not being jurisdictional, unless the defense is specially pleaded, the defendant may be tried and convicted. It follows that if he may be convicted it cannot be said that there is not reasonable and probable cause for holding him to answer.

In cases such as Coumas v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.2d 682, 192 P.2d 449 and Jackson v. Superior Court, 10 Cal.2d 350, 74 P.2d 243, 113 A.L.R. 1422, allowing prohibition to prevent a second trial, and In re Berman, 104 Cal.App. 259, 286 P. 1043, allowing habeas corpus, the plea of once in jeopardy had been entered in the manner required by section 1017 before the writ was applied for. They are not authority that the question can be raised in any fashion except by the special plea under that section of the Penal Code. The point, while extremely technical, seems sound.

The order is reversed without prejudice to the respondent presenting this defense by plea in the manner provided in section 1017 Penal Code.

SUPERIOR COURT of The State of California, IN AND FOR The CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Honorable Frank T. Deasy, Judge thereof, Honorable Martin Mongan, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and Mabel S. Brughelli and David Brughelli, Respondents.

No. 16841.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 3, 1955.

Proceeding on a petition for writ of prohibition. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that servicing of motor vehicle in a service station enroute was such necessary incident to its operation that entry into and exit from service station would have to be considered as part of, and incidental to, operation of vehicle upon highway; and consequently nonresident automobile owner who backed his automobile into plaintiff on premises of automobile service station in California, was amenable to service under statute providing for substituted service on nonresident owner in action growing out of accident resulting from operation of motor vehicle upon highway in state.

Alternative writ discharged and petition denied.

BRAY, Justice.

[1] In an action for damages for injuries alleged to have been received by plaintiff Mabel S. Brughelli against petitioner Paul J. Schefke, when petitioner, a resident of Oregon vacationing in California, backed his automobile into plaintiff on the premises of Standard Stations, Inc., at Lombard and Pierce Streets, San Francisco, petitioner was served as a nonresident pursuant to the provisions of section 404, Vehicle Code. He appeared specially to challenge the jurisdiction of the trial court. That court determined that the service was valid. Petitioner then filed this petition for writ of prohibition or certiorari or mandate.¹

1. Prohibition is a proper remedy to test the jurisdiction of the trial court under circumstances of this kind. McDonald v.

Question Presented.

[2] Where a nonresident's motor vehicle is on service station premises in this state to be serviced and there causes an accident, is such accident, under the provisions of section 404, Vehicle Code, one "resulting from the operation of any motor vehicle upon the highways of this State * * *"?

Law Applicable.

Section 404, Vehicle Code, provides: "The acceptance by a nonresident of the rights and privileges conferred upon him by this code or any use of the highways of this State as evidenced by the operation by himself or agent of a motor vehicle upon the highways of this State * * * is equivalent to an appointment by such nonresident of the director or his successor in office to be his true and lawful attorney upon whom may be served all lawful processes in any action or proceeding against said nonresident operator or nonresident owner growing out of any accident or collision resulting from the operation of any motor vehicle upon the highways of this State by himself or agent". (Emphasis added.)

The only case in this state considering the meaning of the words "operation * * * upon the highways" is McDonald v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.2d 621, 275 P.2d 464. There a resident of Oregon was engaged in California in the business of renting trucks and trailers. The plaintiff rented from him a truck to transport furniture to his home. He parked the truck partially on the street and partially on the sidewalk and proceeded to unload it. Due to a defective condition, he was injured when a rack on the truck broke. It was contended that unloading was not part of the operation of the vehicle. The court held that renting a truck for immediate use upon the highways constituted an "operation" of the truck, within the meaning of section 404, and that, under that section the "normal operation of a vehicle includes more than its movement over the highway", 43 Cal.2d at page 624, 275 P.2d at page 466, and included unloading. "Although the meaning of the word 'operation' in section 404 has not been litigated in this state, in other contexts, contrary to decisions in other states [citations], it has been interpreted to include more than the actual physical driving of a vehicle on the highway. [Citations.] The renting of a vehicle for immediate use clearly constitutes the initiation of its operation and, in the event the vehicle is defective, the creation of an unreasonable risk of harm to the lessee and third parties. The statute does not require that the accident occur during the time that the vehicle is being operated by the nonresident or his agent. It is enough that the accident results from such operation. When, as in this case, the accident would not have occurred but for the negligent renting of a defective vehicle, it clearly resulted from such renting. To hold that such renting does not constitute operation would defeat the legislative purpose of making nonresidents who use our highways in their business amenable to suits in this state. To interpret operation to include such renting is both consistent with the terms of the statute and subserves its purpose. We conclude therefore that petitioner's agents operated the truck within the meaning of the statute when they rented it for immediate use upon the highways of this state. [Citations.]

"Petitioner contends, however, that an accident occurring during unloading is not the type of accident intended to be covered by section 404. We cannot agree with this contention. It has frequently been recognized that the normal operation of a vehicle includes more than its movement over the highway. [Citations.] There is nothing in the statute that limits its operation to any particular types of accidents or collisions. By its express terms it is applicable to 'any action * * * growing out of any accident or collision resulting from the operation of any motor vehicle upon the highways of this State by himself or agent.'" 43 Cal.2d at pages 624-625, 275 P.2d at page 465.

In other contexts California has been liberal in its interpretation of the word "operation." Thus in Sutton v. Tanger, 115 Cal.App. 267, 1 P.2d 521, it was held that the owner of a motor vehicle was "operating" it although not present, and the driving was by a person to whom the owner's permittee had temporarily entrusted it. In Bosse v. Marye, 80 Cal.App. 109, 250 P. 693, it was held that a minor was "operating" the automobile although it was being driven by another at the minor's request. In Union Tank Line Co. v. Richardson, 183 Cal 409, 191 P. 697, 699, it was held that a foreign corporation engaged in the acquiring of tank-cars and leasing them to shippers to use upon the railroads of this state, was "'operating upon railroads'" in California.

In McGuire v. Parker, D.C.Mo.1948, 78 F.Supp. 199, it was held that a person lending his car to minors was "operating" it within the meaning of a statute providing for service of summons on a nonresident operating a motor vehicle within the state.

This liberality of construction does not obtain in some other jurisdictions. Thus in O'Tier v. Sell, 1930, 252 N.Y. 400, 169 N.E. 624, it was held that an owner was not "operating" a motor vehicle when it was being driven by another even though with his permission. To the same effect, Brown v. Cleveland Tractor Co., 1933, 265 Mich. 475, 251 N.W. 557.

Other jurisdictions have held as did the court in McDonald v. Superior Court, supra, 43 Cal.2d 621, 624, 275 P.2d 464, 466, that "the normal operation of a vehicle includes more than its movement over the highway." Thus in Elfeld v. Burkham Auto Renting Co., 1949, 299 N.Y. 336, 87 N.E.2d 285, 289, in applying a statute making an owner liable for "negligence in the operation of * * * [a] motor vehicle" the court said referring to the above mentioned statute, 87 N.E.2d at page 290: "* * * it does not limit 'negligence in the operation' to the manner in which a car is driven but is broad enough to include an act of 'operation' such as the one here involved—putting a defective truck into operation on the highway."

In Commonwealth v. Henry, 1918, 229 Mass. 19, 118 N.E. 224, L.R.A.1918B, 827, it was held that an automobile left standing on a highway after dark without lights was "operated" within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the operation of an automobile at night on public streets without certain lights. "The word 'operated' is not, as the defendant contends, limited to a state of motion produced by the mechanism of the car, but includes at least ordinary stops upon the highway, and such stops are to be regarded as fairly incidental to its operation." 118 N.E. at page 225. To the same effect, Horton v. Benson, Tex.Civ. App., 1924, 266 S.W. 213.

In Stroud v. Board of Water Comm'rs, 1916, 90 Conn. 412, 97 A. 336, it was held that an automobile left in a part of the highway opposite a hotel which was commonly used for parking automobiles was in "operation" under a statute denying recovery to the owner of an unregistered motor vehicle who has an accident "by reason of the operation of said motor vehicle in or upon the public highways * * *."

In Chiarello v. Guerin Special Motor Freight, 1952, 22 N.J.Super. 431, 92 A.2d 136, it was held that a truck parked entirely on the sidewalk was being "operated" within the terms of a non-resident service statute. The court quoted from a case decided in 1889 before the advent of motor vehicles: "In order to be a traveler, it is not necessary that one should be constantly moving, if he is a pedestrian, or that the vehicle he drives, or that in which he is conveying goods, if he is using one, shall be continuously in motion. It would certainly be impossible to use the highways conveniently for the ordinary purposes of business or social life, with teams or lighter carriages, if occasional stops were not permitted to enable those using them to load and unload teams, to receive and deliver goods, to enter shops and stores, and to make brief calls of business, or even of a special character." 92 A.2d at page 139. Hand v. Frazer, 1931, 139 Misc. 446, 248 N.Y.S. 557, held that a truck parked by a highway was being "operated" within the terms of its nonresident service statute. In Brauer Machine & Supply Co. v. Parkhill Truck Co., 1943, 383 Ill. 569, 50 N.E.2d 836, 148 A.L.R. 1208 the court was considering whether the accident (the plaintiff was injured by the negligent unloading of a truck at a place off the highway) came within the purview of the Illinois nonresident service statute as constituting "operation" of a motor vehicle on a highway of the state. In holding that unloading did not constitute operating the truck within the meaning of the statute, Bryant Truck Lines v. Nance, 1939, 199 Ark. 556, 134 S.W.2d 555, 556; Ellis v. Georgia Marble Co., 1950, 191 Tenn. 229, 232 S.W.2d 45, 48; Mulligan v. Jersey Truck Renters, 1949, 196 Misc. 828, 95 N.Y.S.2d 232 are to the same effect, the court said that the fact that the truck was not on the highway was not important, that "If the injury or damage claimed results from the use and operation of a motor vehicle on the highway, then the place where the injury or damage to the person or property of another actually occurred would be wholly immaterial. It is only necessary that the causative force originate in the use or operation of the vehicle on the highway. * * * It makes no difference where the injury actually occurs if it may be attributed to the use of the highway and naturally flows therefrom." 50 N.E.2d at page 843.

Petitioner places great reliance upon the Brauer case, supra. It should be pointed out that in that case the court in addition to holding that the Illinois nonresident service statute did not apply where the accident occurred on private property, held that unloading a truck did not constitute "operation" of a motor vehicle. The McDonald case, supra, expressly referred to the Brauer case and held exactly to the contrary as to the latter matter, thus showing the considered opinion of our Supreme Court that our statute should be more broadly interpreted than did the Illinois court interpret its statute. Moreover, the Brauer case stated that it makes no difference where the injury actually occurs if it may be attributable to the use of the highway and naturally flows therefrom. While the court there did not have in mind a situation such as here, nevertheless the last mentioned principle would apply to it. The servicing of a car in a service station is a necessary concomitant of the operation of the car on the highway and results from it.

Where the nonresident service statute refers to accidents resulting from operation of a motor vehicle upon the highways of the state, it generally has been held that such a statute does not apply to accidents occurring completely off the public highway. Catalano v. Maddux, 1940, 175 Misc. 24, 22 N.Y.S.2d 149, collision on the World's Fair grounds; Camden v. Harris, D.C.Ark. 1953, 109 F.Supp. 311, road in a United States military reservation; Rilling v. Jones, D.C.Md.1955, 130 F.Supp. 834, private driveway. However, in Galloway v. Wyatt Metal & Boiler Works, 1938, 189 La. 837, 181 So. 187, the court held a road owned by a corporation and never dedicated but used by the public was a highway of the state for purposes of the nonresident service statute, and in Paduchik v. Mikoff, 1953, 158 Ohio St. 533, 110 N.E.2d 562, 565, the court upheld service on a nonresident where the accident occurred on private farm property. It should be pointed out, though, that the Ohio statute does not use the phrase "operating a motor vehicle on the highways" of the state; it refers to a nonresident operating a motor vehicle "within the state". Sipe v. Moyers, 1945, 353 Pa. 75, 44 A.2d 263, 264, is to the same effect. The Pennsylvania statute was similar to the Ohio one.

There are also cases holding that an accident in a service station is not one occurring while operating a motor vehicle on a public highway. Finn v. Schreiber, D.C.N.Y.1940, 35 F.Supp. 638. There the nonresident drove his truck into a service station to have a flat tire changed. In the operation a lock rim of the spare tire was forced off due to a defective condition claimed to be known to the owner, injuring the plaintiff, the service station operator. To the same effect, Haughey v. Mineola Garage, 1940, 174 Misc. 332, 20 N.Y.S.2d 857, where the accident occurred in a garage; and Walton v. Stephens, D.C.Va., 1954, 119 F.Supp. 1, where the accident occurred in a service station.

It seems to us, however, that the question here does not depend upon an interpretation of what is or is not a highway,² but is a question of whether or not the servicing of a motor vehicle in a service station en route is such a necessary incident to its operation that the entry into or exit from a service station must be considered as a part of and incidental to the operation of the vehicle upon the highways. As said in the McDonald case, supra, the normal operation of a vehicle includes more than its operation over the highway. It necessarily includes its obtaining the necessary fuel and servicing to operate it.

The purpose of this type of act should be considered. In State ex rel. Gallagher v. District Court of Sixth Judicial Dist., 1941, 112 Mont. 253, 114 P.2d 1047, 1051, the court said concerning the Montana nonresident service statute which requires operation on "'any public way'" of that state, 114 P.2d at pages 1052-1053: "It seems clear to us that the object of the act is to further the safety of highway traffic within the state and afford a practicable remedy for damage arising from negligence on the highways, by providing for service of summons within the state where it would otherwise be impossible, or virtually so." In McDonald v. Superior Court, supra, 43 Cal.2d 621, at page 623, 275 P.2d 464, at page 465, the court said: "The obvious purpose of section 404 is to make amenable to suits in the courts of this state those nonresidents who may incur liability in the operation of motor vehicles upon the highways of this state. What constitutes operation within the meaning of the statute must be determined in the light of this objective."

In the light of this objective, is not the servicing of, and the obtaining of gasoline in, the car as incidental to its operation on the highway, as stopping to load and unload, to receive and deliver goods, to enable the driver to enter shops and stores, and to make brief business calls, as was stated in Chiarello v. Guerin Special Motor Freight, supra, 92 A.2d 136? Cannot the accident here be "attributed to the use of the highway". Brauer Machine & Supply

2. See, however, Webster v. Zevin, 77 Cal. App.2d 855, 176 P.2d 960, where the court held that section 402 of the Vehicle Code (imputing liability to owner, where person operating motor vehicle does so with owner's permission) applied to accidents on private property as well as on the public highway.

Co. v. Parkhill Truck Co., supra, 50 N.E. 2d 836, 843? Without obtaining gasoline and being serviced occasionally the car could not be operated on the highway. The act of getting gasoline and service at a service station en route is as completely a part of the operation of the car as almost any other act in its operation. It certainly is as incidental, if not as integral, a part of its operation as was parking the car opposite the hotel in Stroud v. Board of Water Comm'rs, supra, 97 A. 336, even though that parking was on the highway itself.

The alternative writ is discharged and the petition denied.

v.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION of the State of California, Berkeley Young Men's Christian Association, State Compensation Insurance Fund, and State of California (Subsequent Injuries Fund), Respondents.

Civ. 16789.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 10, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Proceeding on petition for writ of review by employee, college student who had graduated in February and had sought temporary work intending to take up graduate studies following fall, questioning correctness of Industrial Accident Commission's award of compensation. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where employee had earned varying amounts during several periods of employment of varying duration, computation of average weekly earnings for purposes of computation of compensation was governed by subdivision of statute applicable where other specified methods of arriving at average weekly earnings could not reasonably and fairly be applied, Award affirmed.

1. Workmen's Compensation §822

Where employee, college student who had graduated in February and had sought temporary work intending to take up graduate studies the following fall, had earned varying amounts during several periods of employment of varying duration, computation of average weekly earnings for purposes of computation of compensation was governed by subdivision of statute applicable where other specified methods of arriving at average weekly earnings could not reasonably and fairly be applied. Labor Code, §§ 4453 and subds. (a, d), 4653.

2. Workmen's Compensation §1619

In proceeding on petition for writ of review by employee, college student who had graduated in February and had sought temporary work intending to take up graduate studies following fall, questioning correctness of Industrial Accident Commission's compensation award, record did not disclose any errors in computation of average weekly earnings for purpose of computation of compensation. Labor Code, § 4453(d).

Ernest M. Friesen, in pro. per.

Everett A. Corten, Daniel C. Murphy, San Francisco, for Industrial Acc. Commission.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

The petitioning employee questions the correctness of the respondent commission's award to him of temporary total disability compensation in the amount of $22.75 a week based upon a finding that the sum of $36.84 reasonably represents his average weekly earnings at the time of the injury. He claims a higher average earning rate, one which would entitle him to the maximum rate allowed by section 4453 of the Labor Code.

Specifically, the petitioner claims that in ascertaining his average weekly earnings the commission (1) should have used the formula prescribed by subdivision (a) instead of the method prescribed by subdivision (d) of section 4453 of the Labor Code; (2) incorrectly applied the method prescribed by subdivision (d); and (3) committed errors of computation in making the determination.

Petitioner had been a student at the University of California. Upon his graduation in February of 1953, he sought temporary work with the intention of taking up graduate studies in the fall of that year.

According to the referee's report upon which the commission's findings and award were based, there was evidence that petitioner earned from $70 to $80 in February, 1953; $127.40 from April 11th through May 9th; $61.85 a week, May 19th through June 9th; $73.85 a week, June 10th through July 20th; summarized by the referee as follows: "In other words, for the period beginning February 1, through July 20, 1953 * * * a period of 170 days, the employee earned $848.58 or an average of $35¹ a week. The actual weekly wage of $36.84¹ gives rise to a compensation rate of $22.75¹ a week which I believe is a fair basis for determining the earning capacity of this employee considering his program of living at the time of the injury," adding that he deemed subdivision (d) of section 4453 applicable.

The referee later (in his report recommending denial of petition for reconsideration) amplified this statement: "* * * the employee contends that his earnings were maximum. He points out that at the time of the injury, he was still acquiring an education and was in college. Though he was graduated, he had continued his education and had obtained such jobs that he could while attending classes. He was injured while actually earning maximum wages but the record was clear that this was a temporary job during vacation. As pointed out in the Report of Referee, I have taken various periods of employment since the employee left college in February, added them together and divided the same by the total number of days involved. In other words, his earnings over a period of time prior to the injury were averaged up.

"I believe that though the employee may have had the capacity to earn more money and also the willingness to earn more money, he lacked the opportunity to do so by taking himself, in effect, off the regular labor market. I think that the West case, 12 CCC 86, is applicable here."²

1. $22.75 represents 65% of the average weekly earnings of $35, § 4653, Labor Code, which latter represents 95% of the average weekly earning capacity of $36.84, § 4453, subd. d.

2. This lack of opportunity to work is reflected by the following excerpt from the petition herein:

"After leaving school on Feb. 18, 1953, the applicant could not immediately find a position which would carry him through to September 1953, at which time he was to return to school, so he took odd jobs until he could find a position at which he could work until September. Prospective employers would not consider him for permanent positions because he was returning to school in the fall."

depends upon the steadiness of employment. Thus the particular wage rate an employee is receiving at the moment of injury may or may not be indicative of his actual earning capacity at that time", 79 Cal.App.2d at page 725, 180 P.2d at page 981; and that "earning history must be considered in arriving at earning capacity, and more often than not, it will be determinative." 79 Cal.App.2d at page 725, 180 P.2d at page 981.

These principles were reaffirmed in a temporary employment case in Campbell v. Industrial Accident Commission, 95 Cal. App.2d 570, 213 P.2d 395, which distinguished California Compensation Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 86 Cal. App.2d 861, 195 P.2d 880, as one in which it appeared that, although the employee worked intermittently in 1946, "in 1947 he was in excellent health, worked regularly and steadily and the court distinguished the case from that of the West case * * * for these reasons." At page 576 of 95 Cal.App.2d, at page 398 of 213 P.2d.

[1] In view of these precedents and the logic of the situation, we are persuaded that subdivision (d) of section 4453 governs in our case and was correctly applied.

[2] As to the asserted errors in computation, petitioner says, first, that the period of his availability for work was 151, not 170 days; i. e., that he graduated from the university on the 18th of February, 1953, hence it was error for the referee to take the 1st of February as the beginning date. However, we find in the record no evidence of the precise date of graduation. Petitioner testified that he finished his schooling "in" February. In view of that, we do not consider he is in a position to complain of the referee's taking the 1st of February for computation purposes. Moreover, the referee apparently did not use the full 170 days in making his computation. Had he done so he would, according to our computation, have obtained a smaller sum than $36.84 as the actual weekly wage rate.

Petitioner states that the referee mistakenly used the sum of $127.40 instead of $135.04, plus $5.93 of retroactive pay, for his receipts as a cannery worker during April 11 to May 9, 1953. In his petition he says that "the W-2 form issued by the company to the applicant shows that the earnings for that period" were in the higher amount. However, the transcript of his testimony at the hearing before the referee indicates that he twice stated that the correct sum for that period was $127.40.

In respect to the period May 19th through June 9th during which petitioner worked at the rate of $8 per day, the referee computed the total upon the basis of a week of six working days. Petitioner says he worked seven days per week. While it is true that in one part of his testimony he said he was receiving $8 per day seven days a week during that period, at another point he testified that he worked 19½ days during that period. The latter quite clearly tends to support the inference of a week of six working days. In any case, the referee gave the petitioner full credit for the $156 which 19½ days would produce.

Finally, petitioner claims that the referee should have credited him with $14 a week as the value of board and room, which the evidence shows was considered worth $60 a month. The referee in converting the monthly into a weekly rate of pay took $13.85 a week as the equivalent of $60 a month. In view of the varying number of days in a month the referee's computation in this regard appears to us more precise and accurate than that of the petitioner.

In conclusion, we find no basis for disturbing the findings and award made by the commission. The award is affirmed.

Nov. 10, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1955.

See 290 P.2d 87.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action to recover monthly disability benefits under policy issued to plaintiff by defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, James G. Whyte, JJ., entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff moved for new trial, and defendant appealed from order granting the motion, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment, plaintiff also appealed from order denying her application for default judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held, inter alia, that where plaintiff, in whose favor jury had returned verdict for allegedly insufficient damages, moved for new trial upon various grounds, one being insufficiency of evidence, and court entered order granting motion "as to all issues", order included insufficiency of evidence as ground therefor.

Order granting new trial affirmed.

Appeal from judgment dismissed.

Order denying default judgment affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇨75(1)

Though provision prescribing grounds for new trial does not expressly include the ground of inadequacy of damages, a new trial may be granted upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence for the reason that the damages awarded are inadequate.

West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657 and subd. 5.

2. New Trial ⇨163(2)

Where the order granting new trial provides simply that a new trial is granted, the order is a general one, and does not include insufficiency of the evidence as ground for the order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657 and subd. 5.

3. New Trial ⇨163(2)

Where the order granting new trial goes beyond a mere general order, and uses any language that reasonably may be construed as including insufficiency of the evidence, the language will be interpreted as including that ground. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657 and subd. 5.

4. New Trial ⇨163(2)

Where order grants new trial upon "all issues", order includes reference to insufficiency of evidence, within provision prescribing grounds for new trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657 and subd. 5.

5. New Trial ⇨163(2)

Where plaintiff, in whose favor jury had returned verdict for allegedly insufficient damages, moved for new trial upon various grounds, one being insufficiency of evidence, and court entered order granting motion "as to all issues", order included insufficiency of evidence as grounds therefor within provision prescribing grounds for new trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657 and subd. 5.

6. New Trial ⇨75(1)

In passing on motion for new trial on ground of inadequacy of damages, trial judge may re-weigh the evidence and exercise his independent judgment thereon, and if he concludes that the damages awarded do not adequately compensate for the injuries sustained he may grant a new trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

7. New Trial ⇨157

Upon motion for new trial upon ground of inadequacy of damages, trial court should review evidence, not only with respect to issue of damages, but also with respect to issue of liability. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐977(3)

Since an order granting a motion for new trial rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, an appellate court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears.

9. New Trial ⇐75(4)

In action to recover monthly disability benefits under policy issued to plaintiff by defendant, where there was considerable testimony that plaintiff had been severely injured when boarding streetcar, and had been disabled for quite some time, and jury had returned verdict for plaintiff for $100, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff new trial on ground of inadequacy of damages.

10. Appeal and Error ⇐843(2)

Where appellate court affirmed order granting plaintiff new trial on ground of inadequacy of damages, plaintiff's appeal from judgment which she had obtained in court below was moot.

11. Judgment ⇐106(3)

Where plaintiff had not requested entry of default judgment against defendants, who had not appeared in action until after expiration of ten days from service of summons, and plaintiff later filed amended complaint which was answered, plaintiff was not entitled to default judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 585.

J. Edward Haley, Los Angeles, for Mutual Benefit, et al.

Leona Ethel Legg in pro. per.

FOX, Justice.

Defendant appealed from an order granting a motion for a new trial. Plaintiff thereupon appealed from the judgment. (There is another appeal by plaintiff which will be discussed later.)

Plaintiff brought this action to recover monthly disability benefits under a health and accident policy issued to her by defendant on November 7, 1944. Plaintiff alleged that on February 6, 1947, while the policy was in force, she fell in attempting to board a streetcar, suffering injuries that resulted in her total disability which had continued for such period that she was entitled to the total monthly disability indemnity provided by the policy. The company admitted the issuance of the policy but denied plaintiff suffered disability as alleged by her, and, as an affirmative defense, alleged the policy lapsed on December 1, 1946, by reason of nonpayment of premium.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $100. In response to special interrogatories, the jury found that the policy was in force on February 6, 1947, and that plaintiff was wholly and continuously disabled by reason of the accident from February 6 to February 28, 1947.

Plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, upon a number of the grounds specified in section 657, Code of Civil Procedure, among them being the insufficiency of the evidence. The court granted the motion, the minute order reading as follows:

"Plaintiff's motion for a new trial heretofore submitted on February 10, 1954 is granted as to all issues * * *

There is substantial evidence that plaintiff's injuries were serious and disabled her for a much longer period than the approximate three weeks fixed by the jury. Defendant concedes the evidence is conflicting.

[1] Although section 657, Code of Civil Procedure, which states the grounds upon which a motion for a new trial may be granted, does not expressly include the ground of inadequacy of damages, the cases have established that "A new trial may be granted upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence for the reason that the damages awarded are inadequate." Harper v. Superior Air Parts, Inc., 124 Cal.App.2d 91, 92, 268 P.2d 115, 116; Franklin v. Betten-court, 16 Cal.App.2d 511, 514, 60 P.2d 1017.*

Defendant, however, points out that the order granting the new trial does not spe-

* A new trial may be granted for excessive damages without specifying insufficiency of the evidence as a ground for making the order. Sinz v. Owens, 33 Cal.2d 749, cifically mention insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict as a ground upon which the new trial was granted; therefore, he argues, it must be conclusively presumed that the order was not based upon that ground, and as there was no other valid ground upon which it could be based, it must be reversed.

[2,3] It is well settled that when the order provides simply that a new trial is granted, such order is a general one and does not include insufficiency of the evidence. Tasker v. Cochrane, 94 Cal.App. 361, 271 P. 503. "The statute," however, "does not require that the order specify insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict in any particular words or language. If the language used is susceptible of being interpreted as tantamount to granting a new trial on account of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, or if it may be inferred from the language used that such was the ground upon which the order was made, it is uniformly held to have been based upon that ground. Where the nature of the order itself necessarily implies that the trial court deemed it necessary to re-examine the facts, a statement in the order that the evidence is insufficient is not essential. When the order granting the motion goes beyond a mere general order (a new trial is granted) and uses any language that reasonably can be construed as including insufficiency of the evidence, the language will be interpreted as including that ground." Piru Citrus Ass'n v. Williams, 95 Cal.App.2d 911, 914-915, 214 P.2d 426, 428.

[4] The precise question here presented was passed upon in Bayley v. Souza, 42 Cal. App.2d 166, 170, 108 P.2d 725, 727. Hearing denied. The order in that case stated that the motion for a new trial was granted "on all issues." In construing that language, the court said: "These cases demonstrate that the order here involved, granting the new trial 'on all issues', is susceptible of the reasonable interpretation that the trial court intended by that language to include insufficiency of the evidence. What else can the expression 'on all issues' mean? It must mean either all issues presented by the pleadings, which would include the issues of negligence of appellant and contributory negligence of respondent, and the sufficiency of the evidence to support the implied finding of the jury on these issues, or it must mean all issues presented by the motion for a new trial, one of which was the sufficiency of the evidence. In either event, under the cases cited, such order is not a general order, but must be interpreted as including a reference to insufficiency of the evidence within the meaning of sec. 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure." In Lucerne Country Club v. Beal, 21 Cal.App.2d 121, 125, 68 P.2d 408, 410, a new trial was granted "as to all issues made by the said cross-complaint of the said R. J. Palmer and the answer thereto." It was there held that the order, properly interpreted, included insufficiency of the evidence. See, also, Piru Citrus Ass'n v. Williams, supra, and digest of cases at page 915 of 95 Cal.App.2d at page 429 of 214 P.2d.

[5] Under these authorities, and particularly Bayley v. Souza, supra, since the order is not a general one, it must be interpreted as encompassing a reference to insufficiency of the evidence within the meaning of section 657, Code of Civil Procedure.

[6-9] When the order is considered from the viewpoint of the insufficiency of the evidence, it is clear it must be sustained for there was a considerable amount of testimony indicating that plaintiff was severely injured and that her disability continued for quite some time. In passing on such a motion "the trial judge is entitled to reweigh the evidence and exercise his independent judgment thereon and if he concludes that the damages awarded do not adequately compensate for the injuries sustained he may grant a new trial." Harper v. Superior Air Parts, Inc., supra, 124 Cal.App.2d at page 94, 268 P.2d at page 117. It is also pointed out in the case last cited, 124 Cal.App.2d at page 92, 268 P.2d at page 116, that "Upon a motion for a new trial based upon the contention that damages are inadequate the trial court should review the evidence, not only with respect to the issue of damages but also with respect to the issue of liability."

Since an order granting a motion for a new trial rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, an appellate court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28 Cal.2d 357, 358, 170 P.2d 465. No abuse of discretion is indicated in this case.

[10] The affirmance of the order granting plaintiff a new trial renders her appeal from the judgment moot. That appeal will therefore be dismissed.

[11] Plaintiff's second appeal is from an order of July 19, 1954, denying her application for a default judgment against the defendants, viz., Mutual Benefit and Accident of Omaha and United Benefit Life Insurance Company of Omaha, on her original complaint herein which was filed on February 11, 1948. She filed an amended complaint on March 5, 1948, in which Mutual alone was named as a defendant, United having been dropped from the case. Mutual filed an answer to this amended complaint on March 15, 1948. (After the sixth amended and supplementary complaint and answer thereto were filed the case was tried in January, 1954, resulting in the judgment and order for a new trial herein reviewed.)

It is apparently plaintiff's theory, based on section 585, Code of Civil Procedure, that upon the expiration of ten days after service of summons on the defendants and their failure to appear in the action, that their default resulted automatically without any action on her part, and that upon the mere lapse of such period she was entitled to a default judgment. The section does not so provide. It contemplates a request or application for the entry of a default. No such request was made by plaintiff prior to the filing of her amended complaint. This new pleading superseded the original and furnished the sole basis of the cause of action. Morhead v. Turner, 41 Cal.App.2d 414, 418, 106 P.2d 969. The original complaint is dropped out of the case and ceases to have any effect as a pleading or as a basis for a judgment. Tidwell v. Henricks, 124 Cal.App.2d 64, 66, 268 P.2d 84. It therefore follows that the trial court ruled correctly.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed. The appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The order denying plaintiff's motion for a default judgment against defendants on her original complaint is affirmed.

Each party will bear his own costs on these appeals.

Civ. 21116.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 10, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action to recover indemnity under a health and accident policy issued to plaintiff by defendant. Defendant moved to dismiss the action on the ground that it had not been brought to trial within the three year period prescribed. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. F. Moroney, J., granted the motion and entered judgment of dismissal. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment and from the order denying motion to vacate judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where the remittitur following prior appeal had been filed with the clerk of lower court on June 5, 1951, and subsequently plaintiff had filed six amended and supplementary complaints, and plaintiff gave notice for early setting of trial on ground that period of limitation would otherwise expire, and case was so set and later continued due to congestion of calendar, case was properly dismissed in September, 1954, under code provision requiring trial within three years from date upon which remittitur is filed by clerk of trial court.

Judgment and order affirmed.

The hearing of a demurrer is not a "trial" unless the ruling on the demurrer is a final determination of the rights of the parties, under code provision that when an appeal has been taken and judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial, the action must be dismissed by the trial court unless brought to trial within three years from date on which remittitur is filed by the clerk of trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1203(3)

Fact that party asked for trial within prescribed period is immaterial, since case must be actually brought to trial within three year period under code provision declaring that where an appeal has been taken and judgment reversed with cause remanded for new trial, the action must be dismissed unless brought to trial within three years from date on which remittitur is filed by clerk of trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1203(3)

Where on appeal by plaintiff, judgment had been reversed for new trial and remittitur filed with clerk of lower court on June 5th, 1951, and subsequently plaintiff filed six amended and supplementary complaints, and plaintiff gave notice for early setting of trial on ground that period of limitation would otherwise expire, and case was so set and later continued due to congestion of calendar, case was properly dismissed in September, 1954, under code provision requiring trial within three years from date on which remittitur is filed by clerk of trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 583.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal on the ground that she did not bring her case to trial within three years after the filing of the remittitur following the reversal of a prior judgment. She also appeals from the order denying her motion to vacate the said judgment. The action of the trial court was based on that portion of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows:

"When in an action after judgment, an appeal has been taken and judgment reversed with cause remanded for a new trial * * * the action must be dismissed by the trial court, on motion of defendant after due notice to plaintiff, or of its own motion, unless brought to trial within three years from the date upon which remittitur is filed by the clerk of the trial court." (Italics added.)

We have reached the conclusion that the decision of the trial court is correct.

Plaintiff filed this action on March 5, 1948. She sought to recover indemnity under a health and accident policy for injuries suffered by her in an accident which occurred on February 6, 1947, while she was attempting to board a streetcar. The case was tried before a jury resulting in a verdict for defendant. On appeal to this court, the judgment was reversed. See Legg v. United Benefit Life Ins. Co., 103 Cal.App.2d 228, 229 P.2d 454. The remittitur was filed with the clerk of the court below on June 5, 1951. Between this date and May, 1954, plaintiff filed amended and supplemental complaints, issue being joined on the sixth such pleading. During this latter month plaintiff gave notice of a motion for an early setting based on the ground that unless the trial was commenced prior to June 5, 1954, the case was likely to be dismissed for failure to bring it to trial within three years from the date the remittitur was filed. The motion for early setting was heard in Department 1 on May 28th, just five court days before the expiration of the statutory period. The motion was granted and the case was set for trial on September 8, 1954, the court stating, according to plaintiff's brief, that "in view of the crowded condition of the court calendar" this was "the earliest possible date available." On the latter date the case was continued to September 10th due to congestion of the calendar. Upon the matter being transferred to Judge Moroney, defendant made its motion to dismiss on the ground that the case had not been brought to trial within three years after the filing of the remittitur as required by section 583, Code of Civil Procedure. The court granted the motion. It is from the ensuing judgment that plaintiff appeals.

[1] It is of course established that the cause was not brought to trial within three years after the remittitur was filed. In dealing with the dismissal of an action for want of prosecution, section 583 makes dismissal discretionary where the plaintiff has failed for two years after the action is filed to bring it to trial. However, such period as the defendant was absent from the state or concealed therein under the circumstances enumerated in the statute is not a part of said two-year period. The mandatory provision of the section relative to dismissal where the action is not brought to trial within five years nevertheless contains exceptions where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended, the defendant was absent from the state, or concealed therein under the specified circumstances. When a case has progressed to the point where it has been tried and a new trial granted and no appeal taken, the statute provides it shall be dismissed unless brought to trial in three years, except when the parties have filed a stipulation that the time may be extended. But when a case has reached the point where it has not only been tried but an appeal has been taken and the judgment reversed, the code section provides that the action must be dismissed unless brought to trial within three years after the remittitur is filed. It will be noted that the portion of section 583 which is here applicable does not incorporate any of the exceptions found in the earlier portions of the section excusing delay in bringing an action to trial. The language used in the last sentence of section 583 is mandatory—the action must be dismissed—and there are no exceptions. As pointed out in Neustadt v. Skernswell, 99 Cal.App.2d 293, 295, 221 P.2d 694, 695, the language used "is clear and unambiguous and hence is not open to 'judicial interpretation.'" Actually the case last cited, a hearing having been denied, is decisive of the issue here presented. See, also, Cameron v. Cameron, 110 Cal. App.2d 258, 260, 242 P.2d 408; Shutes v. Cheney, 123 Cal.App.2d 256, 263, 266 P.2d 902.

v. Superior Court, 4 Cal.2d 120, 124-125, 47 P.2d 716. If the period could be extended by filing amended or supplemental pleadings a party could keep the action alive indefinitely, thereby completely nullifying the purpose of the statute which is to prevent avoidable delay for too long a period of time. De Mota v. Superior Court, 130 Cal. App.2d 58, 62, 278 P.2d 537; De Roode v. County of Placer, supra.

[3] In an effort to escape the effect of section 583, plaintiff argues that the hearings and decisions on the demurrers filed to her fourth, fifth and sixth amended and supplemental complaints constituted a trial. None of these rulings resulted in a final determination of the action for defendant filed an answer to plaintiff's sixth amended and supplemental complaint and it was the issues as thus formed that were ready for trial. The rule is established that "the hearing of a demurrer is not a trial, within the meaning of Section 583, unless the ruling on the demurrer is a final determination of the rights of the parties." Anderson v. City of San Diego, 118 Cal.App.2d 726, 731, 258 P.2d 842, 844; Berri v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.2d 856, 858, 279 P.2d 8.

[4, 5] Relying on Mazitelli v. Crane, 35 Cal.App. 264, 169 P. 721, plaintiff takes the position that since she asked for a trial within the time prescribed by section 583 she has performed her duty and is not in default even though the case is not actually brought to trial within the required time and consequently it may not be dismissed because of such delay. The Mazitelli case, however, has been overruled. Miller & Lux v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 339, 219 P. 1006; Holt v. Miller, 214 Cal. 558, 6 P.2d 937, 79 A.L.R. 844. In the latter decision the court pointed out, 214 Cal. at page 561, 6 P.2d 937, that the authorities refute the proposition that the plaintiff has fully performed his duty when he caused the case to be set for trial and was in court ready to proceed. The statute is clear and specific in requiring the case to be "brought to trial"—not merely set for trial—within the three-year period after the remittitur is filed, and it does not contain any exceptions.

In view of the language in section 583 that applies to this particular situation, and the decision in Neustadt v. Skernsweil, supra, the trial court was correct in dismissing the action.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Civ. 21005.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Nov. 9, 1955.

Action for reinstatement to position of boilers and pressure vessels inspector in classified civil service. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., sustained demurrer to amended complaint on ground that plaintiff's action was barred by laches, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that where plaintiff waited 19 months from date on which he was discharged from position of boilers and pressure vessels inspector in classified civil service, and 16 months from date on which discharge was sustained by Civil Service Commission, in view of fact that amended complaint failed to set forth allegations ex-causing the delay or explaining it, plaintiff's cause of action was barred by laches.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Officers ⇨76

Considerations of public policy require that public employee who claims to have been improperly or illegally discharged must act with utmost diligence in asserting his rights.

2. Action ⇨63

The existence of laches must be determined in accordance with the facts of each case.

3. Action ⇨63

The application of doctrine of laches is not dependent upon a delay of sufficient duration to call into operation the statute of limitations.

4. Action ⇨63

Mere delay in bringing an action for a time less than the period of limitation does not amount to laches, as there must also be present the element that the delay has been to prejudice of the opposite party.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨218(11)

Where plaintiff waited 19 months from date on which he was discharged from his position in classified civil service and 16 months from date on which discharge was sustained before instituting reinstatement action, and in addition amended complaint failed to explain or set forth allegations excusing a delay, plaintiff's action for reinstatement was barred by laches.

McCOMB, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of dismissal rendered after the sustaining without leave to amend of defendants' demurrer to the first amended complaint, in which plaintiff challenged the validity of an administrative order of defendant commission, removing petitioner from his position in the classified civil service in defendant city. It was alleged that the order was the result of excess of jurisdiction and an abuse of discretion. The complaint sought a peremptory writ of mandate commanding defendants to comply with plaintiff's demand, under section 112½ of the Charter of the City of Los Angeles, for reinstatement in his position.

Facts: The amended complaint alleged that on June 18, 1952, and for many years prior thereto, plaintiff held and occupied the position of Boilers and Pressure Vessels Inspector in the classified civil service of defendant city; that on said date defendant commission discharged plaintiff from his position for alleged misconduct in the performance of his duty; that plaintiff filed with defendant commission an application for a hearing which was granted, and thereafter held, and on January 30, 1953, defendant commission approved the recommendations of its examiner and entered its order discharging plaintiff from his position; on April 27, 1953, plaintiff filed a demand in writing with defendant commission for reinstatement in his position, in accordance with the provisions of section 112½ of the Charter of defendant city, and that said demand was denied.

The instant action was filed September 1, 1954. The trial court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the amended complaint failed to allege any facts showing a reason for the delay in instituting the action and therefore laches barred plaintiff's alleged cause of action.

This is the sole question necessary for us to determine:

Did the amended complaint show upon its face that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by laches?

Yes. The situation with respect to laches is essentially the same in this case as in the case of Hicks v. City of Los Angeles, 133 Cal.App.2d 214, 283 P.2d 1046 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court). Counsel for plaintiff in the present case was also counsel for plaintiff in the Hicks case and contended there, as is contended here, that the doctrine of laches has no application where the plaintiff brings his action within the period of time accorded him by the statute of limitations. Counsel asserted that this court erred in its ruling with respect to laches. By denying a hearing, the Supreme Court approved the following statement in the Hicks case, 133 Cal.App.2d 219, 283 P.2d at page 1050:

[1] "Considerations of public policy require that an employee of a public body who claims to have been improperly or illegally discharged must act with utmost diligence in asserting his rights." (Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 120 Cal.App.2d 858, 859, 861 [262 P.2d 37, 39]; Campbell v. City of Los Angeles, 47 Cal.App.2d 310, 315 [117 P.2d 901].) In Hayman v. City of Los Angeles, 17 Cal.App.2d 674 [62 P.2d 1047], where there was a delay of nine months in filing suit, during which time plaintiff had attempted to obtain reinstatement to his position by negotiation, the court stated (17 Cal.App.2d at page 680, 62 P.2d at page 1050): 'It is to be presumed that, where one has been dismissed from an active position in the public service, some one else has been chosen to take his place. The work has to be done and it has to be paid for.' (See, also, to the same effect, Pacheco v. Clark, 44 Cal.App.2d 147, 151 [112 P.2d 67], and Newbury v. Civil Service Comm., 42 Cal. App.2d 258, 261 [108 P.2d 745].) In the Campbell case, supra, it is said 'Unless facts be alleged which constitute a sound excuse for a delay of 15 months, such delay in commencing the action is absolutely indefensible' and deprives 'petitioner of all rights to equitable consideration.' (47 Cal.App.2d at page 315, 117 P.2d at page 904.)"

[2] The existence of laches must be determined in accordance with the facts of each case. (Wolpert v. Gripton, 213 Cal. 474, 483, 2 P.2d 767.) In Neet v. Holmes, 25 Cal. 2d 447, at page 460, 154 P.2d 854, at page 861, in which plaintiff delayed for two years after giving notice of rescission before commencing action to rescind a mining lease on the ground of fraud, but well within the applicable three year period of limitations prescribed by section 338, subdivision 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court in affirming the trial court's determination that plaintiff was barred by laches said, that unlike the statute of limitations, laches does not require any specified period of delay, and "Courts of equity will refuse relief even where the statutory time of limitation has not run, if in addition to mere passive neglect there is a showing of facts amounting to acquiescence in the acts complained of, or other circumstances which, coupled with the delay, render the granting of relief inequitable."

[3] Again in Warfield v. Anglo & London Paris National Bank, 202 Cal. 345, at page 356, 260 P. 881, at page 885, our Supreme Court said: "The application of the doctrine of laches is not dependent upon a delay of sufficient duration to call into operation of the statute of limitations." (See also Toomey v. Toomey, 13 Cal.2d 317, 320, 89 P.2d 634.)

In United States ex rel. Arant v. Lane, 249 U.S. 367, at page 371, 39 S.Ct. 293, at page 294, 63 L.Ed. 650, where the relator waited 20 months before filing his petition for a writ of mandamus to compel his reinstatement to a position from which he had been discharged, the court said, referring to a writ of mandamus: "It is an extraordinary remedy which will not be allowed in cases of doubtful right * * * and it is generally regarded as not embraced within statutes of limitation applicable to ordinary actions, but as subject to the equitable doctrine of laches."

With respect to actions brought by discharged public officers and employees to obtain reinstatement, it has been uniformly held that they must act with the utmost diligence in asserting their rights. If delay occurs, prejudice is presumed. In United States ex rel. Arant v. Lane, supra, 249 U.S. at page 372, 39 S.Ct. at page 294, the court said: "When a public official is unlawfully removed from office, whether from disregard of the law by his superior or from mistake as to the facts of his case, obvious considerations of public policy make it of first importance that he should promptly take the action requisite to effectively assert his rights, to the end that if his contention be justified the government service may be disturbed as little as possible and that two salaries shall not be paid for a single service." (See also Peruzzin v. Test, 282 App.Div. 550, 125 N.Y.S.2d 353, 355; Rotherham v. Grece, 183 A. 291, 14 N.J. Misc. 164; People ex rel. Oberhart v. Durkin, 285 Ill.App. 156, 1 N.E.2d 882; State ex rel. Martin v. Alford, 203 La. 232, 13 So.2d 845.)

The decisions of the Supreme Court of this state which plaintiff cites in his opening brief do not support his assertion that the doctrine of laches has no application until the statutory period of limitations has run. In certain of the cases the Supreme Court held that under the facts presented there was no unreasonable delay and that actions brought within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations were therefore not barred by laches.

In Estudillo v. Security Loan & Trust Co., 149 Cal. 556, 87 P. 19, the Supreme Court held that plaintiffs had moved promptly and hence they could not be charged with lack of diligence. It then observed that whereas the period of limitation for relief on the ground of fraud was three years from the discovery of the fraud, plaintiffs had commenced their action two years after its commission. The court then said, 149 Cal. at page 565, 87 P. at page 23:

"There has been no laches. The period of limitation for actions for relief on the ground of fraud is three years from the discovery of the fraud. This action was commenced less than two years after its commission. The cases cited by respondent in which the complaint has been held bad for failure to show how and when the fraud was discovered, and why it was not sooner discovered, were all cases in which the action was commenced more than the full period of limitation after the commission of the fraud. In such cases the doctrine of laches applies, but in a case like this the right to maintain the action is governed by the statute of limitations."

The court then proceeded to distinguish the cases cited by defendant to support its claim of laches, pointing out that those were all cases in which the action was commenced more than the full period after the commission of the fraud, and that in each of those cases the complaint had been held bad for failure to show how and when the fraud was discovered and why it was not sooner discovered.

In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 P. 919, 10 P. 674, the Supreme Court said that the term "laches" as used in reported cases does not always have the same meaning. It is employed as the equivalent of "mere delay," sometimes of "unreasonable delay" and also of "acquiescence." It is therefore important to consider the context in connection with which the term "laches" has been used by a judge in order to ascertain in what sense it is employed. (69 Cal. at page 270, 10 P. at page 678.) In the Lux case the court concluded that the evidence did not prove consent or acquiescence and that "if the question were submitted to a jury upon that evidence a verdict of assent could not be upheld." (69 Cal. at page 288, 10 P. at page 690.) Of particular significance is the fact that the court pointed out that courts exercise their equity powers "independent of any statute of limitations" and that equity "will often treat the lapse of a less period as a presumptive bar, on the ground of discouraging stale claims or gross laches or unexplained acquiescence." (69 Cal. at page 269, 10 P. at page 677.)

[4] In Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243, the court observed that "mere delay in bringing an action for a time less than the period of limitation does not amounting to laches," adding that "there must be also present the element that the delay has been to the prejudice of the opposite party." (184 Cal. at page 242, 193 P. at page 250.) This principle has been fully recognized by the District Court of Appeal. In Hayman v. City of Los Angeles, 17 Cal.App.2d 674, at page 680, 62 P.2d 1047, at page 1050, the court says:

"* * * But the defense of laches involves much more than the element of delay. It is not the lapse of time so much as it is the consequences of the delay which goes to make up the defense of laches. Unless prejudice results from the delay the defense is not established, but, if prejudice has resulted, the one whose prompt action would have forestalled it can void the responsibility only by showing that he sought his remedy promptly. It is to be presumed that, where one has been dismissed from an active position in the public service, some one else has been chosen to take his place. The work has to be done and it has to be paid for." (See also Kimberlin v. Los Angeles City High School District, 115 Cal. App.2d 459, 463, 252 P.2d 344.)

In the instant case the delay of plaintiff in bringing his action was considerably longer than in the Hayman case [9 months], supra, or the Kimberlin case [12 months], supra, in Donovan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 32 Cal.App. 392, 163 P. 69 [15 months], or Campbell v. City of Los Angeles, 47 Cal.App.2d 310, 117 P.2d 901 [15 months] which is cited and quoted with approval in Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 120 Cal.App.2d 858, 861, 262 P.2d 37. The discharge of plaintiff herein was sustained by the civil service commission on January 30, 1953, and his demand for reinstatement was filed on April 27, 1953.

[5] In the absence of an allegation to the contrary, of which there is none in the present case, it must be assumed that the demand was denied promptly. The original complaint was filed September 1, 1954. It therefore appears that plaintiff waited 19 months from the date on which his discharge was sustained, and approximately sixteen months from the date on which his demand for reinstatement was denied before instituting this action. Under the authorities cited plaintiff's cause of action is barred by laches in view of the fact that his amended complaint is devoid of any allegations which would excuse or explain the delay. Therefore laches was a matter for the trial court to determine on demurrer from the face of the complaint. (Neet v. Holmes, 25 Cal.2d 447, 460, 154 P.2d 854; Hicks v. City of Los Angeles, 133 Cal.App. 2d 214, 283 P.2d 1046; Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 120 Cal.App.2d 858, 262 P.2d 37.)

BRAY, Justice.

Plaintiff's intestate¹ brought an action to quiet title to a house and lot in San Francisco. Defendants cross-complained to quiet their title to the property. From a judgment in defendants' favor, plaintiff appeals.

Questions Presented.

Sufficiency of the evidence. The evidence establishes that the merits and equities are all on the side of defendants. Plaintiff relies upon technical contentions that a certain trust was never terminated or repudiated.

Evidence.

Plaintiff denied much of defendants' testimony concerning the facts of the case. Plaintiff's testimony, however, was highly evasive, contradictory, unsatisfactory and disproved by written documents signed by him. In 1936 plaintiff owned a lot upon which he had built a home. He had rented the property to one Jankelson. It was encumbered by a mortgage, a deed of trust, a judgment lien and a tax lien, totaling almost $8,000. A notice of default under the deed of trust had been given. Due to the illness of plaintiff's wife, they decided to move to Los Angeles. Defendant² was a licensed insurance broker and real estate salesman. Plaintiff told defendant that he was about to lose the property and wanted to "salvage something out of the wreckage." Plaintiff and his wife³ conveyed the property to defendant upon the understanding expressed in a letter to them dated July 27, 1936. This stated that the deed "is for the purpose of selling the above property to a third party; profits from any sale are to be divided equally between ourselves." The then tenant was to be allowed to remain 120 days "if necessary." The rental to be paid by him was not to be a part of the profits but was to go to plaintiff. In case a sale was not consummated "Deed is to be returned" to plaintiff. Defendant testified the asking price for the property was to be around $8,000, plaintiff that he suggested a price of $20,000 but did not actually put a price on it, that defendant was to submit offers when he got them. Defendant interested one Rusalen, who signed an agreement dated August 14, 1936, to buy the property for $8,000. On August 29th this agreement was superseded by another agreement signed by Rusalen, for the same purchase price but different terms. This agreement was in the form of the usual "Uniform Agreement of Sale" and contained an "Approval" signed by plaintiff. Plaintiff denied that he ever heard of Rusalen or of Rusalen's offer to buy, and claimed that he signed the approval in blank. Rusalen was unable to finance the purchase of the property and the sale fell through. After making efforts to find other buyers, defendant discussed with plaintiff purchasing the property for himself and a price of $125 over the total amount of the encumbrances was agreed upon. At this time the amount of the encumbrances was $8,165.72. Defendant assumed the payment thereof and gave plaintiff his promissory note⁴ dated December 14, 1936, for $119.78, debiting plaintiff $5.22 due defendant for an insurance premium on other property. In a short time, defendant executed new encumbrances, thereby releasing plaintiff from all obligations of the old. Plaintiff admitted that he knew that defendant moved into the house in December, 1936. Defendant paid him for a refrigerator in the house. From then on, plaintiff never received nor asked for an accounting of any kind from defendant. Defendant paid all taxes, all interest and principal of the indebtedness against the property, made repairs and improvements totaling between $3,000 and $4,000. May, 1945, defendant deeded the property to himself and wife as joint tenants. From 1936 until time of suit (August, 1952) defendant did plaintiff's insurance work on other property, sending him statements therefor, which plaintiff paid. It is not necessary to detail all the evidence corroborating defendant's testimony that plaintiff in 1936 sold the property to him. Plaintiff's only excuse for not making any claim to the property or to an accounting of what defendant was doing with it, is that he had lost defendant's letter of July 27, 1936, and did not find it until shortly before filing suit.

Termination of Trust.

4. Plaintiff denied receiving this note, yet he cashed defendant's check dated May 4, 1938, bearing the notation "balance due on note dated 12-14-36, $9.60. This pay-

Plaintiff contends that the court's findings that the trust expressed in the last mentioned letter was terminated and repudiated are not supported by the evidence because (a) there was no written memorandum of the sale to defendant; (b) a trustee may not sell trust property to himself.

(a) No writing.

[1-3] Plaintiff contends that under sections 2280, Civil Code, and 1971, Code of Civil Procedure, a trust may be terminated only by a writing. Section 2280 provides: "* * * every voluntary trust shall be revocable by the trustor by writing filed with the trustee." Section 1971, Code of Civil Procedure, provides: "No estate or interest in real property, other than for leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning it, or in any manner relating thereto, can be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, otherwise than by operation of law, or a conveyance or other instrument in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering, or declaring the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." (Emphasis added.)

That a trust may be terminated, surrendered or relinquished by an oral agreement of trustor and beneficiary is discussed in Johnson v. Altman, 96 Cal.App.2d 467, 215 P.2d 768, and Nicolds v. Storch, 67 Cal.App. 2d 8, 153 P.2d 561. In the latter case the court said in 67 Cal.App.2d at page 15, 153 P.2d at page 564: "In a note in 106 A.L.R. 1315, it is also said that while there is some conflict in the cases the majority of courts hold to the principle that an oral contract to surrender, rescind, or abandon the beneficial interest arising under a resulting trust is not rendered ineffective or unenforceable by the statute of frauds. Cases in which this view was taken are there cited." However, in neither case was the question directly decided because of the applicability of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to the ment, $5. Balance due, $4.60. Balance due on refrigerator account, $35. This payment, $5. Balance due, $30."

facts presented. In the Johnson case the court said, referring to the facts of the case, quoting from 106 A.L.R. 1318, 96 Cal.App. 2d at page 470, 215 P.2d at page 770: "Whatever may be the nature of the trust relation, all courts agree that where there has been some performance by the trustee in accordance with the oral contract, or where his position has been changed as a result of it, the surrender is effective irrespective of the requirements of the Statute of Frauds." In the Nicolds case the court referred to the above note in 106 A.L.R. 1318⁵ and stated in 67 Cal.App.2d at page 17, 153 P.2d at page 566: "These findings bring plaintiff within the rule that a trust may be extinguished by a parol surrender by the cestui que trust in any case in which the trustee so acts in reliance upon the surrender as to make it inequitable for the cestui to assert his interest, and the rule that performance of an oral agreement within the statute of frauds takes the case out of the statute."

1 Witkin's Summary of California Law, 6th ed., p. 57, states: "Where the defendant by his words or conduct represents that he proposes to stand by the oral contract, and the plaintiff, in reliance thereon, changes his position, the defendant will be estopped to set up the bar of the statute."

In our case we deem it unnecessary to determine this question⁶ for here the facts cry out loudly for the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel. While the defense of equitable estoppel was not pleaded, the evidence upon which it was based was admitted without objection and therefore the necessity for pleading it, if such necessity existed, was waived. See Foster v. Fisher, 44 Cal.App.2d 33, 37, 111 P.2d 935. It would be unconscionable here to deprive defendant of the property which the court found he purchased from plaintiff and upon which he assumed all of plaintiff's indebtedness, had improved it and paid the taxes thereon, merely because of a technical application of the statute of frauds. It should be pointed out also that the statute of frauds, Civil Code, § 1091, does not apply where the oral agreement is fully executed. See 23 Cal.Jur.2d 399, which states: "An oral contract which has been fully executed is not affected by the provisions of the statute of frauds. In such a situation the contract is not assailable, either by the parties to the agreement or by a third person, on the ground that it is not evidenced by a writing. The rule applies even when full performance has been rendered by only one of the parties. It is sometimes justified on the ground of estoppel."

(b) Trustee may not sell trust property to himself.

[4] Citing the general rule set forth in section 2229, Civil Code, in section 170, Restatement of Trusts, p. 431, and in certain cases, to the effect that a trustee may not deal with trust property for his own profit, plaintiff contends that the sale to defendant was absolutely void. Plaintiff overlooks the exception to that rule set forth in section 2230, Civil Code: "Neither a trustee nor any of his agents may take part in any transaction concerning the trust in which he or any one for whom he acts as agent has an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary, except as follows:

5. This note is supplemented in 173 A.L.R. 282.

6. See, however, 89 C.J.S., Trusts, § 95, p. 938: "A trust may be extinguished by a parol surrender by the beneficiary in any case in which the trustee so acts in reliance on the surrender as to make it inequitable for the beneficiary to assert his interest." See also Nicolds v. Storch, supra, 67 Cal.App.2d 8, at page 17, 153 P.2d 561, at page 566, where the court considered the case of Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119, cited by plaintiff, which contains dicta that a release by the payor under a resulting trust must be in writing: "It is said in 12 Cal.Jur., pp. 926, 927, that a fully executed parol contract cannot be affected by the statute of frauds, and cannot be assailed either by the parties or by third persons on the ground that it is not in writing; that the rule is the same where full performance is by one of the parties only; and that the rule is sometimes placed on the ground of estoppel." These discussions refer to resulting and constructive trusts. In our case we have an express one, and the rule concerning repudiation of an express trust may be different from that dealing with the other types of trusts.

1. When the beneficiary, having capacity to contract, with a full knowledge of the motives of the trustee, and of all other facts concerning the transaction which might affect his own decision, and without the use of any influence on the part of the trustee, permits him to do so; * * *." After quoting that section, the court in Malinow v. Dorenbaum, 51 Cal.App.2d 645, at page 652, 125 P.2d 554, at page 558, said: "Although appellant challenges the applicability of this section of the code to the case at bar, we believe that it does apply here. As has been seen, appellant acquiesced and actively aided decedent in her claims adverse to his interest and it is clear that he did so with full knowledge of all the facts which might affect his decision. [Citation.] Moreover, it is well settled that where a beneficiary has consented to a course of conduct by the trustee, a rule permitting the cestui to attack the transaction later on would, as the court said in Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 351, 378, 23 P. 16, 21, 'convert a rule intended to prevent fraud into one creating an incentive to, and a cover of, fraud.'" All the elements required by section 2230, subd. 1, Civil Code, appear in our case.

Specific Findings.

[5] Plaintiff in addition to challenging the findings on the issues heretofore discussed, contends there is no evidence to support certain other findings. The court found true the allegations in defendants' answer and cross-complaint that the purchase price was "about $8300." The exact price came to $8,290.72. Obviously, this amount was "about $8300." Moreover, the record fails to show that plaintiff requested a more specific finding. His objection, now made upon appeal, comes too late. Goss v. Fanoe, 114 Cal.App.2d 819, 824, 251 P.2d 337. The same is true of his contention that the finding of adverse possession for more than 15 years is ambiguous.

[6,7] The court found that plaintiff's claim was barred by practically all the statutes of limitation, by laches and adverse possession. Plaintiff's contention that the evidence does not support such findings is based upon (1) the matters hereinbefore discussed, and which we have determined adversely to him, and (2) the contention that there was no repudiation of the trust until shortly before commencement of suit when defendant refused to comply with plaintiff's request to transfer the property to him. As to these defenses, there can be no question that the law is well settled that where, as here, there was an express trust created, the time required to start the running or beginning of each of them does not start until there is an express repudiation of the trust communicated to the trustor. Here the evidence clearly shows such a repudiation as far back as December, 1936. See Smith v. Sheffey, 113 Cal.App.2d 741, 744, 248 P.2d 959, to the effect that a finding of laches is supported by evidence of acts of dominion exercised over the land; and Eisenmenger v. Eisenmenger, 59 Cal. App.2d 536, 139 P.2d 63, discussing repudiation of a trust agreement and the starting of the period of limitation and of adverse possession.

The court found that both defendants were the owners of the property since December 12, 1936. Plaintiff contends there is no evidence that Mrs. Hanley's ownership started that day, as her name did not appear of record until Herbert deeded the property to her and himself as joint tenants, in 1945. As the defendants were married in 1936 when Herbert purchased the property, presumably it became community property and Mrs. Hanley's interest would attach. Her record interest, however, appeared in 1945, so, if there is any error in the finding it is a completely immaterial one.

[8] We deem it necessary to point out that plaintiff in his opening brief violated Rule 15(a), Rules on Appeal, which requires, in part, "The statement of any matter in the record shall be supported by appropriate reference to the record." In over three and a half pages of "Summary of material facts" there is not one reference to the record. Were it not for the assistance given the court in defendants' brief, it would have been a considerable task for this court to relate plaintiff's summary with the record. Plaintiff contends that as there is no express requirement in Rule 13 that there be references to the record he is only required to do so "in the separate points required in the argument." Rules 13 and 15(a) must be read together. That the statement in the briefs of any matter in the record must be supported by an appropriate reference to the record is well established. See Bruce v. Bruce, 121 Cal. App.2d 661, 664, 263 P.2d 895; Johnson v. Klein, 127 Cal.App.2d 577, 578, 274 P.2d 209. This court could, and probably should, have required plaintiff to provide the missing references.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 21091.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 16, 1955.

Action for recovery of personal property. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Orlando H. Rhodes, J., rendered summary judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held, inter alia, that affidavits raised substantial fact issue as to whether plaintiffs might have mitigated their damages by availing themselves of an opportunity to procure immediate possession of a portion of property at an earlier stage in proceedings, precluding summary judgment for damages for detention of property.

Judgment reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨949

Question on appeal from summary judgment was whether trial court had abused its discretion. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 15(a).

2. Judgment ⇨185.2(1)

Propriety of granting or denying a motion for summary judgment is determined by sufficiency of affidavits, rather than whether formal pleadings raise issues. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

3. Judgment ⇨185.1(3, 4)

In action to recover personal property which was held by owners of house in which plaintiffs had been living, statements in defendants' affidavit, offered in opposition to motion for summary judgment, that plaintiffs had defaulted on a contract to purchase house, that defendants held under a deed, and that defendants had obtained a judgment for rent were either hearsay or mere conclusions of law and were incompetent for consideration on motion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

4. Landlord and Tenant ⇨9

Where there was no reservation of rent fixed in contract, persons who entered into possession of land under executory contract did not thereby become tenants of vendors, nor were they tenants of vendors' successor in interest.

5. Landlord and Tenant ⇨14

Where there was no landlord-tenant relationship between owners of land and occupants thereof, no such relationship was created by fact that owners served a notice to pay rent or quit.

6. Landlord and Tenant ⇨242

Where there was no landlord-tenant relationship between owners of house and occupants thereof, owners did not obtain a possessory lien on occupants' personal property for failure to pay rent. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1861a.

7. Landlord and Tenant ⇨7

No landlord-tenant relationship springs from a situation in which there are rival claimants, one holding adversely to the other.

8. Replevin ⇨1

An action for recovery of personal property is a mixed action, being in rem so far as specific recovery of chattels is concerned, and in personam so far as damages are sought.

9. Judgment ⇨185.2(3)

If a plaintiff is to prevail on his motion for summary judgment, his supporting affidavits must state facts covering every element necessary to sustain a judgment in his favor.

10. Judgment ⇨185.2(6)

Affidavits of party moving for summary judgment must be strictly construed.

11. Judgment ⇨185.3(17)

In action for recovery of personal property, failure of plaintiffs' affidavits to set out value of property in dispute at any time at which its value could be properly measured precluded rendition of summary judgment for value of property. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

12. Damages ⇨62(1)

A plaintiff cannot be compensated for damages which he might have prevented by reasonable efforts or expenditures.

13. Judgment ⇨185.3(17)

In action to recover personal property, affidavits raised substantial fact issue as to whether plaintiffs might have mitigated their damages by availing themselves of an opportunity to procure immediate possession of a portion of property at an earlier stage in proceedings, precluding summary judgment for damages for detention of property. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

14. Judgment ⇨194

Where, in action for recovery of personal property, summary judgment was properly rendered for recovery of property, but summary judgment for damages for detention and alternative judgment for value of property were improperly rendered, plaintiffs, should they elect to proceed to trial of remaining portions of cause, must await ultimate outcome of trial of such issues before rendition of final judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 437c.

Willedd Andrews, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Michael Lavelle, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOX, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a summary judgment in an action for the recovery of possession of personal property.

Plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, filed a "Complaint in Replevin," naming as defendants O. A. Kelly, Betty Lee Morales and Helen Clark individually and as trustees for Eden Foundation, Ltd. Eden was also named as a defendant and described as a copartnership composed of the individual defendants. The Complaint alleged that plaintiffs were the owners, and entitled to the possession, of certain personal property, each item of which is recited by its description and individual value; that defendants took tortious possession of that property; that they have refused to accede to a demand to surrender possession to plaintiffs; and that they have continued to retain possession of the property, damaging plaintiffs in the sum of $10 per day. Plaintiffs prayed judgment for possession of the property, or for its aggregate value of $5,777.50 in case delivery could not be effected, and for damages for its detention.

An answer was filed by all the named defendants, admitting that plaintiffs were entitled to possession of several designated items of personal property but denying every other material allegation in the complaint. By way of affirmative defense, defendants alleged that on June 28, 1954, defendant Eden Foundation, Ltd. (hereinafter called Eden) owned real property on which was located a residence unlawfully occupied by plaintiffs; that on that date, Eden served on plaintiffs a notice to pay rent of $100 per week within three days or quit the premises; that plaintiffs paid no rental from June 28 to August 15, 1954, and owed Eden the sum of $600 for this period; that Eden is holding all of plaintiffs' personal property not exempt from execution; that upon a demand made by Michael Lavelle, plaintiff's attorney, Eden offered to restore possession of the personal property listed in defendants' answer, but Mr. Lavelle demanded return of all or none of said property of plaintiffs in the possession of Eden; and that any damage suffered by plaintiffs has been caused by their refusal to accept possession of the personal property offered them and not by any conduct of Eden or its agents. In another affirmative defense, it is alleged that Eden is the owner of a judgment for the sum of $101 against plaintiffs obtained in the Small Claims Court of Malibu Judicial District. No copy of the judgment was appended to the answer.

Thereafter, plaintiffs moved for a summary judgment on the ground that defendants had no meritorious defense. In support thereof affidavits were filed by plaintiff Michael Murphy and his attorney, Lavelle. So far as is here germane, Murphy's affidavit recites that on June 3, 1953, he and his wife took possession of a parcel of real property improved with a six-room dwelling (hereinafter referred to as the Topanga property) as vendees under a contract of sale with the owners thereof, S. H. and Marguerite Barton; that plaintiffs had complied with all terms of the contract except payment of the balance of the purchase price, which was to be paid when the Bartons delivered to them a grant deed; and that the Bartons had refused without right to deliver such deed. The affidavit then alleges that defendants subsequently informed plaintiffs they were negotiating with the Bartons for the sale of the property, at which time plaintiffs disclosed their contract with the Bartons, whereupon defendants stated that in their opinion said agreement gave plaintiffs no right or interest in the Topanga property. The affidavit further states that on June 28, 1954, defendants informed plaintiffs they had purchased the Topanga property from the Bartons and served upon them the Notice to Pay Rent or Quit previously described; that plaintiffs replied they would not relinquish possession because of their prior rights and would not recognize defendants as their landlord; that plaintiffs and their children occupied the house until August 1, 1954, when they were forced to vacate because of certain described acts of harassment and intimidation by defendants. Murphy then avers that during their occupancy of the Topanga house, plaintiffs furnished it with the personal property described in their complaint, of which they are the sole owners; that on August 1, 1954, plaintiffs attempted to remove this personal property when defendants compelled them to vacate by the use of force and threats to do bodily harm to affiant, but defendants would not permit its removal, stating they had a landlord's lien thereon and that they had secured a judgment for $100 in the Malibu Small Claims Court.

The Lavelle affidavit identifies affiant as attorney for plaintiffs in the within action as well as in the Malibu action and avers that an appeal has been taken from the judgment in the latter action and a cash bond in the sum of $125 filed to stay execution. The affidavit recites that after written demand for return of the personal property was made, defendant Betty Lee Morales and affiant had a telephone conversation; that this occurred after the defendants were notified of the filing of the stay bond; that in the course of the conversation, affiant advised Mrs. Morales that plaintiffs' property was being wrongfully withheld; that Mrs. Morales asserted that defendants claimed a lien on the property because plaintiffs were indebted to them for rentals and because of the $100 judgment received in the Small Claims Court; and that defendants were willing to release such portion of the personal property as was exempt from execution if plaintiffs would file their claim of exemption. Lavelle avers that he has checked with the clerk of the Malibu Small Claims Court and the constable and has been informed that while an execution has issued upon the aforementioned judgment, no levy thereunder has been made.

In opposition to plaintiffs' motion, two affidavits executed by defendant Betty Lee Morales, a trustee and chairman of the board of directors of Eden, were filed. In substance, affiant declared that plaintiffs did not perform all the terms and conditions of the contract of sale of the Topanga property entered into with the Bartons and that the escrow set up to consummate the transaction was cancelled because of their default; that thereafter plaintiffs' offer to purchase said property for cash was rejected by the Bartons; that plaintiffs assured affiant several times between March 7 and June 28, 1954, that they would vacate the house in which they were residing within about a two weeks' period; that Mrs. Barton executed to Eden a deed dated June 25, 1954, vesting title to the Topanga property in Eden; that after receiving their notice to pay rent or quit plaintiffs failed to pay rent and that Eden obtained a judgment for $100 in the Malibu Small Claims Court for rent arrears. After denying the acts of harassment charged in Murphy's affidavit and after describing certain violent acts allegedly committed by plaintiffs, affiant states that Eden has "offered in their answer, to deliver all personal property referred to in plaintiffs' complaint exempt from execution * * *" In her second counteraffidavit, Mrs. Morales avers that she informed Mr. Lavelle that Eden was filing five additional complaints for weekly rent, each praying for the sum of $100; that she informed Lavelle that Eden was willing to release any personal property exempt from execution and would release all the property if a bond in the sum of $600 were posted; that Lavelle refused to accept anything less than all the property detained without posting any bond. She further states that Eden did not levy an execution on the small claims judgment because plaintiffs have appealed therefrom and the matter is pending.

Upon this showing, the court entered summary judgment in plaintiffs' favor. The judgment decreed that plaintiffs were entitled to regain possession of the property in question, together with damages in the sum of $1,640 for its detention, and costs. Pursuant to the requirement of section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an alternative judgment was also rendered awarding plaintiffs the sum of $5,777.50, the alleged value of the property, in the event redelivery of the property could not be had.

[1] Defendants' brief scarcely comports with the requirements of rule 15(a), Rules on Appeal, 36 Cal.2d 1, 15. Except for the topical index and the table of authorities in its preface, the body of the brief contains no headings or captions under which are separately presented a statement of the case and a concise statement of the propositions of law involved. While such inadequate compliance with the rules is not to be condoned, we will nonetheless proceed to consider the single problem here involved, namely, whether or not the trial court abused its discretion in granting the summary judgment. Best v. Burch, 132 Cal.App.2d 859, 283 P.2d 262; Kelly v. Liddicoat, 35 Cal.App.2d 559, 560, 96 P.2d 186; Bank of America, etc. v. Oil Well S. Co., 12 Cal.App.2d 265, 270, 55 P.2d 885.

Defendants contend that their answer and the Morales affidavits presented triable issues of fact and that it was therefore error to grant the motion for summary judgment.

[2] The propriety of granting or denying a motion for summary judgment under section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure is determined by the sufficiency of the affidavits that have been filed. Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal.2d 257, 261, 223 P.2d 244; Kimber v. Jones, 122 Cal. App.2d 914, 918, 265 P.2d 922; Cone v. Union Oil Co., 129 Cal.App.2d 558, 562, 277 P.2d 464. In Coyne v. Krempels, supra [36 Cal.2d 257, 223 P.2d 246], the Supreme Court held that a summary judgment for a plaintiff is proper where "the affidavits in support of his motion state facts that, if proved would be sufficient to sustain judgment in his favor, and defendant does not 'by affidavit or affidavits * * * show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to present a triable issue of fact.'" In referring to the contents of the affidavits of a defendant in opposition to the motion, the third paragraph of section 437c provides, in its material portion, that such "affidavit or affidavits * * * shall be made by the * * * defendant, or by any person having knowledge of the facts, and together shall set forth facts showing that the party has a good and substantial defense to the plaintiff's action (or to a portion thereof) * * *. The facts stated in each affidavit shall be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, shall be set forth with particularity, and each affidavit shall show affirmatively that the affiant, if sworn as a witness, can testify competently thereto. * * *" As this court has pointed out in several recent cases, while the pleadings serve to define the issues, the showing made in the affidavits is crucial, since there is often no genuine issue of fact although one may be raised by the formal pleadings; the affidavits permit the court to pierce the allegations of the pleadings to ascertain whether a genuine cause of action exists or whether the defense interposed is more apparent than real. Low v. Woodward Oil Co., 133 Cal.App.2d 116, 283 P.2d 720; Maltby v. Shook, 131 Cal.App.2d 349, 355, 280 P.2d 541; Cone v. Union Oil Co., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d at pages 562-563, 277 P.2d 464.

[3] It is clear from the Murphy affidavit that the personalty now held by defendants, whose recovery is the object of this action, is the property of the plaintiffs and that plaintiffs would be entitled to its immediate possession except as defendants might establish a lawful basis for its continued detention. It was therefore incumbent upon defendants, in their affidavits, to establish by facts within the personal knowledge of affiants, and to which facts the affiants could competently testify, that they had "a good and substantial defense" to the action or any portion thereof. Defendants sought to make such a showing by indicating that Eden was owner of the Topanga property, that a landlord-tenant relationship existed between Eden and plaintiffs and that plaintiffs' property was being withheld pursuant either to a judgment or possessory lien. The Morales affidavits, however, fall far short of meeting the requirements of section 437c. She avers that the contract of sale of the Topanga property between plaintiffs and the Bartons was cancelled in December, 1953, because of plaintiffs' default. There is no affidavit from the Bartons to this effect, or from the escrow holder, or from any other party to that transaction. Mrs. Morales was a stranger to that contract. Her statement is no more than a mere conclusion of law, an expression of her personal opinion to which she could not competently testify. Maltby v. Shook, supra; Krupp v. Mullen, 120 Cal.App.2d 53, 57, 260 P.2d 629. Her affidavit also states that Eden is the owner of the Topanga property by virtue of a deed from the Bartons vesting title in Eden. However, neither the deed nor an authenticated copy thereof, from which affiant deduces that title to the property is vested in Eden, was attached to the affidavit. Under such circumstances, her statement of the legal effect of this document is a mere conclusion of law. Low v. Woodward Oil Co., 133 Cal.App.2d 116, 283 P.2d 720; Cowan Oil & R. Co. v. Miley P. Corp., 112 Cal. App. Supp. 773, 780, 295 P. 504; Weichman v. Vetri, 100 Cal.App.2d 177, 179, 223 P.2d 288, and there being no reason shown to excuse production either of the original deed or an authenticated copy, she could not give competent testimony even to the contents of said documents. Low v. Woodward Oil Co., supra; Gardenswartz v. Equitable etc. Soc., 23 Cal.App.2d Supp., 745, 750, 68 P.2d 322. Similarly, the references in her affidavit to a judgment purportedly entered in the Small Claims Court in Malibu are incompetent as pure hearsay, since no certified copy of the judgment was appended to the affidavit. Low v. Woodward Oil Co., supra, and cases there cited.

[4-7] However, even if it be assumed that plaintiffs defaulted in their contract for the purchase of the Topanga property and that Eden acquired title thereto by virtue of its deed from the Bartons on June 28, 1954, and that plaintiffs' occupancy of the realty thereafter was tortious, defendants' affidavits fail completely to show any justification for the detention of plaintiffs' personal property located on the premises. No facts are alleged which give defendants any color of lien upon such personalty, possessory or otherwise. No attachment was run and admittedly no execution was levied pursuant to the small claims judgment. Any right of defendants to assert a landlord's lien for unpaid rent upon the personal property here in question under section 1861a of the Civil Code would depend on plaintiffs' status as a tenant of defendants at the time of the detention of the property. But the undisputed facts clearly negative a landlord-tenant relationship. It is admitted that plaintiffs secured possession of the Topanga property under a contract of purchase entered into with defendants' predecessor in interest. It is well established that one who enters into possession of land under an executory contract to purchase does not thereby become the tenant of the vendor, where there is no reservation of rent fixed in the contract. Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 635, 637, 50 P. 683; Belger v. Sanchez, 137 Cal. 614, 618, 70 P. 738. Plaintiffs' occupancy thereafter was under rights claimed as vendee by virtue of their transaction with the Bartons. The fact that defendants served a notice to pay rent or quit upon plaintiffs did not create a landlord-tenant relationship where none had previously existed where, as here, plaintiffs refused to assent to the relationship. Pacific States Corporation v. Arnold, 23 Cal.App. 672, 675, 139 P. 239. Assuming that as owners of the property defendants could successfully maintain an action to recover the premises from plaintiffs as defaulting vendees of defendants' predecessor in interest. Pomeroy v. Bell, supra, and that they might recover for the reasonable value of plaintiffs' use and occupancy of the property after June 28, 1954, Herond v. Bonsall, 60 Cal.App.2d 152, 155, 140 P.2d 121, there was no such landlord-tenant relationship as would confer upon defendants the possessory lien on plaintiffs' personal property authorized by Civil Code section 1861a. Plaintiffs were simply rival claimants holding adversely to defendants; no landlord-tenant relationship springs from such a situation. Pico v. Phelan, 77 Cal. 86, 19 P. 186. It being manifest that no basis for any lien existed in defendants and it clearly appearing from the affidavits that defendants were withholding plaintiffs' personal property without legal sanction, the summary judgment ordering its return to plaintiffs was proper.

[8-11] However, the court erred in summarily granting the alternative judgment for the value of the property and in awarding damages for its detention. An action for the recovery of personal property is what has been termed a mixed action, being partly in rem and partly in personam. So far as the specific recovery of the chattels is concerned, the action is in rem; it is in personam so far as damages are sought. Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 501, 26 P. 1077. While the title to, and right of immediate possession of, the property are the matters primarily to be determined therein. Stockton Morris Plan v. Mariposa County, 123 Cal.App.2d 509, 511, 267 P.2d 47, the allegation of value serves a two-fold purpose: (1) to enable plaintiffs' damage to be assessed should restoration of the property be impossible, and (2) to fix the amount of the undertaking if the auxiliary remedy of Claim and Delivery provided for by sections 509 to 520 of the Code of Civil Procedure is invoked. In their complaint, plaintiffs alleged the value of the property to be $5,777.50. Defendants' answer brought this in issue by their denial. Where an alternative judgment for the value of personal property is rendered in a replevin action against the possibility that delivery in kind cannot be had, there appears to be some divergence as to whether such value should be ascertained as of the date of its wrongful detention or as of the date of the trial. (10 Cal.Jur.2d sec. 65.) However, in the case at bar, plaintiffs' affidavits are completely devoid of any evidentiary facts stating the value of the property at either of such times. All that appears on the subject is a mere reference to the complaint in Murphy's affidavit, which is incorporated by reference in its entirety therein. We need not dwell here on the unsatisfactory nature of this technique as a means of complying with the requirements of section 437c, since it not only makes difficult the task of preparing a counteraffidavit and invites a mere re-incorporation therein of the answer on file, but seems out of harmony with that section, which demands that evidentiary facts be set out with particularity. Low v. Woodward Oil Co., supra, while pleadings are concerned with ultimate facts. Be that as it may, however, a reading of complaint shows that it contains nothing other than a bald allegation as to the value of the property, not directed to any particular time. For aught that appears, such value may be the value of the property when it was new, or at some time other than that of (1) its wrongful seizure or (2) the date the matter is heard. It is fundamental that if a plaintiff is to prevail on his motion for summary judgment, his supporting affidavits must state facts covering every element necessary to sustain a judgment in his favor. Kimber v. Jones, supra; Hardy v. Hardy, 23 Cal.2d 244, 245-247, 143 P.2d 701. It is also axiomatic that the affidavits of the moving party must be strictly construed. Kimber v. Jones, supra; Travelers Indemnity Co. v. McIntosh, 112 Cal.App.2d 177, 182, 245 P.2d 1065. Plaintiffs' affidavits being fatally deficient in setting out the value of the property in dispute at any time at which its value could be properly measured, the summary judgment against defendants for the value of the property cannot stand.

[12, 13] The court also erred in summarily awarding plaintiffs the sum of $1,640 as damages for the detention of the property at the rate of $10 per day from August 15, 1954, to the date of the hearing. Defendants' answer denied such damage and alleged an offer to return various items of property. Mr. Lavelle's affidavit conceded that defendants, on or about August 21, 1954, "were willing to return such portion of said personal property as was exempt from execution if plaintiffs herein would file their claim of exemption therefor." Mrs. Morales' affidavit stated she informed Lavelle on the above occasion that Eden was willing "to release all the personal property exempt from execution and * * * Lavelle stated to affiant * * * that he refused to accept the offer and he would not take any of it unless he could have all of it * * *". If these facts in Mrs. Morales' affidavit showing an unconditional offer to surrender numerous items and its refusal by plaintiffs' attorney are true, then it might be found there was no wrongful detention as to a part of the property. In any event, these controverted issues present a triable question of fact as to whether plaintiffs might have mitigated their damages by accepting defendants' offer. It is fundamental that the plaintiff cannot be compensated for damages which he might have prevented by reasonable efforts or expenditures. Valencia v. Shell Oil Co., 23 Cal.2d 840, 844, 147 P.2d 558; Schultz v. Town of Lakeport, 5 Cal.2d 377, 382-383, 54 P.2d 1110, 55 P.2d 485, 108 A.L.R. 1168; California Cotton Co-op. Ass'n v. Byrne, 58 Cal.App.2d 340, 345, 136 P.2d 359. An issue of fact being disclosed as to whether, under the particular circumstances of the case, plaintiffs might have mitigated their damages by availing themselves of an opportunity to procure immediate possession of a portion of their property at any earlier stage in the proceedings, it was error not to relegate for trial the matter of damages sought for detention of the property.

[14] The final paragraph of section 437c authorizes a partial summary judgment where it appears that defendant has no defense to a part of plaintiffs' claim. Plaintiffs herein are entitled to a partial summary judgment for the recovery of the personal property here in dispute. Since the alternative judgment for $5,777.-50 and the award of damages for detention were improperly rendered because of the existence of triable issues of fact, plaintiffs' claim as to these items should be severed and the action may proceed as to these remaining claims if plaintiffs be so advised. If plaintiffs evince a desire to prosecute the disputed portions of its separable claim, no judgment may "be entered prior to the termination of such action but the judgment in such action shall, in addition to any matters determined in such action, award to plaintiff * * * his claim so established by the proceedings herein provided for." Code Civ.Proc., sec. 437c. Thus, although plaintiffs are entitled to summary judgment for the recovery of their personal property, should they elect to proceed to trial of the remaining portions of their cause of action the statute controlling summary judgment procedure commands that final judgment must await the ultimate outcome of the trial of those issues.

The judgment is reversed with directions to take further proceedings in accord with the views herein expressed. Each side to bear its own costs on appeal.

D. R. MILLER, Plaintiff, Appellant and Cross-Respondent,

v.

Stanley J. BROWN, Defendant, Respondent and Cross-Appellant.

Civ. 16436.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 28, 1955.

Action by owner against builder to recover amount by which price of building house exceeded contract price, wherein builder cross-complained for amount claimed still due him for construction of the house. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Leonard R. Avilla, J., entered judgment denying relief to owner and granting builder $700 on cross-complaint, whereupon owner appealed and builder cross-appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to show that owner had executed oral agreement approving increased cost of the building, and also held that where building contract expressly provided that total fees of builder should not exceed $2100, and there was no evidence of any parol or executed agreement modifying this term of contract, builder was entitled to recover only $700 on cross-complaint, having already received $1400.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Where evidence on basic issues is highly conflicting, District Court of Appeal is bound to resolve all conflicts in favor of that evidence which supports the judgment.

2. Evidence ⇨461(1)

Contract that provided compensation for builder would be 10 per cent of total cost of construction and would not exceed $2,100, thus indicating that fee to be paid builder was not part of total cost of construction and that contained guarantee that total cost should not exceed $28,000 was sufficiently ambiguous to permit introduction of parol testimony to explain intent of parties.

3. Payment ⇨89(5)

In action by owner against builder to recover amount by which price of building house exceeded contract price, wherein builder testified that parties understood and agreed builder's fee was not to be considered part of $28,000 guaranty contract price, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that cost of house did not exceed $28,000.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨293

A party cannot object for the first time on appeal to defects in findings, such as that the challenged finding is in reality a conclusion, or that the findings are not sufficiently explicit, or are in conflict, unless he has first raised the point on motion for new trial.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨302(5)

Charge "that the decision is against the law", made upon motion for new trial, was too general to raise issue that findings were not sufficiently specific for appeal purposes.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨713(2)

District Court of Appeal could not consider points not contained in the record and thus would not consider issue allegedly raised on oral arguments on motion for new trial.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨219(2)

Failure to find on an essential issue may be raised for first time on appeal.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨931(8)

Where there was some uncertainty in the findings and not a failure to find on an essential issue, any uncertainty present was construed so as to support the judgment.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(1)

Where an alleged error results from omissions in the finding which, if corrected, would nevertheless have been adverse to appellant, such error will not warrant reversal.

10. Contracts ⇨247

Principal and Agent ⇨173(3)

In action by owner against builder to recover amount by which price of building house exceeded contract price, evidence was sufficient to show that written contract specifying $28,000 as agreed cost was orally modified so as to increase cost of building, and such modification was ratified by owner.

11. Contracts ⇨238(2)

An executed oral agreement could alter an agreement in writing, even though the original contract provided that all changes must be approved in writing because the executed oral agreement may alter, or modify that provision of the contract as well as other portions. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1698.

12. Appeal and Error ⇨991

In action by owner against builder to recover amount by which price of building house exceeded contract price, wherein there was a conflict in evidence as to whether certain oral modifications to original contract were in existence on date set for building and therefore part of contract, such question was one of fact for trial court.

13. Payment ⇨89(5)

In action by owner against builder to recover amount by which building price of house exceeded agreed contract price, an itemized list of costs of construction of the house, not contained in contract itself, was admissible in evidence to show what was referred to in written agreement, and was not a separate contract or agreement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1647.

14. Evidence ⇨448

Where the terms of written contract are ambiguous or uncertain, parol evidence is admissible not to vary the terms of the written contract but to explain them. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1625; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.

15. Contracts ⇨175(3)

Fact that certain plans and specifications were filed with building inspector, did not establish with certainty that such plans and specifications so filed were those referred to in the written contract, where there was no showing such plans were intended by the party to be controlling.

16. Witnesses ⇨275(6)

In action by owner against builder to recover amount by which price of building house exceeded contract price, restriction of cross-examination of builder so as to exclude questions concerning four other jobs as to which builder had exceeded contract price, was proper.

17. Contracts ⇨232(2)

Where building price was set at $28,000, builder was not entitled to certain sums paid for withholding taxes, unemployment taxes, unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation, and for repairs of cement slab, which could not be classed as extras included in building contract.

18. Contracts ⇨231(1)

Where building contract provided that "it is agreed that total fees of builder shall not exceed sum of $2,100," and there was no evidence of any parol agreement executed modifying this term of contract, builder was entitled to only $700 on cross-complaint, having been paid. $1,400.

W. Gordon Eustice, Los Altos, for defendant.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Stanley J. Brown, a builder, contracted to build a house for D. R. Miller, at a fixed price, plus extras. After the house was constructed it cost considerably more than the contract price. The parties disagreed over what items should be listed as extras. Miller paid most of the bills and brought this action against Brown to recover $9,416.78, that being the amount that Miller claims that the price of the house exceeded the contract price. Brown answered and cross-complained for $1,698.58, the amount he claimed was still due him. The trial court entered its judgment denying any relief to Miller on his complaint, and granted Brown $700 on his cross-complaint. Miller appeals from the judgment insofar as it is adverse to him, and Brown cross-appeals from the portion of the judgment limiting his recovery to $700.

[1] Basically, most of the problems on these two appeals are factual. The evidence on the basic issue is highly conflicting. We are, of course, bound to resolve all conflicts in favor of that evidence that supports the judgment. That evidence is as follows:

Sometime prior to the 29th of August, 1952, Miller and Brown entered into an undated written "Building Agreement." There are several important provisions of that agreement which should be quoted. They are:

"1. The Builder, acting as an agent for the owner shall purchase all materials and supervise the performance of all required masonry, [sic] iron work, rough and finish carpentry, plastering, dry wall materials, painting, glass and glazing, roofing, and rough grading, for the one story residence to be constructed [for D. R. Miller] * * *. In accordance with plans and specifications and made a part hereof * * *.

"4. Owner shall pay the labor and material bills for the construction of the above described residence in the following manner: By depositing of money to take care of costs in a joint bank account as needed during process of construction; both Owner and Builder to check and okay bills before payment; Builder to write checks for same on joint account * * *

"5. The Owner agrees that the Builder shall receive for his services the sum of 10% of the total cost of construction * * *

"6. It is further agreed that the Owner and Builder shall cooperate to keep the cost of construction down and that any benefit derived from same shall be credited to the Owner. Any changes or deviations from the plans and specifications shall be in writing and signed for by both Owner and Builder. * * *

"9. It is agreed that the total fees of the builder shall not exceed the sum of $2,100.00 although 10% of the cost may be in excess of this amount.

"10. The builder guarantees the owner that the total cost shall not exceed $28,000.-00. provided that there are no changes in the plans as agreed upon."

It will be noted that this agreement requires that the house shall be constructed "In accordance with plans and specifications" that are "made a part hereof." One of the major controversies on these appeals is what was meant by that phrase. Prior to the signing of the contract, Brown had received preliminary plans from Mr. Woodruff, the draftsman. These preliminary plans, among other things, (Ex. H) called for a basement, an oil heating system, plaster walls, hardwood floors and exterior brick veneer. They were used by Brown to secure estimates from subcontractors. On the basis of these estimates Brown submitted an estimate to Miller of \$28,354.30 (Ex. 11). Miller was of the opinion that this was more expensive than he desired, and he and Brown agreed to certain changes. Based on these changes Brown submitted a document entitled: "Cost of Construction of Residence for Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Miller." (Ex. B.) The costs here submitted totalled \$26,400.55. Brown testified that this cost list was the basis for the undated agreement above quoted, and Miller admitted that this was so. Brown claims that the changes then agreed upon provided for omitting the basement, substituting a gas furnace for the oil furnace, using basement heating, and using $\frac{3}{4}$ " plank flooring for Bruce flooring. He also testified that at the time Exhibit B was agreed upon there were no other plans and specifications in existence. Construction on the building started August 29, 1952.

Woodruff, the draftsman, testified that he completed the original plans by July 31, 1952, and that on August 26th, at Brown's request, he altered the original plans so as to swing the bedroom wing around towards the patio. This change is embodied in Exhibit 4. These altered plans, he testified, he finished on August 30, 1952, and then delivered them to Brown. Brown disputed this evidence. He testified that it was not until August 30, 1952, after construction began, that he received the plans embodied in Exhibit 3, and that he did not receive the revised plans swinging the bedroom around (Ex. 4) until September 2, 1952. He was definite that the bedroom revision was not agreed upon until after the undated agreement above quoted (Ex. 1) had been signed. This conflict was for the trial court.

Admittedly, on September 8, 1952, Brown filed a request for a building permit and included in the request Exhibit 3 even though by that date the bedroom revision embodied in Exhibit 4 had been agreed upon. Brown stated, however, that he did this because the plans for the bedroom revision were then incomplete, and had incomplete plans been filed, the permit would have been denied.

Thus, Brown's testimony is that when the undated agreement (Ex. 1) referred to "plans and specifications" it meant the original plans plus the oral modifications made to reduce costs as shown by Exhibit B. Miller disputes this evidence. He claims that Exhibits 2 and 3 are the "plans and specifications" referred to in the undated agreement embodied in Exhibit 1, and that the only alterations to those was the swinging of the bedroom wing so as to create an "L" shaped house instead of the originally designed straight line shape.

When the house was completed its total cost had amounted to $37,602.78. Toward the end of construction a dispute arose between the parties over what were proper extras. At that time Miller admittedly approved extras amounting to about $3,800. At the trial, however, Miller contended that he approved extras in that amount only in the spirit of compromise, and that the correct figure for the extras was about $2,400. The parties were unable to settle the dispute by negotiation. Miller paid all but a very few of the outstanding bills, claiming he did so only because he wanted to prevent mechanic's liens from being filed, and then brought this action for $9,416.78, the amount he claims is the difference between what he paid for the house and the contract cost, plus admitted extras and less certain claimed savings. Brown answered, and cross-complained for the amount of several bills he paid, for $700 remaining due for his services under the contract, and for 10 per cent of the value of the extras. The total amount prayed for in the cross-complaint was $1,698.58.

Miller is a real estate broker. The check book from which bills were paid was in his possession and he had all the canceled checks. Obviously, he knew the amount that he deposited in this account and knew how much had been paid from it. Moreover, a full accounting between the parties was had each month as to each bill that was paid. As late as July 8, 1953, Miller knew that he had already deposited $35,000 in the building account, and also knew that Brown was still writing checks on the account. During construction Miller lived near the new house, visited the site several times a week, supervised much of the work and talked with many of the subcontractors. There is no dispute over the fact that the house was constructed exactly as agreed upon.

At the trial, the basic dispute involved the charges over and above the agreed upon $28,000, the question being whether these items were "extras" or covered by the contract. The solution to this problem obviously depends upon the determination of what was included in the contract. According to Brown, all of the following were extras:

1. Excavating and grading: The estimate for this item was $180. The total cost was $666.75. Brown claims that the difference was an extra because the $180 was a mere allowance and not a fixed bid. This is indicated, so he urges, by the word "Est." following the item in the contract. He contends that the extra cost exceeded the estimate or allowance because of the change in the bedroom wing plans which required more excavating of the hill back of the house than was required by the original contract. It should be mentioned that this and the other "extras" claimed by Brown are listed in Defendant's Exhibits A and C, and that these two exhibits are marked "O.K.," apparently by Miller. Miller admitted that this item was proper.

2. The driveway: An allowance of $100 was made for this item. The actual cost was $811.16, which admittedly included some enlargement from the final plans. The actual plans for the driveway first appear as part of Plaintiff's Exhibit 3.

3. The septic tank: Here was an additional $58 to that provided in the original contract. This was caused by Miller ordering a garbage disposal unit which required a larger tank. Admittedly, Miller did not expressly order this extra. Brown testified that after the disposal unit was ordered he had to go ahead with a larger tank without first securing Miller's approval.

4. Painting: The actual cost exceeded the bid of $1,550 by $600. The painter claimed this additional sum as an extra because of the extra painting required by the changes set forth in Exhibit 4 and other changes. Brown at first contested paying this extra sum, but Miller, by letter, ordered the sum paid. Both litigants signed the check.

5. Electric work: Brown testified that two electric heaters were added, totaling $100. This is "O.K.'d" by Miller on Exhibits A and C. Brown testified that Miller ordered as an extra underground electrical service which cost $344.76. Although the specifications and plans do not show the underground service, Miller claims that this equipment was agreed upon at the time the agreement was signed. Brown denied that this was so. Brown also testified that Miller went over the electrical wiring and O.K.'d with the subcontractor additional fixtures and outlets, adding $198.30 to the cost, and then added mercury switches, increasing the cost by $53.68. Miller approved the $198.30 item. None of the challenged items appears on the plans and specifications.

6. Finished hardware: The cost of this exceeded the original allowance of $200 by $104.68. Miller had selected the hardware and had O.K.'d this item.

7. Marble hearth: Miller approved a change to replace the brick hearth called for by the plans and specifications with marble. This added $217 to the cost.

8. Mirrors: The specifications include mirrors and the original plans show mirrors. Brown contends that the plans do not "call" for mirrors, but merely indicated their location. He urges that the specifications were not part of the contract, and points out that the original agreement was based on Exhibit B which did not include mirrors. Brown urges that the mirrors were to be furnished by Miller, just like the refrigerator, washing machine and dishwasher, which were also shown on the plans, but which admittedly were to be furnished by Miller. Miller picked the mirrors out. They cost $163.39.

9. Screen: This admittedly was an extra.

10. Formica: The original plans, Exhibit H, did not indicate whether certain cabinets were to be formica or tile. Brown contends that that item was intentionally omitted because the Millers were undecided. Miller contends that it was in Exhibit 2, was understood to be part of the contract, and was not an extra. The amount involved is $315.

11. Common labor: The parties dispute the amount of $504.29, the amount the actual cost of this item exceeded the original estimate. Brown testified that this cost was incurred because of the change in the bedroom wing, the digging of trenches for the underground wiring, the extending of the patios, and the labor cost of moving lumber and bricks which Miller wanted saved.

12. Carpenter labor: Here the extra cost was $2,388.79. Part of this was caused by the bedroom change, which increased the size of the establishment. Brown admitted that it was difficult to trace this item. Miller admitted that additional carpenter work was caused by changing the shape of the building, and admitted that he had ordered certain changes in the bathroom windows, and additional moulding and valances, and certain changes in the flooring. Miller conceded that half the claimed extra cost for this item was justified, while Brown testified that the additional carpenter work actually exceeded the amount he was claiming.

13. Lumber: The change in the bedrooms added $195.19 to the lumber cost. This item was approved by Miller on Exhibits A and C.

14. Millwork: The cabinet maker testified as to $786.36 being the cost of extras which he itemized. These included birch panelling in the den, and many other items which he stated were directly ordered by Miller, or were caused by the change made in the floor plans.

15. Tile: The tile man testified to changes in the tile work ordered by Miller totaling $466.60. This item was O.K.'d by Miller on Exhibits A and C.

16. Plumbing: This extra of $184.57 resulted because Miller substituted colored fixtures for white ones. Miller concedes the validity of this charge. Incidentally, it is the only extra directly authorized in writing.

17. Sheet metal: Here there was an extra charge of $235.25. This was caused by the addition of the furnace room, and by the adding of metal gutters by Miller. These items were approved by Miller in Exhibits A and C.

The total of all the claimed extras is $8,097.50, of which Miller admits but about $2,400.

In addition to the "extras," the parties discuss several deletions, for which Miller claims a credit. These relate to changes in the basement, omission of the fuel tank, change in the panelling in the den, change in the veneer from the patio to the terrace, change in the flooring, etc. Whether these were deletions from the signed contract for which a credit should be allowed depends upon when they were made. Brown consistently testified that most of these changes were made before the contract was executed as part of the attempt to reduce the cost of the house and so were made before the contract was executed. He also testified that when the signed agreement referred to "plans and specifications" it referred to Exhibit H as orally modified, and that Exhibits 2, 3 and 4 were not then in existence.

Brown has been paid $1,400 as compensation under the contract, which sum he urges should not be included in the $28,000 because his compensation was not a part of "Costs of Construction" as set forth in Exhibit B and was never intended as part of the guaranteed cost.

In a memorandum decision the trial court stated that "the terms of the original contract for construction were modified by numerous oral agreements, express or implied, which tho not in writing as required by the original contract are nevertheless binding because fully executed and accepted. Plaintiff owner was at all times fully aware of these modifications or by his conduct ratified them when he did become aware."

Its findings are consistent with these views. The court found that the "total construction costs of said residence exceeded the agreed price of $28,000 but that said additional amounts were caused by changes, deviations, and additions to the plans requested by plaintiff and cross-defendants and for which defendant and cross-complainant is not responsible." It also found that "the changes, deviations, and additions to the original plans for the house requested by plaintiff and cross-defendants constituted a [sic] alteration or modification of said written agreement of August 28, 1952, being executed oral agreements of modification requested * * * by plaintiff and * * * performed by defendant."

Based on these ultimate facts the trial court denied any relief to Miller on the cause of action set forth in his complaint, and awarded Brown $700 on the cause of action set forth in his cross-complaint, and entered its judgment accordingly. Each party appeals from those portions of the judgment adverse to him.

[2,3] The first contention of Miller is that as a matter of simple arithmetic the cost of the house, less extras, exceeded $28,000, and, therefore, a judgment in some amount should have been entered in his favor. If the $8,283.83 in extras be deducted from the admitted cost of $37,602.78, the resulting figure is $29,318.95, which, of course, does exceed the $28,000 contract price. But included in the $29,318.95 computation is the $1,400 paid to Brown as part of his compensation for supervising construction. The contract provides that the compensation of Brown shall be a percentage "of the total cost of construction," and not to exceed $2,100, so that obviously the fee to be paid Brown was not a part of the "total cost of construction." The guarantee that the "total cost" should not exceed $28,000 is therefore sufficiently ambiguous to permit the introduction of parol testimony to explain the intent of the parties. Brown testified that the parties understood and agreed that his fee was not to be considered a part of the $28,000 guaranty. Thus, the trial court was justified in its determination that the "total cost" of the building did not exceed $28,000. This makes it unnecessary to consider other contentions of the parties on this point.

[4-6] Miller next objects to the fact that the trial court did not expressly find what documents constituted the contract, and contends that this was error, citing Haight v. Tryon, 112 Cal. 4, 44 P. 318. Insofar as this contention is based on the concept that the trial court should have made more specific findings, it is without merit. The Haight case recognizes that a party cannot object for the first time on appeal to defects in the findings, such as that the challenged finding is in reality a conclusion, or that the findings are not sufficiently explicit, or are in conflict, unless he has first raised the point on a motion for a new trial. See Goss v. Fanoie, 114 Cal.App.2d 819, 251 P.2d 337, see cases collected 3 Cal.Jur.2d p. 648, § 163. Miller does argue that he did urge the point in his motion for a new trial by the charge "that the decision is against the law," and also contends that he raised the point in his oral argument on the motion for a new trial. Obviously, the quoted allegation, without elaboration, is much too general to raise the issue that the findings were not sufficiently specific. It is equally clear, since the oral argument on the motion for a new trial was not transcribed and is not in the record, that we are limited to the record and cannot now consider points not contained in the record.

[7-9] Miller asserts, however, that this was more than a failure to make the findings more specific, and that the failure here amounted to a failure to find on an essential issue. This may, of course, be raised for the first time on appeal. Mackay v. Whitaker, 116 Cal.App.2d 504, 253 P.2d 1021; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Romero, 128 Cal.App.2d 331, 275 P.2d 83. But an examination of the findings discloses that, at most, there was some uncertainty in the findings and not a failure to find on an essential issue. It is well settled that "any uncertainty in the findings is to be construed so as to support the judgment rather than to defeat it." Warren v. Hopkins, 110 Cal. 506, 512, 42 P. 986, 988. And "Where an alleged error results from omissions in a finding which, if corrected, would nevertheless have been adverse to the appellant, the error will not warrant a reversal." Matlin v. Crescent Commercial Corp., 93 Cal.App.2d 8, 12, 207 P.2d 873, 875.

The rule of these cases is here applicable. The basic finding here was that "changes, deviations, and additions to the original plans * * * constituted a [sic] alteration or modification of said written agreement of August 28, 1952." Thus, we have a finding that there was a written agreement of August 28, 1952, and that there were alterations and modifications of it consisting of executed changes to the original plans. These findings seem to us to be sufficiently explicit, but even if they were vague or uncertain this should have been brought to the attention of the trial court in a proper manner, which was not done.

[10] The basic contention of Miller is that the findings are unsupported by sufficient evidence. He contends that there was no evidence of ratification by Miller of the increased cost, and claims that the sole basis of the court's decision is the fact that Miller paid for the increased charges. These contentions are unsound.

The facts have already been set forth at some length. If conflicts be resolved in favor of Brown, as they must, the record shows that Exhibit H was used by Brown to secure preliminary estimates; that these were presented to Miller, who found them to be too high; that thereupon Miller and Brown went over the plans substituting various items for those set forth in Exhibit H. From Exhibit H, as orally modified, a new cost of construction estimate—Exhibit B—was drawn up. This was the basis of the written agreement. Thus, the written contract embodied in Exhibit 1, when it referred to "plans and specifications", referred to Exhibit H as orally modified.

[11] Subsequent to the execution of Exhibit 1, complete plans—Exhibits 2 and 3—were drafted. Then Miller, as owner, changed the basic plans by moving the bedroom wing. This increased many of the estimated costs of construction. Thereafter, Miller ordered more millwork, birch walls for the den, select birch for the cabinets, additional valances, moldings, a fancy mantel, etc., all of which are listed in Exhibit 6. Then Miller changed the type of tile agreed upon and increased its amount, added a furnace room, a metal gutter around the house, and added a garbage disposal which necessitated a larger septic tank. Then Miller ordered Brown to pay the painters an additional amount which the painters were claiming and Brown was contesting. He ordered numerous changes in the electrical specifications such as two electric heaters, mercury switches and underground service, changed the hearth, ordered a screen, changed the location and size of windows. The record shows that extras were ordered and approved by Miller in the amount of $8,097.50. Under the law this amounted to a modification of the written contract. Miller places great reliance on the provision of the contract which provides that alterations must be in writing, and points out here that he only approved one alteration in writing. But under section 1698 of the Civil Code, an executed oral agreement may alter an agreement in writing, even though, as here, the original contract provides that all changes must be approved in writing. This is so because the executed oral agreement may alter or modify that provision of the contract as well as other portions. Heple v. Kluge, 114 Cal. App.2d 473, 250 P.2d 694; Nuttman v. Chais, 101 Cal.App.2d 476, 225 P.2d 660; D. L. Godbey & Sons Const. Co. v. Deane, 39 Cal.2d 429, 246 P.2d 946.

[12] Miller's basic claim seems to be that, according to his interpretation of the evidence, many of the so-called executed oral modifications were in fact part of the original contract. This contention is predicated on his belief that Exhibits 2, 3 and 4 constituted the "plans and specifications" referred to in the written contract. If this were true then, of course, the judgment would have to be reversed. But this evidence is contradicted by substantial evidence offered by Brown to the effect that these exhibits were not in existence on August 28, 1952, and so did not form part of the contract. The trial court believed Brown. This was, of course, a fact question for the trial court. Luitweiler Pumping Engine Co. v. Ukiah etc., Co., 16 Cal. App. 198, 116 P. 707, 712; Fiddymont v. Johnson, 18 Cal.App. 339, 123 P. 342; Thomson v. Leak, 135 Cal.App. 544, 27 P.2d 795; Morrison v. Willhoit, 62 Cal. App.2d 830, 145 P.2d 707.

[13,14] Miller contends that it was error to admit into evidence over his objection Exhibit B, which is an itemized list of the cost of construction of the Miller house. The trial court first excluded this exhibit, but later reversed this decision, and admitted the exhibit. The last ruling was undoubtedly correct. The contract to construct the house is embodied in Exhibit 1. This contract does not contain the plans and specifications, but refers to plans and specifications as being part of the contract. Exhibit B is an itemized list of the costs of construction which admittedly was the basis of the agreement. Exhibit B was not a separate contract or agreement, but was introduced to show what was referred to in the written agreement. This was proper under section 1647 of the Civil Code which provides that "A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates." The parol evidence rule, § 1856 of the Code Civ. Proc., § 1625, Civ.Code, has no application. Where the terms of a written contract are ambiguous or uncertain, parol evidence is admissible, not to vary the terms of the written contract, but to explain them. Bartel v. Associated Dental Supply Co., 114 Cal.App. 2d 750, 251 P.2d 16; Barham v. Barham, 33 Cal.2d 416, 202 P.2d 289; Schmidt v. Macco Construction Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 717, 260 P. 2d 230. Certainly the reference in the written contract to the "plans and specifications" was uncertain. From that agreement it is impossible to determine what is meant by "plans and specifications." Parol evidence was clearly admissible to show that Exhibits 2, 3 and 4 were not then in existence, so could not be the documents to which reference had been made. Parol evidence was also clearly admissible to show that the "plans and specifications" referred to were those contained in Exhibit H. But since these plans were themselves obviously incomplete, parol evidence was admissible to show the agreed upon parol modifications and extensions of these plans and specifications. This is what Exhibit B purports to portray. It constitutes part of Brown's proof of what he contends were the actual plans and specifications referred to in the written contract.

[15] Miller next urges that because certain plans and specifications were filed with the building inspector, they, and they alone, must be considered as the "plans and specifications" referred to in the written contract, citing Heple v. Kluge, 114 Cal.App. 2d 473, 250 P.2d 694. But that case involved a situation where it was conclusively established that the plans submitted to the building authorities were the plans intended by the parties to be the basis of their contract. Thus, the holding in that case is not that the plans submitted to the building authorities were controlling, but is that those plans were the plans intended by the parties to be controlling. That is not this case.

[16] The last contention of Miller is that in one respect the trial court unduly restricted cross-examination of Brown. Brown had testified on direct that he had performed other jobs in the area as part of his proof as to his qualifications. On cross-examination Miller tried to bring out that on four of these other jobs Brown had gone over the contract price. The court sustained, and properly so, objections to these questions. Had the questions been permitted, evidence as to all the facts and circumstances surrounding those four cases would have been admissible, and those four cases would have had to be tried along with this one. Such collateral issues were properly excluded.

[17] The cross-appeal of Brown is equally without merit. Brown urges that the trial court improperly refused to find that he was entitled to certain sums paid for withholding taxes, for unemployment taxes, for unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation, and for repairs of a cement slab. These cannot be classed as extras. In fact, Brown admits that these charges "are not even in the category of extras." This being so, if they were added to the cost of construction, such cost would exceed the $28,000 contract price. Obviously, these charges could not be allowed Brown without violating the terms of the contract.

[18] Brown also claims that there were $8,097.50 extras authorized by Miller above the $28,000 agreed price, and that he should be paid 10 per cent of the cost of these extras, or $809.75. This involves a construction of the contract. It provides that: "It is agreed that the total fees of the builder shall not exceed the sum of $2100.00 [less than 10 per cent of $28,000] although 10% of the cost may be in excess of this amount." There was no evidence of any parole executed agreement modifying this term of the contract. The trial court was correct, therefore, in its holding that Brown, who had been paid $1400, could only recover $700 on his cross-complaint.

Thus, the appeals of both Miller and Brown are without merit.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

BILL GOLDSTEIN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5402.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Prosecution for grand theft and for conspiracy to commit grand theft from an insurance company by means of a fake accident scheme. Defendant and several others were indicted and tried, and defendant and another were convicted in Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burdette J. Daniels, J. Defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that evidence was sufficient to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice and sustained the verdict.

Order granting probation and order denying motion for new trial affirmed; attempted appeal from verdict dismissed.

1. Criminal Law §1159(2)

Test on appeal is not whether guilt is established beyond reasonable doubt but whether there is substantial evidence to support conclusion of the trier of fact.

2. Criminal Law §1144(13), 1159(6)

Reviewing court on appeal must assume in favor of verdict the existence of every fact which jury could have reasonably deduced from evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict, and if circumstances reasonably justify the verdict, opinion of reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with defendant's innocence will not warrant interference with jury's determination.

3. Criminal Law §412(1)

It is true in a criminal case as in civil actions that a statement against interest made by a party constitutes original and independent evidence of the facts so stated.

4. Conspiracy §43(12)

It was not essential to conviction for conspiracy to commit grand theft from insurance company by fake accident scheme to prove that details of fake accident were planned in advance or that each participant in conspiracy knew identity of others.

5. Criminal Law §511(2)

Evidence required to corroborate testimony of an accomplice need not do more than substantially tend to connect defendant with the commission of the offense in such manner as to satisfy jury that accomplice is telling the truth, and it is unnecessary that testimony of accomplice as to corpus delicti be corroborated.

6. Criminal Law §511(7)

Corroboration required with respect to testimony of an accomplice may be furnished by defendant's own words or conduct.

7. Criminal Law §507(1)

In prosecution of several defendants for grand theft and conspiracy to commit grand theft, defendant who was acquitted could not be classified as an accomplice and her testimony was competent corroboration, as to another defendant who was convicted, of testimony of an accomplice.

8. Criminal Law §511(4)

In prosecution for grand theft and conspiracy to commit grand theft, defendant's failure to testify, though such failure did not in itself constitute sufficient corroboration of testimony of accomplice, was nevertheless persuasive and lent weight to evidence presented by prosecution upon matters which were presumptively within defendant's knowledge and which if untruly stated would normally be denied by him.

9. Criminal Law ⇨511(1)

In prosecution for grand theft and conspiracy to commit grand theft, evidence corroborative of testimony of accomplice was sufficient to sustain conviction as to defendant concerned on appeal.

10. Criminal Law ⇨1130(2)

Appeal brief which cited transcript pages and asserted that error there appeared was insufficient to comply with applicable rule, and it was duty of defendant not only to point out alleged error but to show exactly wherein court's action was erroneous.

11. Criminal Law ⇨680(1)

Order of proof, especially in a conspiracy, rests in discretion of the trial judge.

12. Criminal Law ⇨414

In prosecution for grand theft and for conspiracy to commit grand theft, evidence was sufficient adequately to establish corpus delicti, from standpoint of admissibility of testimony as to conversations.

13. Criminal Law ⇨406(2), 418(2)

In prosecution for grand theft and for conspiracy to commit grand theft, police officer's accusation addressed to defendant that defendant knew a named person, who was also named as a conspirator, and defendant's denial, followed by subsequent admission that he knew such person, were admissible.

14. Criminal Law ⇨412(1), 432

In prosecution for grand theft and for conspiracy to commit grand theft, from insurance company by fake accident scheme, exhibits consisting of checks received in settlement from insurance company, defendant's business card and defendant's statement given to adjuster were properly received in evidence.

15. Criminal Law ⇨1023(10)

Where probation was granted and proceedings suspended there was no judgment to be appealed from, and this was true notwithstanding requirement that defendant pay fine and make certain restitution as conditions of probation.

16. Criminal Law ⇨1023(12)

Where probation has been granted and no judgment entered, an appeal which purports to be taken from the judgment may be treated as an appeal from the probation order. Pen.Code, § 1237.

17. Criminal Law ⇨1023(10)

No appeal lay from verdict in criminal case, and attempted appeal therefrom would be dismissed.

Jess Whitehill, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Defendant Bill Goldstein was indicted for grand theft and conspiracy to commit grand theft. Also indicted and tried with him were Jay Rich and his wife, Betty Rich. Goldstein and Jay Rich were convicted. Betty Rich was acquitted. Defendant Goldstein made a motion for new trial which was denied. Probation was granted him and other proceedings in the case were suspended. He appeals from the order denying new trial and from the "verdict and final judgment." His is the only appeal with which we are now concerned. One Hyman Kean was also named as a conspirator, but was not indicted and became the prosecution's chief witness.

The substance of the charge was that Kean and one Mark Price were engaged in the perpetration of fake automobile accidents and collecting fraudulent claims from insurance companies based thereon; that Kean arranged with the defendants Rich to participate in such a fraud; that defendant Goldstein joined the conspiracy; that a prearranged collision was had between Goldstein's truck, driven by him, and Rich's automobile which he was operating; that fraudulent claims for damages were presented by the Riches and the Keans to Goldstein's insurer, National Automobile and Casualty Insurance Company; that they resulted in payments by the insurance company of amounts totaling $2,750, part of which went to the defendant Goldstein.

[1,2] Appellant's primary claim is that the evidence is insufficient to warrant a finding of conspiracy and in the absence thereof there could be no finding of the consummation of the grand theft. The rule which must guide us in examining this contention is stated in People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911, 916, as follows: "The test on appeal is whether there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trier of fact. It is not whether guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt. '* * * We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.' If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference with the determination of the jury.'" See also People v. Gutierrez, 35 Cal.2d 721, 727, 221 P.2d 22; People v. Hatton, 114 Cal.App. 2d 195, 196, 249 P.2d 901. We therefore adopt in our statement of facts that evidence which tends to support the judgment, rather than any conflicting testimony which was designed to prevent such a result. The following statement is based principally upon the testimony of Hyman Kean.

Kean, who had known Goldstein and Rich for years, went with Mark Price on or about July 27, 1953, to see the Riches, asked Jay Rich to go in on an accident which would be set up and said the money that was to be derived therefrom would be split three ways. Price told him he would have another party hit a car and the Riches would be participants in the accident; that Mr. and Mrs. Rich would occupy the automobile that would be hit and they were to be injured. Reference was made to the insurance company and the splitting of the moneys received. Kean was to get a commission for introducing the Riches to Price. On or about August 14th there was another conversation between the same persons wherein it was said that after the accident the person that was to be hit would go to the hospital; that that would look better and if there was another party involved that would bring in more money. Price again indicated that Mr. Rich was to go to the hospital and Mrs. Rich was to take a part in the accident. The exact manner in which it was to be brought about was not stated in detail. Rich, the husband, said that if it was all right, if Kean thought it safe, he would take part in it, and he was assured that Price had made many cases before, that he had been at it for many years and had never had any trouble.

Shortly before August 15th, Kean and Price called at Goldstein's market to see him, but he was out. Soon thereafter Kean went alone to see Goldstein, who was busy waiting on customers in his market (at Fairfax and Oakwood in the city of Los Angeles), but nevertheless carried on a running conversation. Kean asked if he had insurance on his car. Defendant replied in the affirmative. He was then asked if he would go in on an accident with Kean and he made no definite reply, just listened. It was explained to him that there would be three persons included in the accident, that in order to get money he, Goldstein, would have to hit a car and if there were three people involved that the money would be split three ways. Asked if he had a car or a truck, defendant said he had both, and Kean suggested that the truck would be preferred. Shortly thereafter, Kean and Goldstein had another conversation at the market, and the latter was asked if he would come in on an accident. He said: "What is it; how would it take place?" and was told that several people would be involved and he would get one-third of the money. While the details of the proposed accident were not spelled out, Kean said he would have a party in the car and Goldstein would arrive from the back and hit the car lightly, not to hurt anybody. Goldstein made no audible commitment, but when asked if he would go in on the venture he nodded his head up and down, in an affirmative manner.

[3] Shortly before the time arrived for perpetrating the collision Price, who had been managing the enterprise up to that date, got into an argument with Mrs. Kean, who ordered him out of her home, and thereafter Mr. Kean took over the conduct of the venture. On the evening of August 19th the Riches went to the Kean residence and Mr. Rich was told by Kean about the argument with Price; also that he, Kean, had somebody other than Price's party in mind and would call him; that he knew a fellow that he had talked to a few days before who had nodded his head. He asked Rich if he would go through with the accident that night and was told that it was all right with Rich if it was all right with Kean and if he could get the proper party to do the hitting. Then Kean suggested to his wife that they go do some shopping. He had previously learned from defendant's brother, Joe Goldstein, that defendant customarily closed the market about 9:00 o'clock on alternate evenings and then drove south on Fairfax to Venice Boulevard on his way home. Kean on this occasion suggested that they go to Fairfax to shop and told Rich he would do the shopping while they were sitting in the car and he would call "this party" about the accident. Rich agreed. The four of them, Kean, Rich and the two wives, then drove in Rich's Oldsmobile to a place on Fairfax Avenue which was between Olympic Boulevard and Pico Street, and parked the car on the west side of the street facing south. This was opposite the Bagel Delicatessen and Restaurant, which was on the east side of the street. Kean then crossed the street, went into the Bagel, made a telephone call, using the number of Goldstein's market; when someone answered he asked to talk to Bill Goldstein, was told to hold the wire a minute; then Goldstein answered the call, Kean recognized his voice and said: "This is Hy. I am down at Pico and Fairfax." Also: "Bill, I am down here on Fairfax between—right across from the Bagel Delicatessen Restaurant and I want you to come down and I will be over there and, well, I am there right now, and I want you to come down there soon." And, "give me a clopp" which, according to the witness, was a Yiddish expression meaning "hit me." Goldstein said "Okay" and the fact that he understood the word "clopp" is evidenced by his prompt compliance with the request. In about 10 minutes Kean, who had come out of the restaurant and was in front of it on the east sidewalk, saw Goldstein's truck, which he recognized, coming southerly on Fairfax at a rate of about 20 to 25 miles an hour. Rich was at the wheel of the Oldsmobile parked at the west curb. When Kean saw the truck approaching he gave Rich a signal of some kind, Rich pulled out from the curb into the path of the truck which hit his car in the left rear and according to Goldstein's later statement caused it to travel toward the west curb, ending up with the front end on the sidewalk. Kean testified that he had no recollection of having given a signal to Goldstein, although he definitely did give one to Rich. In a statement later given by Goldstein to the adjuster for the insurance company he said that as he approached the point of the collision he looked to the east briefly, then turned his head and found the Rich car directly in front of him. It is true in a criminal case as in civil actions that a statement against interest made by a party constitutes original and independent evidence of the facts so stated. People v. McGoldrick, 107 Cal.App.2d 171, 174, 236 P.2d 597; 19 Cal.Jur.2d § 397, p. 136. It is fairly inferable that Goldstein saw the signal given to Rich, but regardless of that he knew what he was to do, he hit the intended car and at the place desired by Kean. Immediately after the impact Kean crossed the street and Goldstein got out of the truck and went to the Rich car. Mr. Rich was slumped down with his head over to the side near the door, groaning, moaning and seemed to be in pain. His wife testified that "he grabbed for his head and started to groan. * * * I didn't know where he had been hit or what had hit him. * * * His hands went up for his head and then he slumped over the wheel." Goldstein inquired if anyone was badly hurt, gave Kean his card, said he hoped everything was all right and drove away. No one called the police. Mr. Rich was taken first to the Kean house, then to his own home and then to the hospital. While at his own home Rich said to Kean: "Am I doing good as an actor?" and Kean said "Yes." Again, "How did I do? * * * You done very well." Rich was known to Kean to be an entertainer and actor by trade, and that was probably one reason he was selected as the principal victim of the alleged accident.

Claims for damages on the part of Mrs. Kean and the two Riches were placed in the hands of a firm of attorneys who, after making appropriate representations to the agents of the insurance company, effected a settlement resulting in the issuance of three insurance company checks. One for $375 was payable to Hyman Kean, Sally Kean and the firm of attorneys. They received it from Price, endorsed it and were given $250 cash in exchange. Another $375 check was payable to Jay Rich, Betty Rich and the attorneys, and the third one for $2,000 was payable to Jay Rich and the attorneys. A few days after issuance of the checks Kean contacted Goldstein and, according to his original testimony, gave Goldstein $300 in a sealed envelope which he had obtained from Price, the same person who had delivered the $375 check and then the $250 to him. It later developed that the envelope was still sealed when delivered to defendant and hence Kean did not personally know that it contained $300. Incidentally, Goldstein never denied the receipt of the envelope or the specified amount of money.

Prior to the receipt of these checks, and on or about August 20th, Goldstein had reported the accident to his insurance agent, Max Green. He told him there was no liability and so Green sent him a report blank and told him to fill it in and deliver it to the insurance company. Later, defendant gave a statement to James W. Wylde, who was adjuster for the said company, and he therein said that while he was driving south on Fairfax "he happened to glance over at a building on the other side of the street for what purpose he couldn't recall, but he did, and when he glanced back to the street there was a car right in front of him and he put his foot on the brakes but he couldn't slam on the brakes and the front of his car hit the front of this other car knocking it up over the curbing." Also that there were two men and two ladies in the other car; gave the names to the adjuster and said he did not know any of the parties; that one man seemed to be injured but that the people in the car said they would not need an ambulance, they would take care of him themselves. Although defendant had told his broker that there was no liability it is apparent that this statement was couched in such terms as to give rise to an inference of liability, and, there being no other witnesses, it was calculated to leave the insurance company in a position where it could do nothing but settle any claims.

When defendant was arrested, Officer Kilpatrick asked him "regarding an accident with Mr. Kean" and defendant replied, "Kean who is Kean—never heard of him." About 10 or 15 minutes later the following colloquy occurred: "Well, now, let's not kid each other about Mr. Kean. I know that you know him. You have known him for a long time; in fact, you are a friend of his, and he said, 'Well, yes, I do know him.'"

[4] Appellant's argument of insufficiency of the evidence presents the familiar discussion of reliability of witnesses and reasonableness of inferences drawn by the jury. Much stress is laid upon the fact that the details of the accident were not orally mapped out in advance and the participants did not know each other or know the identity of the other actors. This bears only upon the weight of the evidence, not its competency or sufficiency. "The gist of the crime under section 182 [Pen.Code] is the unlawful agreement between the conspirators to commit an offense prohibited by the statute accompanied by an overt act in pursuance thereof. An express agreement need not be proved. The agreement may be inferred from the declarations, acts and conduct of the alleged conspirators. * * * 'If in any manner the conspirators tacitly come to a mutual understanding to commit a crime, it is sufficient to constitute a conspiracy. [Citing cases.] It may result from the actions of the defendants in carrying out a common purpose to achieve an unlawful end. [Citing cases.] * * *

People v. Daener, 96 Cal.App.2d 827, 831, 216 P.2d 511, 514.

* * * [I]t is * * * settled that 'One who joins a conspiracy after its formation is liable as a conspirator just as are those who originated it' (11 Am.Jur. 548; 15 C.J.S., Conspiracy, § 36, p. 1060; Marino v. United States, 9 Cir., 91 F.2d 691, 696, 113 A.L.R. 975), 'nor is it necessary that each conspirator should have seen the others, or have knowledge as to who all the members of the conspiracy are' (15 C.J.S., Conspiracy, § 40, p. 1063; 11 Am.Jur. 548)." Anderson v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. App.2d 22, 23, 177 P.2d 315, 316. The Supreme Court said in People v. Buffum, 40 Cal.2d 709, 725, 256 P.2d 317, 326: "It is, of course, unnecessary that each conspirator see the others or know who all the members of the conspiracy are. [Citing cases.] It is likewise unnecessary that each conspirator participate in the overt acts. [Citing cases.]"

Appellant further argues by way of claim of inadequate evidence that the testimony of the accomplice Kean was not corroborated to the extent required by law. Counsel relies upon the rule stated and applied in People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 719, 724, 73 P. 609, and People v. Reingold, 87 Cal.App.2d 382, 392, 197 P.2d 175, which are to the effect that the corroborating evidence must of itself tend directly and immediately to connect the defendant with the offense charged against him, and is not sufficient if it requires interpretation and direction from the accomplice's testimony to give it value.

[5] Although People v. Griffin, 98 Cal. App.2d 1, 27, 219 P.2d 519 (hearing in Supreme Court denied), cast some doubt upon the exclusiveness and universality of the Morton test, the Supreme Court has reiterated that rule in the recent case of People v. MacEwing, 45 Cal.2d 218, 288 P.2d 257, 260, where it is said: "The corroborating evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the witness who must be corroborated is telling the truth. * * *

"The decisions applying section 1111, relating to accomplices, hold that the corroborative evidence required by that provision must be considered without the aid of the testimony which is to be corroborated and that it is not sufficient if it requires the interpretation and direction of such testimony in order to give it value. * * *

Referring to §§ 1111 and 1108, Penal Code: "In our opinion both statutes must be construed to mean that corroboration is not adequate if it requires aid from the testimony of the person to be corroborated in order to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged." But this does not require the corroboration to do more than substantially tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense in such manner as to satisfy the jury that the accomplice is telling the truth. It does not require the testimony of the accomplice as to the corpus delicti, e. g. existence of the conspiracy, to be corroborated.

People v. Trujillo, 32 Cal.2d 105, 110, 194 P.2d 681, 684: "Such corroboration must create more than a suspicion of guilt, but is sufficient even though it 'be slight and, when standing by itself, entitled to but little consideration'. [Citing cases.] It is sufficient when the evidence offered as corroborative tends to connect a defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as reasonably may satisfy a jury that the accomplice is telling the truth. It is not necessary that the accomplice be corroborated as to every fact to which he testifies. If his testimony could be completely proven by other evidence, there would be no occasion to offer him as a witness. People v. Negra [208 Cal. 64, 280 P. 354], supra; People v. Yeager [194 Cal. 452, 229 P. 40], supra. For the same reason, it is not necessary that the independent evidence be sufficient to establish the defendants' guilt. The prosecution is not required to single out an isolated fact which in itself, unrelated to other proven facts, is considered to be sufficient corroboration. It is the combined and cumulative weight of the evidence furnished by non-accomplice witnesses which supplies the test." See also People v. Allen, 104 Cal.App.2d 402, 413, 231 P.2d 896; People v. Temple, 102 Cal.App.2d 270, 277, 227 P.2d 500.

People v. Henderson, 34 Cal.2d 340, 346, 209 P.2d 785, 788, says: "When as in the present record it is discovered that there is testimony aside from that of the accomplice which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, the function of the appellate court is performed."

In People v. Gallardo, 41 Cal.2d 57, 62, 257 P.2d 29, 32, an abortion case, the court said: "Corroboration is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the woman is telling the truth.*" The footnote says: "*Some of the cases state that the evidence must be 'inculpatory,' but this is used merely as another way of stating that it must tend to connect the defendant with the crime. [Citing cases.]" At page 63 of 41 Cal.2d, at page 33 of 257 P.2d, the court further says: "It must create more than a suspicion, but it may be sufficient even though slight and entitled to but little consideration when standing by itself.†" And the footnote to that page is this: "†Although it has been said that corroboration is not sufficient where the circumstances are consistent with the innocence of the accused [citing cases], the more recent decisions have held that whether the corroborating evidence is as compatible with innocence as it is with guilt is a question of weight for the trier of fact [citing cases]." People v. McNamara, 103 Cal.App.2d 729, 740, 230 P.2d 411, 417, a conspiracy case, says: "As we held before, the jury could reasonably find that the possession of the check protector and the circumstances relating thereto linked appellant sufficiently to the forgeries; the actual agreement, combination, may then be proved by the testimony of the accomplices." To the same effect see People v. Estes, 99 Cal.App.2d 745, 747, 222 P.2d 454; People v. Farrell, 133 Cal.App.2d 427, 284 P.2d 29.

[6] The corroboration may, of course, be furnished by defendant's own words or conduct. People v. Griffin, supra, 98 Cal. App.2d 1, 25, 219 P.2d 519; People v. Tin- nin, 136 Cal.App. 301, 305, 28 P.2d 951; People v. King, 40 Cal.App.2d 137, 141, 104 P.2d 521; People v. Willmuth, 77 Cal. App.2d 605, 612, 176 P.2d 102.

[7] Mrs. Rich testified that Kean was across the street at the time of the accident. She, having been acquitted, cannot be classified as an accomplice, People v. Lawson, 114 Cal.App.2d 217, 220, 249 P.2d 850, and her testimony is competent corroboration of the Kean story in this respect. That defendant's truck struck the car of the Riches is established by his own report to the broker and his statement to the adjuster for the insurance company. His initial report of no liability, followed by a statement to the adjuster containing facts indicating negligence, is indicative of an existing intention and effort on his part to build a false claim in favor of the Kears and the Riches. Indeed he gave Kean's name to the adjuster as one who was involved in the accident; said that there were two men and two women in the automobile which was struck. Also that he did not know any of the "other parties," which phrase, fairly interpreted, includes Kean. Of course defendant was acquainted with him (as he later admitted to the police), and his denial of the fact fairly raises the inference that he was assisting in establishing a claim in Kean's behalf. When he said there were two men and two women in the car, he must have known differently, and was apparently making an effort to include Kean, the fourth person, as one who could make a claim against his insurer. The fact that he may also have told Mr. Wylde, the adjuster, that there were two men and one woman in the car does not improve his situation any because that again places Kean in a place which he did not occupy. Evidence of consciousness of guilt is found in defendant's original denial to the police that he knew Kean or had ever heard of him, followed by the confession of such acquaintance.

[8] Lastly, the defendant did not himself testify. While this fact alone does not fill any hiatus in the proof of the prosecution and does not constitute the corroboration required by the statute, it is nevertheless persuasive, lending weight to evidence presented by the prosecution upon matters presumptively within defendant's knowledge, and which if untruly stated would normally be denied by him. People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 268-269, 267 P.2d 271; People v. Cox, 102 Cal.App.2d 285, 287, 227 P.2d 290. In People v. Adamson, 27 Cal.2d 478, 489-490, 165 P.2d 3, 9, the Supreme Court summarized the matter thus: "The failure of the accused to testify becomes significant because of the presence of evidence that he might 'explain or * * * deny by his testimony' (Art. I, § 13, Cal. Const.), for it may be inferred that if he had an explanation he would have given it, or that if the evidence were false he would have denied it. State v. Grebe [17 Kan. 458], supra; Mooney v. Davis, supra, 75 Mich. [188] at page 193, 42 N.W. 802; see Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1963(5), (6), 2061(6), (7). No such inference may be drawn, however, if it appears from the evidence that defendant has no knowledge of the facts with respect to which evidence has been admitted against him, for it is not within his 'power' (Code Civ.Proc. § 2061 (6)) to explain or deny such evidence. [Citing cases.] * * * The jury, however, is concerned with the scope and nature of the consideration that it may give defendant's failure to explain or deny incriminating evidence, and in the present case should have been instructed that the defendant's failure to deny or explain evidence presented against him does not create a presumption or warrant an inference of guilt, but should be considered only in relation to evidence that he fails to explain or deny; and that if it appears from the evidence that defendant could reasonably be expected to explain or deny evidence presented against him, the jury may consider his failure to do so as tending to indicate the truth of such evidence and as indicating that among the inferences that may reasonably be drawn therefrom, those unfavorable to the defendant are the more probable." And in People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 268, 267 P.2d 271, 285: "A defendant's failure to take the stand 'to deny or explain evidence presented against him, when it is in his power to do so, may be considered by the jury as tending to indicate the truth of such evidence, and as indicating that among the inferences that may reasonably be drawn therefrom, those unfavorable to the defendant are the more probable." People v. Adamson, 27 Cal.2d 478, 489, 165 P.2d 3, 9. * * * In criminal cases, after the prosecution has made a prima facie case, the failure of the defendant to testify is not affirmative evidence of any fact, and any inference that can, in the circumstances, be justly drawn therefrom is persuasive rather than probative, lending weight to the evidence presented by the prosecution." The testimony of the witness Kean related many matters which, if true, were within the knowledge of appellant, and if not true, normally would have been denied by him.

[9] The corroboration was sufficient. There is no merit in the claim of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

[10-12] Appellant claims error in denial of his motion to strike certain testimony, but the brief does not comply with the applicable rule. 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 480, p. 311. Counsel contents himself with setting forth certain transcript references, some 12 in number, and claims that error appears therein. It is his duty not only to point out the alleged error, but to show exactly wherein the court's action is erroneous. Mere citation of the transcript pages and assertion that error there appears is insufficient. However, in this instance counsel affirmatively discloses the lack of merit in his contention for he says: "Each of the objections which were voiced by counsel was based upon the fact that said conversations were hearsay as to the appellant inasmuch as the corpus delicti had not been proved." Of course the order of proof, especially in a conspiracy case, rests in the discretion of the trial judge, and the corpus delicti, as above shown, was adequately established in this instance.

[13] Counsel next contends that there was error in receiving testimony of Officer Kilpatrick concerning defendant's denial of acquaintance with Kean, followed by an admission that he knew him. The argument is that this evidence was but part of an accusatory statement which was flatly denied by the defendant and therefore the entire statement was inadmissible. But it appears that the trial judge carefully excluded all of the accusatory statement except the question as to whether he knew Kean, and the later assertion that he was not telling the truth about that, with which assertion defendant agreed. The general proposition that when an accusatory statement is offered in evidence and it appears that the same is denied by the defendant the entire statement is inadmissible, is stated in People v. Simmons, 28 Cal.2d 699, 712, 172 P.2d 18, but the corollary to that rule is found in People v. Megladdery, 40 Cal.App.2d 748, 785, 106 P.2d 84, 103: "But where the conduct of the accused in the face of the accusation is of evidentiary importance, such as where false and evasive replies are made together with a denial, the conduct of the accused is admissible as showing a consciousness of guilt and the accusation is admissible to explain that conduct." People v. Brown, 71 Cal.App.2d 669, 674, 163 P.2d 85, 88: "An accusation and a denial of guilt of an alleged offense are not admissible, but a denial followed by an admission of special facts or circumstances tending to prove guilt is relevant. For instance, an accused may deny the commission of a criminal offense but subsequently acknowledge that he was at the scene of the crime. The latter statement would be admissible * * *." To the same effect, see People v. Morgan, 87 Cal.App.2d 674, 681, 197 P.2d 413; People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 60, 77 P. 777; People v. Scott, 84 Cal.App. 642, 649, 258 P. 638; People v. Wright, 94 Cal.App.2d 70, 80, 210 P.2d 263.

[14] Counsel for appellant also asserts that there was error in receiving exhibits consisting of the three checks, defendant's business card and defendant's statement given the adjuster. This contention is again built upon the assumption that no corpus delicti had been proved, and counsel concedes that "the validity of this objection must turn upon the argument heretofore advanced in support of appellant's contention that the verdict was insufficient as a matter of law." There was no error in the receipt of these documents in evidence.

[15,16] Probation having been granted and the proceedings thereupon suspended, there was in fact no judgment, and this is true notwithstanding the requirement that defendant pay a fine and make certain restitution as conditions of probation. People v. Wallach, 8 Cal.App.2d 129, 133, 47 P.2d 1071; In re Marquez, 3 Cal.2d 625, 627, 45 P.2d 342. An appeal may now be taken from a probation order, Pen.Code, § 1237, and it is established that where probation has been granted and no judgment entered an appeal which purports to be taken from the judgment may be treated as an appeal from the probation order. People v. McShane, 126 Cal.App.2d Supp. 845, 272 P.2d 571; People v. Camargo, 130 Cal.App.2d 543, 545, 279 P.2d 194. We have discussed all the points made in support of the appeal and as above shown find that they are not well taken.

[17] The attempted appeal from the verdict is dismissed, as no such appeal lies.

The order granting probation and the order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

Rehearings Denied Dec. 14, 1955.

Hearing Granted Jan. 5, 1956.

Actions between lessor and lessee were consolidated for trial. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, R. Bruce Findlay, J., rendered judgments challenged by cross-appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that the evidence justified denying lessee's claim for damages based upon allegedly false statements made by lessor to induce execution of lease and held that the lessor had properly been denied the liquidated damages stipulated in the lease.

Affirmed.

1. Fraud $\S$ 58(2, 4)

In lessee's action against lessor for damages based upon contention that execution of lease had been induced by lessor's material misrepresentations respecting amount of income from leased property and condition of premises, evidence sustained finding that statement with regard to condition of premises had been true and that there had been no reliance by lessee upon lessor's representations.

2. Appeal and Error $\S$ 931(1), 989, 1010(1)

On appeal, reviewing court (1) will view evidence in light most favorable to respondent, (2) will not weigh evidence, (3) will indulge all intendments and reasonable inferences which favor sustaining findings of trier of fact, and (4) will not disturb finding of trier of fact if there is substantial evidence in record in support thereof.

3. Damages $\S$ 163(3)

Presumption that liquidated damages represents amount which will compensate for breach of contract may be rebutted by proof that no detriment resulted. West's Ann.Civ.Code, $\S$ 1671.

4. Landlord and Tenant $\S$ 134(6)

Evidence, on issue as to lessor's right to liquidated damages stipulated in lease providing for continuance of operation of hotel and recreation resort then being operated on premises by lessor, sustained finding that there had been no damage to or loss of good will, and that the lessor had not been damaged in any sum whatever by lessee's breaches of covenants other than those for payment of rental and taxes.

5. Appeal and Error $\S$ 1071(6)

Where probative and ultimate facts found properly and completely dispose of material issues and support judgment, failure to find on other issues and immaterial inconsistencies in findings do not constitute reversible error.

6. Appeal and Error $\S$ 870(4)

No appeal having been taken from order appointing receiver in consolidated actions between lessor and lessee, and such order having become final, appointment of receiver could not be reviewed on appeal from judgment.

Combs & Hoose, Beverly Hills, for plaintiff and appellant.

MUSSELL, Justice.

On July 17, 1944, T. L. Tally and Thomas Seymour Tally, as lessors, and plaintiff Harold McCarthy and his wife, Barbara, as lessees, executed an agreement in writing by which the Tallys leased to the McCarthy's certain real and personal property in the San Bernardino mountains, known as the "Glenn Ranch". The lease was for a term of ten years, at an annual rental of $10,000 and provided for the continuance of the operation of a hotel and recreation resort then being operated on the premises by the lessors.

The lessees entered into possession on August 1, 1944, and operated the business and paid the rent to October 31, 1950. On or about November 28, 1950, McCarthy was served by Tally with a notice to pay rent or vacate the premises and on or about December 1, 1950, McCarthy served Thomas Seymour Tally with a notice that he, McCarthy, had vacated and surrendered the property referred to in the notice of November 28th and that he was delivering possession to Tally. McCarthy moved most of his property from the premises and on January 4, 1951, a receiver was appointed to take charge of the business and the ranch.

On October 26, 1948, plaintiff McCarthy (who had acquired the interest of his co-lessee wife upon her death) instituted an action (our number 4th Civil 5041) against the defendant Thomas Seymour Tally (who had acquired the interest of his co-lessor father, T. L. Tally, upon the death of the latter) by which McCarthy sought (1) A declaratory judgment interpreting some of the provisions of the lease; and (2) A judgment for $100,000 as damages based upon the contention that certain false statements had been made by the lessor to induce the execution of the lease by the lessees.

On January 4, 1951, Tally commenced an action (our number 4th Civil 5042) against McCarthy seeking therein (1) A judgment terminating the lease and the right of McCarthy thereunder; (2) A judgment that he was entitled to possession of the premises and requiring McCarthy and his sublessees to vacate and deliver up possession; (3) The appointment of a receiver pendente lite; and (4) A judgment against McCarthy for damages on account of non-payment of rent and taxes, liquidated damages in the sum of $10,000 and general damages. Both actions were consolidated for trial and separate findings and judgments were entered in each case.

In the first action (number 5041) the trial court rendered judgment that plaintiff have and recover nothing from the defendant except that plaintiff have and recover judgment against the defendant for the return of $10,000 deposited by plaintiff in the Citizens National Bank of Riverside (this sum was deposited by plaintiff under the liquidated damage provisions of the lease, paragraph 28). Plaintiff McCarthy appealed from the portion of the judgment that he recover nothing in his action for fraud and Tally appealed from that part of the judgment providing for the return of the said $10,000 deposit to plaintiff.

In the second action (number 5042) the trial court rendered judgment that the lease was terminated December 5, 1950; that McCarthy abandoned the property on December 5, 1950; that Tally has been entitled to the possession of the premises since that date; that McCarthy is entitled to remove certain personal property from the premises; that plaintiff Tally recover judgment against the defendant for $1,414.14 on account of unpaid rental and taxes and the further sum of $2,000 as attorney fees; that plaintiff is not entitled to recover any sum as liquidated damages; that the cross-complainant McCarthy is not entitled to recover judgment against plaintiff except the right to recover certain personal property; that plaintiff is entitled to recover costs and charges of the receiver; and that McCarthy is entitled to an offset in the amount of $821.32. McCarthy appealed from the whole of this judgment and Tally appealed from the part thereof which provides that he is not entitled to any sum as liquidated damages.

[1,2] In his appeal in the first action McCarthy contends that Tally made material representations respecting the amount of income from the lease property and the "good going condition of the premises"; that these representations were false, were acted upon by McCarthy and were knowingly made by Tally with the intent to induce McCarthy to enter into the lease involved.

There is a sharp conflict in the evidence respecting the statements made by Tally. McCarthy and witness C. C. Vogl testified that Tally told McCarthy prior to the execution of the lease that the ranch earned $27,000 net the previous year. In his complaint McCarthy alleged that Tally and his wife represented that in the preceding years the ranch had produced an average of $27,000 net income per year. This allegation and the asserted statements were denied and Tally testified that he made no such statements; that the only statement he made in this connection was "The fact that the year in which they were taking it over, it would possibly do that much, as compared with the previous year, because as the season started it was showing such an increase over the previous year that we expected it to better $27,000"; that the maximum income he ever made on the ranch was about $22,000 the previous year.

In connection with the alleged representations regarding the condition of the leased premises, McCarthy testified that defendant Tally and his wife represented that "the property was in excellent condition", "the property was in good condition", "everything was in such good condition", "it is in good condition", and "the property was in wonderful condition". Defendant

Tally testified that he informed the lessees that the ranch was "in good operating condition" and there is substantial evidence that at the time of the negotiations which culminated in the signing of the lease the resort had enjoyed its most successful year, a condition which prevailed after the lessees took possession on August 1, 1944. On that date the ranch was in full operation, the place was full of guests and reservations had been made for August and September of that year. The ranch property had been operated for many years and several of the buildings were very old, as McCarthy well knew. The personal property had been used in the operation of the business. Under the circumstances shown by the record there is substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that the lessors stated that the property was in "good operating condition" and that such statement was true.

Plaintiff's allegations that he relied upon the statements of defendant, believing them to be true, and acting upon them, accepted and undertook the lease and its terms and obligations, were denied and the court found them to be untrue. This finding is also supported by substantial evidence. The lease contains the following provision: "That said lessees have inspected parcels 1, 2 and 3, and know and accept the same in their present condition." While, as contended by plaintiff, evidence of fraud may be received and considered notwithstanding provisions in the contract where the material facts are accessible to the vendor only, Rothstein v. Janss Investment Corp., 45 Cal.App.2d 64, 113 P.2d 465, the statement in the lease is an admission that plaintiff inspected the property and the evidence shows that Tally refused to sign a lease containing a clause that McCarthy relied on his statements only and insisted that McCarthy visit and inspect the property.

McCarthy testified that he and his wife did inspect the property and were familiar with it; that he visited the ranch four or five times in 1943 and that his wife visited it at least once a week during that year; that he might have visited the ranch twice in 1944 and his wife might have been there quite often. There is evidence in the record that when the parties were having the lease drawn up in an attorney's office, McCarthy asked Tally if everything was in good condition and Tally replied that they were running the place as it had been run the previous year and that so far as he knew, it was in good condition; that the attorney then suggested to McCarthy that if there was any doubt in his mind about the condition of the premises being such as he desired the condition to be, that he should go and look the place over, if he had not already done so, and determine for himself whether he was willing to accept the premises as they were and this McCarthy said he would do. The record also shows that McCarthy took possession on August 1, 1944, and operated the business until October 26, 1948, before filing his action. Where, as here, the findings relative to the statements made by Tally are supported by substantial evidence, they are conclusive on appeal and it is not our province to analyze conflicts in the evidence. As is said in Berniker v. Berniker, 30 Cal.2d 439, 444, 182 P.2d 557, 561:

"As has so frequently been said, it is the general rule that on appeal an appellate court (1) will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondent; (2) will not weigh the evidence; (3) will indulge all intentions and reasonable inferences which favor sustaining the finding of the trier of fact; and (4) will not disturb the finding of the trier of fact if there is substantial evidence in the record in support thereof."

[3, 4] Appellant Tally contends that the provision in the lease for liquidated damages is valid as a matter of law and that the court erred in rendering judgment that McCarthy was entitled to the return of the sum of $10,000 deposited by him under paragraph 28 of the lease. That paragraph and the one following, are as follows:

"(28) That it is and will be impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the actual damages to said Parcel Four in the event of termination of this lease by the lessors for cause, or by reason of abandonment of the demised property by the lessees, and that the sum of $10,000.00 shall be and said sum is hereby fixed as the amount of the liquidated damages in the event of such termination or such abandonment; that said lessees have this day executed to the lessors a demand note for $10,000.00 secured by a deed of trust upon real property in Riverside County, California, to evidence and secure the payment of such liquidated damages; that said lessees may at any time deposit with the lessors the sum of $10,000.00 in lieu of said note and deed of trust;

"That in the event said lessors successfully prosecute proceedings to terminate this lease for cause, the Court may, in addition to actual damages by reason of loss with respect of Parcels One, Two and Three, award to said lessors liquidated damages in the sum of $10,000.00 by reason of loss with respect to Parcel Four;

"That in the event said lessees abandon and give up possession of said demised property to the lessors, said lessees shall be liable to the lessors for actual damages by reason of loss with respect to Parcels One, Two and Three, plus liquidated damages in the sum of $10,000.00 by reason of loss with respect to Parcel Four;

"That in the event of such termination or such abandonment, the liquidated damages aforesaid shall be paid to the lessors from said deposit or from the proceeds derived from a sale under said Deed of Trust; that the payment of actual and liquidated damages, as aforesaid, shall fully satisfy all obligations of lessees under and by virtue of the provisions hereof."

"(29) That default shall not be deemed to have occurred with respect to any of the terms, covenants and conditions herein set forth, other than the payment of the aforesaid installments of rental, unless the lessees, within ten days after written notice of the nature of the asserted breach, shall have failed to cure such breach."

It is evident from the reading of these provisions of the lease that the liquidated damage clause of the lease relates to parcel four, which is described in the instrument as follows: "The said business and the goodwill thereof, and the right to the use of the trade name of Glenn Ranch." In this connection the court found, in action number 5042, "That there was no evidence establishing any damage to or loss of good will", and on the basis of this finding, it was adjudged that plaintiff Tally is not entitled to recover any sum as liquidated damages. The record shows there was no evidence establishing any damage to or loss of good will, and as is said in Kelly v. McDonald, 98 Cal.App. 121, 125, 276 P. 404, 406:

"While the term 'liquidated damages' does imply that the parties have ascertained and agreed upon a sum which they assume will adequately compensate for a breach of the contract, this does not necessarily mean that the amount specified must be paid whether damages result from the breach or not. The very term of 'damages' contemplates an injury sustained or detriment resulting from the breach of a contract or the nonperformance of a duty. As the court says in Starr v. Lee, supra: 'We find authorities holding that recovery cannot be had when the evidence shows that no damage at all resulted from the breach.' The exception to the general rule to the effect that the predetermined amount of damages for the breach of an obligation is void, as that exception is expressed in section 1671 of the Civil Code does not purport to declare that an amount of liquidated damages agreed upon shall be conclusively presumed to be the exact figure which will adequately compensate for the breach of contract. This section merely asserts that it is 'presumed to be the amount of damages sustained.' This presumption may be rebutted by proof that no detriment whatever resulted from the breach."

The evidence shows that on or about November 29, 1950, Tally served a written notice and demand on McCarthy that he pay the rent on the premises or vacate, surrender up and deliver possession to Tally, and on December 1, 1950, McCarthy notified Tally in writing that he had vacated the premises in accordance with said notice of November 29, 1950. It appears from the notice served by Tally that he was terminating the lease solely for nonpayment of rent and not for other defaults in the performance of the lease agreement. In Rez v. Summers, 34 Cal. App. 527, 529, 168 P. 156, it is held that when a tenant fails to pay rent as provided in the lease, the amount of damage is not extremely difficult to fix, and it is not impracticable to fix the amount of such damage. In 15 Cal.Jur.2d, Damages, sec. 217, it is said that "Since there is no presumption that the amount of damages which may result from a tenant's breach of a covenant to pay rent is impossible or extremely difficult to fix, a provision for payment of liquidated damages in the event of such a breach is void." In Olson v. Biola Co-op. Raisin Growers Ass'n, 33 Cal.2d 664, 668, 204 P.2d 10, 12, 12 A.L.R. 2d 112, the rule is stated that:

"* * * a contract which undertakes to fix the amount of damages in anticipation of a breach of an obligation is void to that extent, Civil Code, sec. 1670, except 'when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage.' Civil Code, sec. 1671. Accordingly, it is held that a party relying on a liquidated damage clause in a contract must plead and prove the facts validating his right to recover such predetermined amount."

In Rice v. Schmid, 18 Cal.2d 382, 385, 115 P.2d 498, 499, 138 A.L.R. 589, it is held that:

"It is a question of fact in each instance whether the nature of the case is such that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage."

In the instant case the court found, in action number 5042, "That by reason of the breaches by said defendant McCarthy of his covenants in said lease, other than payment of rental and taxes, as set forth in paragraphs IX and X of said first cause of action, the plaintiff was not damaged in any sum whatever. We cannot hold as a matter of law that this finding is unsupported by the record."

[5] Appellant McCarthy argues that there were numerous inconsistencies in the findings and that most of them are not supported by the evidence. However, where as here, the probative and ultimate facts found properly and completely dispose of the material issues and support the judgments, the failure to find on the other issues and immaterial inconsistencies in the findings do not constitute reversible error. Chester R. Pyle Co. v. Fossler, 200 Cal. 204, 209, 252 P. 599.

[6] Appellant McCarthy argues that the receiver was wrongfully appointed and that the trial court wrongfully determined costs and charges of said receiver in action number 5042. The record shows that the receiver was appointed January 4, 1951, and that no appeal was taken from the order of his appointment and it became final. Under the circumstances shown by the record the order appointing the receiver may not be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Weygandt v. Larson, 130 Cal.App. 304, 310, 19 P.2d 852; 22 Cal.Jur. 476, Sec. 61.

In view of what we have here said it is unnecessary to pass upon other points raised in the appeals.

The judgments are affirmed. Each party to bear his own costs on appeal.

Civ. 8551.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 15, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Father of 6½ year old boy and the boy brought action against city and contractor, which installed storm sewers in city street, for injuries sustained by boy in fall into excavation. The Superior Court of Sacramento County, J. O. Moncur, J., entered judgment adverse to city and contractor, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that it was for jury to determine whether or not condition of street was a proximate cause of boy's injuries.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨821(19)

In action against city and contractor,
which installed storm sewers in city street,
for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, question whether condition of street was a proximate cause of boy's injuries was for jury.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨816(9)

In action against city and contractor,
which installed storm sewers in city street,
for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, city ordinance providing that any person by whom, or under whose direction, or by whose authority as principal, or as contractor or employer, any portion of a public street, sidewalk, or alley may be made dangerous, shall erect a good substantial barrier or walk, was admissible against contractor under general issue of negligence raised by pleading.

3. Evidence ⇨32

Courts do not take judicial notice of city ordinances.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨817(1, 2)

In action against city and contractor,
which installed storm sewers in city street,
for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, in order to recover against city, it was not necessary to prove general negligence, but was only necessary to prove dangerous or defective condition of street, knowledge thereof, express or implied, on part of city and its responsible employees, opportunity after knowledge to repair, and failure to repair, and that condition of street proximately caused boy's injuries.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1047(1)

In action against city and contractor,
which installed storm sewers in city street,
for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, wherein jury was expressly told that before jury could bring in a verdict against city, requirements of the public liability act would have to be squarely met, admission in evidence of city ordinance providing that any person by whom, or under whose direction, or by whose authority as principal, or as contractor or employee, any portion of a public street, sidewalk, or alley may be made dangerous, shall erect a good substantial barrier or walk was not reversible error as to city because of failure to instruct jury as to limited purposes for which ordinance was admissible against city.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨819(3)

In action against city and contractor,
which installed storm sewers in city street,
for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, evidence was sufficient to justify finding by jury that contractor violated city ordinance providing that any person by whom, or under whose direction, or by whose authority as principal, or as contractor, or employer, any portion of a public street, sidewalk, or alley may be made dangerous, shall erect a good substantial barrier or walk.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

In action against city and contractor,
which installed storm sewers in city street,

for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, instruction that though there were two defendants it did not follow from that fact alone that if one was liable, both were liable, and that instructions given governed the case as to each defendant, to same effect as if he were the only defendant in the action, and regardless of whether reference was made to defendant or defendants in the singular or plural form, was not prejudicially erroneous, on ground that it told the jury that each and every instruction given was applicable to both defendants.

8. Trial ⇨295(1)

All instructions given should be harmonized, if that may reasonably be done.

9. Municipal Corporations ⇨822(1)

In action against city and contractor, which installed storm sewers in city street, for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, instruction that if city's superintendent of streets negligently failed to require contractor to perform its contract in accordance with plans and specifications and with requirement of city ordinance in evidence requiring placing of barriers, and if, as a proximate result of such superintendent's negligence in failing to require such performance by corporation, boy was injured, verdict of jury should be against city, was erroneous, since city's liability could not be predicated on any negligent conduct of superintendent in failing in performance of any assumed duty to compel contractor to remedy dangerous condition of street.

10. Municipal Corporations ⇨822(1)

In action against city and contractor, which installed storm sewers in city street, for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, instruction that it was duty of city superintendent of streets to require contractor to comply with the terms of its contract and that digging of ditch by contractor was done under direction of superintendent, was erroneous, since city's liability could not be predicated on any negligent conduct of superintendent in failing in performance of any assumed duty to compel corporation to remedy dangerous condition of street.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

In action against city and contractor, which installed storm sewers in city street, for injuries sustained by 6½ year old boy in fall into excavation, giving of erroneous instructions that if city's superintendent of streets negligently failed to require contractor to perform its contract in accordance with plans and specifications and with requirement of city ordinance requiring placing of barriers, and if, as a proximate result of superintendent's negligence and carelessness in failing to require such performance by contractor, boy was injured, verdict should be against city, and that it was duty of superintendent to require contractor to comply with terms of contract, and that digging of ditch by contractor was done under direction of superintendent, was not prejudicial error under circumstances.

Desmond, McLaughlin & Russell, Sacramento, for A. Teichert.

William A. Sitton, Sacramento, for City of Sacramento.

Richard J. Lawrence, Sacramento, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

The City of Sacramento, herein called the "city", and A. Teichert & Son, Inc., herein called the "corporation", appeal from a money judgment entered against both upon a jury verdict in a personal injury action.

The accident which gave rise to the litigation occurred in a residential tract in the City of Sacramento known as "Tallac Village". The corporation had been installing storm sewers in the area under a contract awarded to it by the city. In order to lay the necessary pipes, the corporation had dug a ditch 9 feet deep and 3½ feet in width down the center of 25th Avenue from 59th Street for approximately one-half mile. About one month before the accident the pipes had been laid and the ditch backfilled with dirt except for a portion about 25 feet in length in which pipes could not then be laid due to an accumulation of water at that point. Work was halted and the excavation was left unfilled. That condition had existed for about one month before the accident, and during that time no barriers had been erected and maintained about the open ditch save that there was placed at one end of the excavation a sign reading, "Road Closed"; and there was an embankment composed of the dirt that had been taken from the excavation and piled on the side. Pipes lay along one side of the pile of dirt. The corporation, while it had been engaged in construction work in the area, had requested teachers of adjacent schools and parents living in the area to caution school children of the dangers existing at its construction sites. Plaintiff and respondent Ronald McNeill, who was then 6½ years of age, had been so warned. Prior to the time of the accident, to which there were no eyewitnesses, he had not been near the open segment of ditch, which was two or three blocks distant from his home. However, on the afternoon of the day of the accident, after returning from school and changing his clothes, he was attracted by the pile of dirt and rode his bicycle down to the site. He testified as follows: "I just saw all the dirt down there and I thought I would ride down, and I rode down there and got scared and fell in." He further said: "I just looked in, and then I tried to get away, and then I fell in." Ronald's father, for himself and as guardian ad litem for his child, brought this action to recover damages for the personal injuries sustained by Ronald and for the recovery of medical and hospital expenses incurred on his behalf. The complaint contained two counts, one against the city and the other against the corporation. Against the city, the plaintiffs alleged that it was a municipal corporation and as such charged with the duty of keeping streets within its borders in safe and suitable condition for use by the public; that Ronald had fallen into the excavation above described at a time when there were no barriers or warning signs placed near it to warn of the condition of the street which it is alleged was at that time dangerous and defective. It was charged that the city and its superintendent of streets had notice and knowledge of the condition and the consequent dangers therefrom in time to remedy said conditions prior to Ronald's fall and that the condition had been left uncorrected. It was alleged that the injuries to Ronald were proximately caused by the dangerous condition of the street. The count against the city also contained allegations that the corporation, as a contractor, had been installing storm sewers pursuant to a contract with the city; that a city inspector had been charged with the duty to inspect the work daily; that the contractor was bound by its contract to provide, during the course of its work, and to maintain, in proper location, all necessary signs, barriers, guards, etc., to protect the public; and that the street superintendent and the inspector had been negligent in failing to require the contractor to do so. By a second count a cause of action was stated against the corporation. It was alleged that its acts in leaving open the excavation had been negligent and that this negligence had proximately caused the injuries to Ronald, for which this action was brought.

There was evidence that although cross barriers had been maintained during the progress of the work so that the public could not travel upon the street where the excavation existed, these barriers had been removed when the work was halted and the uncompleted segment of ditch left open; that during the time it was left open, prior to the accident, the public used the street and school children traversed it to and from school. The answers of defendants raised the general issue and pleaded the affirmative defense of contributory negligence on the part of Ronald. The jury returned a verdict of $5,000 for general damages and $515.25 for medical expenses incurred. There is no claim that the verdict is excessive.

[1] Appellants contend that, although the contributory negligence of Ronald was, in view of his tender age, a question of fact for the jury, nevertheless his conduct as a matter of law was the sole cause of the accident and that, therefore, they are not liable for the injuries he suffered. This contention cannot be sustained. On the question of proximate cause, it was for the jury to determine whether or not the condition of the street was a proximate cause of Ronald's injuries. The jury could have reasoned that if barriers had been placed along the side of the ditch they might have so impressed the young child that he would not have gone near to and fallen into the excavation. Hines v. Milosivich, 68 Cal. App.2d 520, 522, 157 P.2d 45. The trial court did not err in submitting the issue of proximate cause to the jury.

Both appellants contend that the court erred in admitting in evidence a city ordinance which was in force and effect at the time of the accident and which reads as follows:

"Any person by whom, or under whose direction, or by whose authority as principal, or as contractor or employer, any portion of a public street, sidewalk, or alley may be made dangerous, shall erect, and so long as the danger may continue, maintain, around or over the place so made dangerous, a good substantial barrier, or walk which said barrier or walk shall be constructed in such a manner that it shall meet with the approval of the Building Inspector."

[2] We will treat first of the contention of the corporation that the ordinance was inadmissible in proof of plaintiffs' cause of action against it. This contention cannot be sustained. Appellant argues that the ordinance had not been pleaded and that it had objected to its introduction upon that basis; that the court overruled the objection, expressing the opinion that it appeared to the court it was not necessary to plead the ordinance because it was admissible under the general issue of negligence raised by the pleading. In so ruling the court was correct. We quote the following from Jackson v. Hardy, 70 Cal.App.2d 6, 12, 160 P.2d 161, 164:

"Answering appellants' contention that general negligence was not charged in the complaint, we point out that under our system of pleading, it is unnecessary to plead or refer to a statute relied upon as creating a duty, where the action is one predicated upon the negligence of the defendant and not one to enforce a liability or penalty imposed by statute."

We also refer to Martin v. Shea, 182 Cal. 130, 137, 187 P. 23, 26, where, in quoting from the case of Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 669, 98 P. 1063, the court said:

"The ordinance hereinbefore referred to was not alleged in the complaint, plaintiff simply alleging negligence in the manner we have specified. It is urged that it was necessary to plead the ordinance in order to make it available as evidence and that the trial court therefore erred in admitting it over the objections of defendant. The precise question thus presented appears never to have been decided by this court, but it appears to us that, upon elementary principles, it was admissible without having been pleaded. The cause of action here alleged was not a violation of the ordinance, but the negligence of the defendant, and the ordinance was simply evidence offered to show such negligence. Under our system of pleading, it is both unnecessary and improper to plead the evidence relied on to establish the ultimate facts essential to a cause of action."

[3] As the corporate appellant says, courts do not take judicial notice of ordinances and for that reason, we add, it was proper for the respondents to introduce the ordinance in evidence in proving that the standard of care thereby fixed had been violated, all as a part of proving the alleged negligent conduct of said defendant.

[4, 5] The appellant city also contends that it was error for the court to introduce the ordinance as against it and relies upon such cases as Owen v. City of Los Angeles, 82 Cal.App.2d 933, at page 942, 187 P.2d 860, and Wilkerson v. City of El Monte, 17 Cal.App.2d 615, at page 624, 62 P.2d 790. As we read the count against the city in plaintiffs' complaint, although it does contain some allegations of negligent conduct on the part of the city, yet it specifically bases the prayer for recovery upon the public liability statute which it alleges the city was subject to. To recover against the city it was not necessary to prove general negligence, it was only necessary to prove the dangerous or defective condition of the street, knowledge thereof, express or implied, on the part of the city and its responsible employees, opportunity after knowledge to repair, and failure to repair, and that the condition of the street proximately caused the injuries to plaintiff. Perhaps it would have been better if the trial court had instructed the jury specifically as to the limited purpose for which the ordinance was admissible. However, we do not think that the error would justify the reversal of the judgment against the city. The jury were told expressly that before they could bring in a verdict against the city, the requirements of the public liability act would have to be squarely met and that they could not bring in a verdict on any other theory than one contained within the provisions of that statute. No doubt these limitations were argued to the jury and we think it fair to assume that the jury understood them. Generally, the cases such as the two referred to above which hold the introduction of an ordinance of this type in evidence to be erroneous in a suit against a public agency, are cases wherein that agency alone has been sued. Even if we assume that error was committed as against the city, we could not reverse because of it.

[6] The corporation further contends that, even assuming that as against it the ordinance was properly before the jury, there was no evidence of a violation of its terms. This we think is not a sound contention. We think it apparent from what we have already said that the jury could have found the corporate appellant was guilty of violating the ordinance in that it did not better protect the excavation, or in other words that it did not erect the sort of barrier about the excavation which the ordinance required.

The city contends that the trial court committed prejudicial error in that it gave to the jury conflicting instructions with respect to municipal liability. To lay a foundation for its claim of conflict, the city refers to an instruction given, apparently of the court's own motion, which is taken from BAJI, Number 53. It reads as follows:

"While there are two defendants in this action, it does not follow from that fact alone that if one is liable, both are liable. Each is entitled to a fair consideration of his own defense and is not to be prejudiced by the fact, if it should become a fact, that you find against the other. The instructions given you govern the case as to each defendant, to the same effect as if he were the only defendant in the action, and regardless of whether reference is made to defendant or defendants in the singular or plural form."

[7, 8] The city emphasizes the last sentence in the instruction and interprets it as telling the jury that each and every instruction given is applicable to both defendants. We do not so construe it. By the instruction, the court is cautioning the jury that there are two defendants in the action, and that they are not both to be held liable merely because one may be; that each is entitled to have its case determined independently and without prejudice by what may be done with the case of the other; that the jury must apply instructions to each defendant, which are applicable to such defendant, without regard to the other defendant. The last sentence cannot, in view of the instructions given, be construed as telling the jury that each and every instruction is applicable to each defendant. To do so would make it impossible to harmonize this instruction with many of the instructions given, which must be done where reasonable. Bates v. Newman, 121 Cal. App.2d 800, 807-808, 264 P.2d 197. The instructions given show that many of them are applicable to one defendant and not to the other. For instance, we will take the instruction concerning the city's liability under the public liability act. The court told the jury:

"Plaintiffs' cause of action, if any they have, against the defendant City of Sacramento is based upon, and must meet the requirement of, a law of this state known as the Public Liability Act. That act provides as follows: [Here the instruction quotes from the act.]

"The law just read to you is the only authority under which this action can be maintained, if at all, against the defendant City of Sacramento; and it follows that before the plaintiffs or either of them may be entitled to your verdict, you must find from a preponderance of the evidence:

"First: That plaintiffs, or either of them, suffered an injury from which a proximate cause was some dangerous or defective condition of 25th Avenue which the City at the time and under the conditions had authority to remedy.

"Second: That before the accident in question, the governing or managing board of said City of Sacramento, or whatever Board, officer or person was authorized to remedy the alleged dangerous or defective condition, had knowledge or notice thereof.

"Third: That before the accident in question, such board, officer or person had a reasonable time, after receiving such notice, to remedy the condition or to take such action as was reasonably necessary to protect the public against it, and it failed to do either."

There are other instructions applying specifically and only to the corporation. Pursuing its thesis of conflicting instructions, the city calls attention to instructions as follows: (1) An instruction that it is necessary to exercise greater caution for the protection and safety of a young child than for an adult person. We agree that this instruction has no application to the city. For the city's liability as stated in the instruction specifically addressed to that subject, and from which we have quoted, is not based upon the ordinary concept of common law negligence. (2) An instruction that violation of the ordinance introduced in evidence constituted negligence per se. For the reason given just before, this has no application to the city. (3) An instruction that the fact that the corporation had placed a sign on the street stating that it was closed did not relieve it from complying with the ordinance. We do not think from this record that the jury could have considered that the foregoing instructions had any application to the case of the city in view of the specific instruction which stated the exact limits of the city's liability and the exact requirements that the plaintiffs must meet before a cause of action against the city was proved.

[9-11] Certain instructions were given which, on their face, applied to the city, and they should not have been given. We refer to an instruction that if the city's superintendent of streets negligently failed to require the corporation to perform its contract in accordance with plans and specifications and with the requirement of Ordinance No. 258 in evidence requiring the placing of barriers, and if, as a proximate result of said superintendent's negligence and carelessness in failing to require such performance by the corporation, the plaintiff had suffered damage, the verdict of the jury should be against the city. There was yet another instruction along the same line as the one just referred to in which the court told the jury that it was the duty of the city superintendent of streets to require the corporation to comply with the terms of its contract. Again, the court told the jury that the digging of the ditch by the corporation was done under the direction of the city superintendent of streets. It was error to give these instructions; for the city's liability could not be predicated upon any negligent conduct of its engineer in failing in the performance of any assumed duty to compel the corporate defendant to remedy the dangerous condition of the street. However, we do not believe that the instructions were prejudicial for these reasons. In order to find the corporation guilty of actionable negligence in the count against it, the jury had to find that it had left the excavation in the street unguarded, and had thus set up a condition dangerous to users of the street; that without contributory fault on his part plaintiff Ronald McNeill had fallen into the excavation and been injured; that the negligence of the corporation in these matters was a proximate cause of the injuries which Ronald suffered. The jury made these findings by implication and there was ample evidence to support them. To find against the city, the jury had to find that the excavation created a danger so long as it was left unguarded and that this dangerous condition was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. The only additional findings that it had to make against the city, and that it did not have to make against the corporation, were the findings as to the notice and as to the lapse of time after notice, that is, as to a reasonable time for, and the lack of, repair. The jury made these findings. The finding of notice was based upon direct testimony that the responsible city officials had knowledge of the existence of the dangerous condition in the city streets for much more than ample time to cause it to be remedied or to remedy it itself as was its duty. All this being so, we think the jury, having found against the corporate defendant, would also have found against the city, and that such finding was not brought about by the erroneous instructions that the city could be held liable by reason of the negligence of its city superintendent in failing to compel the corporate defendant to remedy the defect that created the danger to those who might use the city's street. The evidence in this case is such that we think it impossible to suppose the jury would hold the corporate defendant liable and release the city. We feel sure from the whole record that the verdict was not caused or contributed to by the erroneous instructions.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Trespass action. The Municipal Court, San Bernardino Judicial District, Edward P. Fogg, J., rendered judgment and land owners appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Mitchell, J., held that rights reserved in deed conveying land and retaining right to develop water by artesian or surface wells and to convey water from land, became fixed, if not by terms of reservation, then by drilling of well and installation of pipeline, and owners of such right, in absence of landowner's consent, could not increase extent of servitude and could not build additional structures for purposes not mentioned in reservation and not therefore exercised.

289 P.2d—38½

Reversed.

1. Waters and Water Courses §156(4)

The reservation of easements and rights to use water are limited in extent by terms of reservation and by nature of enjoyment or use thereof, and if right is unlimited by terms of reservation the extent of right is fixed by manner of its use and may not be enlarged without consent of owners of land. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 806

2. Waters and Water Courses §156(4)

Rights reserved in deed conveying land and retaining right to develop water by artesian or surface wells and to convey water from land became fixed, if not by terms of reservation, then by drilling of well and installation of pipeline, and owners of such right, in absence of landowners' consent, could not increase extent of servitude and could not build additional structures for purposes not mentioned in reservation and not therefore exercised. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 806.

Charles D. Warner, Chino, for appellants.
Harold E. Prudhon, Los Angeles, for respondents.

MITCHELL, Judge.

Appellants, as owners of a parcel of land, i. e., Lot 46, in the Rancho Santa Ana del Chino, complain of an alleged trespass thereon by the defendants. Compensation for the use of the land occupied by the respondents is sought.

In 1912 the Chino Land and Water Company conveyed to the L. M. Jacobs Company several parcels of land including the one involved here, retaining the right to develop water on one acre in Lot 46 by artesian or surface wells, and the right to convey such water from said Lot.

In 1922 the Chino Land and Water Company conveyed this "right" to Pellissier, together with the well which had been developed on Lot 46.

Appellants acquired Lot 46 and respondents acquired the well.

In 1953 respondents, over the objection of appellants, entered upon the appellants' land and installed thereon a new structure and installed a hydro-pneumatic system.

[1] Appellants contend that the right or rights reserved by the Chino Land and Water Company are limited in extent by the terms of the deed and by the nature of the enjoyment or use thereof. Civ.Code, § 806.

In this the appellants are correct. Woods Irrigation Co. v. Klein, 105 Cal.App.2d 266, 233 P.2d 48; Winslow v. City of Vallejo, 148 Cal. 723, 84 P. 191, 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 851; MacGregor v. Knowlden, 102 Cal.App. 42, 282 P. 438; Colegrove Water Co. v. City of Hollywood, 151 Cal. 425, 90 P. 1053, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 904; Kern Island Irr. Co. v. City of Bakersfield, 151 Cal. 403, 90 P. 1052; Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 P. 381.

Appellants next contend that if the right is unlimited by the terms of the grant then the extent of the right is fixed by the manner of its use and may not be enlarged without the consent of the appellants. In this, too, the appellants are correct.

"Where the right, not definitely limited by grant, has become fixed by the manner of its use, it cannot be enlarged without the consent of the parties who may be affected." Colegrove Water Co. v. City of Hollywood, 151 Cal. 425, 429, 90 P. 1053, 1055, 13 L.R.A., N.S., 904. Cases cited: Winslow v. City of Vallejo, 148 Cal. 725, 84 P. 191; Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 P. 381; Kern Island Irr. Co. v. City of Bakersfield, 151 Cal. 403, 90 P. 1052.

[2] In this case the right reserved in the 1912 deed from Chino Land and Water Company to Jacobs became fixed, if not by the terms of the reservation, then by the drilling of a well and the installation of a pipeline.

This was the extent of the use of the right from 1912 to 1946.

Respondents may not, in the absence of appellants' consent, increase the extent of the servitude on appellants' land.

By building new, different and additional structures on appellants' land for purposes not mentioned in the conveyance and not heretofore exercised, respondents are attempting to enlarge their right in and on appellants' land.

The judgment is reversed.

CALIFORNIA LETTUCE GROWERS, Inc., a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

UNION SUGAR COMPANY, a corporation,
Doe Company, a corporation, Roe Company, a co-partnership, Doe I, Doe II, Doe III, Doe IV and Doe V, Defendant and Appellant.

L. A. 23650.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Action for value or contract price of beets delivered to defendant sugar company by plaintiff corporation or damages for defendant's alleged breach of contract in refusing to pay full value of beets. Defendant filed counterclaims for damages because of plaintiff's failure to deliver all beets contracted for and apply additional manure to land on which they were grown, as required by agreement for extension of defendant's lease of such land to plaintiff. From a summary judgment of the Superior Court, Santa Barbara County, Atwell Westwick, J., for plaintiff, defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, P. J., held that contract requiring plaintiff to grow and deliver to defendant 239 acres of beets during 1949 was not illusory and void for failure to stipulate purchase price of beets, where plaintiff knew of usage and custom in sugar beet industry for processors and growers to enter into supplemental agreements for payment of growers according to sugar content of beets on basis of net return from sugar sold by processor during current crop year.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, Cal.App., 278 P.2d 106, vacated.

1. Contracts ⚡9(1)

A contract which is so uncertain and indefinite that parties' intention in material particulars cannot be ascertained is void and unenforceable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1598.

2. Sales ⚡1(3)

Where price of commodity contracted to be sold is intended to be left to parties' subsequent agreement, contract is merely agreement to agree and hence nudum pactum until price is fixed or agreed on.

3. Contracts ⚡9(1)

The law does not favor, but leans against, destruction of contracts because of uncertainty.

4. Contracts ⚡147(1)

Agreements will be construed, if feasible, as to carry into effect parties' reasonable intentions, if ascertainable.

5. Contracts ⚡168

Provisions not expressed in written contract may be inferred from writing or external facts.

6. Sales ⚡1(3)

A sale contract need not specify price, if it can be objectively determined.

7. Sales ⚡1(3)

Absence of price provisions does not render an otherwise valid sale contract void. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656, 1728.

8. Sales ⚡1(3)

Where sale contract does not specify price, court should make necessary findings and set price under applicable code provisions, unless parties intended to leave determination of price to future negotiations. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1729.

9. Sales ⚡355(1)

In action for reasonable value or contract price of beets delivered to defendant sugar company by plaintiff grower or damages for defendant's alleged breach of contract in refusing to pay full value of beets, allegation of answer that parties knew and understood that defendant's standard practice was to enter into separate annual supplemental and specific sugar beet contracts with growers was sufficient, with allegations of history of parties' commercial transactions, to put parties' prior dealings and practice of sugar beet industry in issue.

10. Customs and Usages ⚡10

Generally, persons carrying on trade in which there is a known usage are deemed to have contracted in reference to such usage, unless contrary appears.

11. Customs and Usages ⚡10, 15(1)

A known usage of trade carried on by parties to contract forms part of contract, and evidence thereof is always admissible to supply deficiency or as means of interpretation, where it does not alter or vary terms of contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 12.

12. Estoppel ⚡118

Evidence that corporation entered into beet growing agreement with sugar company with knowledge of sugar beet industry's usage and custom for processors to enter into uniform supplemental contracts with growers and that parties understood that corporation would deliver beet crop to sugar company under terms made available thereby to all its growers showed sufficient pattern of prior dealing to support conclusion that parties intended crop to be governed by procedure previously followed, and corporation having failed to voice intention to adopt different procedure should not be permitted to deny effect of such prior course of dealing in its action against sugar company for value or contract price of beets delivered thereto.

13. Contracts ⚡10(4)

Sales ⚡1(4)

A net return formula in beet growing contract, providing for payment of grower by sugar company according to sugar content of beets sold on basis of net return from sugar sold by processor during current crop year, computed in accordance with company's established system of accounting, was sufficiently definite to satisfy requirements of certainty and mutuality of contract, though accounting procedures were those of sugar company, as it could not alter its accounting system for purpose of varying resulting net return figures.

14. Sales ⚡1(3)

A beet grower, contracting for sale of beets to sugar company with reference to existing accounting system thereof could not claim that accounting procedures were unilateral and unfair in action for value or contract price of beets delivered by grower to such company or damages for its alleged breach of contract by refusal to pay full value of beets, especially where contract required verification of average net selling price by independent firm of public accountants, though it was to be chosen by sugar company.

15. Contracts ⚡168

A contract conferring on one party thereto a discretionary power affecting other party's rights imposes duty to exercise such discretion in good faith and in accordance with fair dealing. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656.

16. Contracts ⚡10(4)

The fact that prior course of dealing between parties to supplemental sugar beet growing contract, which left open precise amount to be paid grower by sugar company, probably left to such company power to set ultimate price paid, did not render contract illusory and void, in view of statutory provision that when contract does not determine amount of consideration or leaves such amount to an interested party's discretion, consideration must be so much money as object of contract is reasonably worth. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1611.

17. Sales ⚡1(3)

An agreement that price shall be fixed by interested party to sale contract is valid, if his interest is known and there is no bad faith. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656, 1729.

18. Contracts ⚡10(1)

A sugar beet growing agreement was not lacking in mutuality because of its failure expressly to obligate sugar company to accept delivery of and purchase beets from grower, as obligation to purchase must be inferred from agreement, in absence of showing of parties' contrary intention.

19. Contracts ⚡189

Intention of parties to 1949 beet growing agreement to bind sugar company to accept and purchase beets from grower must be inferred from parties' prior dealings, where their transactions relating to 1946, 1947 and 1948 beet crops showed without question that they expected 1949 agreement to obligate sugar company to purchase and accept delivery of contract beets.

20. Contracts ⇨9(1, 3)

A sugar beet growing agreement was not fatally defective in not stating time, place and manner of delivery of beets by grower to sugar company, in view of statutes supplying rules for determining such matters when not otherwise controlled by contract or parties' dealings. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1763.

21. Landlord and Tenant ⇨138

A sugar company, leasing land to beet grower, was not entitled to recover damages for lessee's failure to apply seven tons of manure to each acre of land under cultivation during term of lease extension requiring lessee to apply minimum of seven tons of manure per acre in addition to minimum fourteen tons per acre required by existing lease, in view of provision in extension agreement that amount of manure to be applied to any particular area and time of its application should be at lessee's sole discretion, parties' intention being that lessee should have right to choose time to apply manure in accordance with lessee's convenience in growing beets.

Pleading ⇨216(1)

Whether lease extension agreement, requiring lessee of land for beet growing to apply minimum of seven tons of manure per acre in addition to minimum fourteen tons per acre required by existing lease, required lessee to apply seven tons of manure to each acre of land under cultivation during term of extension, and parties' custom or prior dealings required fertilization of land at particular times, were matters which would ordinarily be resolved as fact questions during trial of lessee's action for value or contract price of beets delivered to lessor, not as questions of law on demurrer to lessor's counterclaim or on lessee's motion for summary judgment.

23. Damages ⇨6

When a party clearly appears to have suffered damage from breach of contract, liberal rule should be applied in allowing court or jury to determine amount of damages and uncertainty as to exact amount is no reason for denying all recovery.

24. Damages ⇨6

While statute provides that no damages can be recovered for breach of contract which are not clearly ascertainable in both their nature and origin, fact that amount of damage may not be susceptible of exact proof or may be uncertain, contingent or difficult of ascertainment does not bar recovery thereof. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3301.

25. Judgment ⇨181(10)

Pleading ⇨195

In beet grower's action against sugar company for reasonable value or contract price of beets delivered to defendant by plaintiff or damages for defendant's breach of contract for plaintiff's growing of beets on land leased thereto by defendant, defendant's counterclaim for damages for plaintiff's failure to apply quantity of manure specified by lease extension agreement to each acre of leased land was sufficiently definite as to injury and measure of damages to withstand attack by demurrer and motion for summary judgment.

26. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇨55

A defendant's mere pleading of unliquidated counterclaims for damages does not render unliquidated an otherwise certain or determinable debt owing to plaintiff, as such counterclaims are treated as discounts, not as payments made when debt is due, and hence do not affect liquidated or unliquidated character of debt.

27. Interest ⇨39(1)

In beet grower's action against sugar company for value or contract price of beets delivered to defendant by plaintiff, trial court erred in allowing plaintiff interest on amount found to be due for beets from date of defendant's statement of amount due, where plaintiff rejected such statement, sought recovery of larger amount on common count of complaint, and did not concede accuracy of statement until it moved for summary judgment, as claim was not certain when statement was tendered and reasonable or fair market value of beets was not readily ascertainable.

28. Judgment ¶186

On plaintiff's motion for summary judgment under statute, trial court must determine whether defendant has presented any facts giving rise to triable issue or defense and not determine such issue itself. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

29. Judgment ¶181(10)

In beet grower's action against sugar company for value or contract price of beets delivered thereto by plaintiff or damages for defendant's breach of contract by refusal to pay full value of beets, defendant's counterclaims presenting questions of parties' intentions on embarking on their contractual relations, their prior dealings, and certain trade practices, raised fact questions on which evidence should have been taken, so as to preclude summary judgment for plaintiff.

SHENK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a summary judgment for the plaintiff. The pleadings and affidavits in support of the motion for the judgment disclose that the controversy arises from the contractual relations of the parties in the sale and purchase of sugar beets during the years 1945 to 1949 inclusive.

On November 1, 1945 the defendant Union Sugar Company leased to California Lettuce Growers approximately 1,000 acres of land situated in Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo counties for a three year term. Rent for the first two years was fixed in the lease; for the third year the rent was to be determined by arbitration in the absence of an interim agreement between the parties. The lease provided that the lessee should apply a minimum of fourteen tons of manure per acre during the term of the lease.

On the same day the parties entered into a so-called growing agreement whereby California Lettuce agreed to grow and deliver sugar beets to Union Sugar from 500 acres during 1946, the same amount in 1947 and from 400 acres in 1948. This agreement was silent as to price, terms of payment, place and manner of delivery, and contained no express promise on the part of Union Sugar to accept delivery and buy the beets. On November 1, 1947 the parties entered into an agreement to fix the rental for 1948 and extend the lease an additional year to include the crop period of 1949. The rental for this period was left to future determination. This agreement also provided that California Lettuce would apply at least seven additional tons of manure per acre over the minimum required by the original lease.

Two more agreements were entered into on November 1, 1948. In the first, the parties agreed to release 400 of the original 1,000 acres subject to the lease of 1945 as extended. The rent for the remaining 600 acres was fixed for the 1949 crop season. The second was a growing agreement obligating California Lettuce to grow and deliver beets to Union Sugar from 239 acres during 1949. This growing agreement, like its predecessor, failed to specify price, terms of delivery or obligation of Union Sugar to accept delivery and purchase the beets.

In 1946, 1947 and 1948 California Lettuce grew the sugar beet acreage pursuant to the growing agreement of November 1, 1945 and delivered the contract beets to Union Sugar. In each of those years printed supplemental purchase agreements were concluded by the parties. For the 1946 and 1947 crops the supplemental agreements set a flat purchase price per ton of beets based on their sugar content. The 1948 supplemental purchase agreement contained a price schedule based not on a flat price per ton but on a formula based upon the net return to Union Sugar from the processed beet sugar. No supplemental purchase agreement was consummated by the parties for the 1949 crop.

The lease, growing, and supplemental purchase contracts were fully performed by both parties during 1946, 1947 and 1948. In 1949, under the growing agreement contemplating the delivery of 239 acres of beets, California Lettuce delivered only 117 acres. In a letter to California Lettuce dated December 13, 1949, Union Sugar recognized its debt in the amount of $27,300.78 for the beets so received, but it refused to pay this full value because of the following setoffs: (1) The failure of California Lettuce to deliver beets from the full 239 acres under the growing agreement for 1949; (2) The failure of California Lettuce to apply the additional manure contemplated in the 1947 rental agreement; (3) An unpaid debt for sale and delivery of certain manure; (4) Charges due and owing for use of a pumping plant, and (5) Charges for the use of other acreage. If these setoffs were accepted by California Lettuce, the balance owed by Union Sugar would be $3,825.95. Union Sugar subsequently tendered payment of that amount but California Lettuce refused to accept it. After the present action was commenced, Union Sugar tendered to California Lettuce the sum of $2,355.09 which was accepted on account.

Refusing the off-sets, California Lettuce commenced this action on January 11, 1950 to recover the reasonable value or the contract price of the 117 acres of beets delivered to Union Sugar or damages for breach of contract. The first amended complaint states the first count in assumpsit for the reasonable value of the beets sold and delivered in the amount of $45,000. In the second and third causes of action, California Lettuce alleges breach of contract and damages in the sum of $29,655.37. Each cause of action admits the receipt of $2,355.09 actually paid by Union Sugar.

Union Sugar answered and counterclaimed. It admitted liability in the amount of $29,655.87, less $2,355.09 paid on account and less the setoffs pleaded in five counterclaims. The first counterclaim alleged damages in the sum of $7,412.45 resulting from the failure of California Lettuce to deliver the full 239 acres of beets. The second counterclaim alleged a $14,529.94 debt owed Union Sugar for the failure of California Lettuce to apply the additional manure as required by the 1947 lease extension. California Lettuce demurred to the first and second counterclaim and its demurrer was sustained.

In the affidavit in support of its motion for summary judgment California Lettuce accepted Union Sugar's statement that the reasonable value of the beets sold and delivered in 1949 was $29,655.87, waiving any additional amounts those beets might reasonably be worth. For purposes of the motion, California Lettuce conceded Union Sugar's third, fourth and fifth counterclaims totalling $1,532.45 and the sum of $2,355.09 paid on account, leaving a balance of $25,768.34.

The trial court found that Union Sugar's first and second counterclaims did not state facts sufficient to constitute a valid setoff against the first amended complaint. Union Sugar's demurrer to the amended complaint was overruled. The demurrers to the first and second counterclaims were sustained without leave to amend. October 19, 1953 the trial court accordingly gave summary judgment on the pleadings to California Lettuce in the amount of $25,768.34 with interest from December 13, 1949 in the sum of $6,942.49.

Union Sugar contends that its first and second counterclaims state valid setoffs; that its debt to California Lettuce, if any, was unliquidated and interest was not allowable, and that the judgment is contrary to law.

In support of the first counterclaim, Union Sugar alleges that California Lettuce violated the growing agreement of November 1, 1948 with respect to the 1949 crop in that California Lettuce delivered only 117 acres of beets while the contract called for delivery of 239 acres. The contract provides that California Lettuce "* * * personally grow, on suitable land in Santa Maria Valley, and deliver to (Union Sugar) two hundred thirty-nine (239) acres of beets during the year 1949." California Lettuce contends that this agreement lacks mutuality, is illusory and void because there is no provision for price, time and place of delivery and no duty on Union Sugar to accept delivery and pay for the beets.

[1-8] The principal question is whether the contract is illusory and void for failing to stipulate the purchase price. California Lettuce argues that the contract leaves the price to the future discretion of one party and therefore lacks mutuality. Where a contract is so uncertain and indefinite that the intention of the parties in material particulars cannot be ascertained, the contract is void and unenforceable. See Civ. Code § 1598; Sutliff v. Seidenberg, Stiefel & Co., 132 Cal. 63, 64 P. 131, 469. If the price of a commodity in a sales contract is intended to be left to the subsequent agreement of the parties, the purported contract is merely an agreement to agree and therefore nudum pactum until the price is fixed or agreed upon. See Schimmel v. Martin, 190 Cal. 429, 213 P. 33; Avalon Products, Inc., v. Lentini, 98 Cal.App.2d 177, 219 P.2d 485; Jules Levy & Bro. v. A. Mautz & Co., 16 Cal.App. 666, 117 P. 936. Unless the court has ascertainable provisions of agreement before it, there is no contract on which the court may act. However, "The law does not favor, but leans against, the destruction of contracts because of uncertainty; and it will, if feasible, so construe agreements as to carry into effect the reasonable intentions of the parties if that can be ascertained." McIlmoil v. Frawley Motor Co., 190 Cal. 546, 549, 213 P. 971, 972; see Roy v. Salisbury, 21 Cal.2d 176, 130 P.2d 706; Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co., 13 Cal.2d 158, 88 P.2d 698, 89 P.2d 386; Sutliff v. Seidenberg, Stiefel & Co., supra, 132 Cal. 63, 64 P. 131, 469. Unexpressed provisions of a contract may be inferred from the writing or external facts. Thus it is well settled that a contract need not specify price if it can be objectively determined. Section 1729 of the Civil Code recognizes three ways of determining price. It can be fixed by the parties, determined from the prior course of dealings of the parties, and if these procedures are inapplicable, the contract price may be deemed the reasonable price under the circumstances of the particular case. The absence of price provisions does not render an otherwise valid contract void. Civ. Code §§ 1728, 1655, 1656; Great Western Distillery Products, Inc. v. John A. Wathen Distillery Co., 10 Cal.2d 442, 74 P.2d 745. Unless the parties intended to leave the determination of price to future negotiations, courts should make the necessary findings and set the price under the applicable code provisions.

[9-11] In the present case Union Sugar alleges that "* * * the parties knew and understood that it was the standard practice of defendant to enter into separate supplemental and specific sugar beet contracts with each of its growers for the respective years in which the beets were to be grown." Pledaded with the history of the parties' commercial transactions, this allegation is sufficient to put the prior dealings of the parties and the practice of the industry in issue. In Buckner v. A. Leon & Co., 204 Cal. 225 at page 227, 267 P. 693, it was said: "It is the general rule that, when there is a known usage of the trade, persons carrying on that trade are deemed to have contracted in reference to the usage, unless the contrary appears; that the usage forms a part of the contract, and that evidence of usage is always admissible to supply a deficiency or as a means of interpretation where it does not alter or vary the terms of the contract," quoting from Hind v. Oriental Products Co., 195 Cal. 655, 667, 235 P. 438. See Civ. Code §§ 1655, 1656; Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 12; 12 Cal. Jur.2d, Contracts § 140.

[12] As stated, the 1949 crop growing contract was preceded by dealings between the parties as far back as 1945. The 1946 and 1947 price and delivery terms were set in printed supplemental agreements which determined a flat price per ton of beets graduated on the basis of their sugar content. In 1948 this per ton pricing formula was replaced by the so-called scale or "net return" contract in wide use throughout the sugar beet industry. Under this type of agreement, the grower is paid for his beets according to the sugar content upon the basis of the net return from the sugar sold by the processor during the current crop year. The 1948 supplemental price agreement provided: "The 'net return of Company' as used herein means the average net selling price actually realized by Company per 100 lbs. for 1948 crop sugar sold and delivered during the period August 1, 1948, to July 31, 1949, and shall be computed in accordance with the established system of accounting of Company by deducting from the gross selling price actually realized by Company for such sugar all such charges and expenditures as are regularly and customarily deducted by, and as determined by Company * * *. The average net selling price of Company, determined as aforesaid, shall be verified by a firm of independent public accountants chosen by the Company, which verification shall be conclusive."

Thus California Lettuce entered into the 1949 growing agreement with knowledge that it was the industry's usage and custom for each processor to enter into uniform supplemental contracts with all growers who supplied it with beets and that Union Sugar purchased on the same terms from all growers. In the absence of a contrary showing, it can fairly be concluded that the parties fully understood when they entered the 1949 growing agreement that California Lettuce would deliver its 1949 crop to Union Sugar under the same terms as were made uniformly available by Union Sugar to all growers from which it purchased sugar beets. This represents a sufficient pattern of prior dealing to support the conclusion that the parties intended the 1949 crop to be governed by the procedure previously followed. By failing to voice its intention to adopt a different procedure, if indeed it entertained such an intention, California Lettuce induced Union Sugar to rely upon the conclusion that the established pattern of pricing would prevail for the 1949 crop. California Lettuce should not now be permitted to deny the effect of that prior course of dealing.

[13-15] California Lettuce contends, however, that the 1948 "net return" formula cannot be used as a basis for determining price because it also is illusory and renders the contract void. It argues that this formula is unilateral and lacks mutuality. This contention is not persuasive. The "net return" formula is sufficiently definite to satisfy the requirements of certainty and mutuality. While the accounting procedures adopted are those of Union Sugar, the contract specifically provides that the accounting procedures are "the established accounting system of Company." Thus Union Sugar may not alter its accounting system for the purpose of varying the resulting "net return" figures. Since the parties contracted with reference to an existing accounting system, California Lettuce may not now claim that the accounting procedures are unilateral and unfair. The contract, moreover, expressly calls for verification of the average net selling price by an independent firm of public accountants chosen by the Union Sugar. While Union Sugar has the sole power to select the accounting firm, the duty to select an "independent" firm adequately protects California Lettuce from arbitrary action. In any event, where a contract confers on one party a discretionary power affecting the rights of the other, a duty is imposed to exercise that discretion in good faith and in accordance with fair dealing. Civ. Code §§ 1655, 1656; Universal Sales Corp. v. California, etc., Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 771, 128 P.2d 665; Brogdex Co. v. Walcott, 123 Cal.App.2d 575, 267 P.2d 28; Brawley v. Crosby, etc., Foundation, Inc., 73 Cal.App.2d 103, 166 P.2d 392. The duty to exercise good faith would also combine with the commercial interests of Union Sugar to maximize its profits to overcome California Lettuce's objection that the agreement does not impose a duty on Union Sugar to sell at the prices best obtainable in the sugar market.

[16, 17] As applied to the 1949 crop, the 1948 supplemental agreement can be considered to leave open the precise amount that Union Sugar must pay per ton of beets. However adjusted to the "net return" to Union Sugar and the sugar content of the beets, the actual payment due could be changed from year to year by Union Sugar. This feature of the prior course of dealing of the parties probably leaves to Union Sugar the power to set the ultimate price paid to California Lettuce. But this pricing feature should not make the contract illusory and void. Civil Code Section 1611 provides: "When a contract does not determine the amount of the consideration, nor the method by which it is to be ascertained, or when it leaves the amount thereof to the discretion of an interested party, the consideration must be so much money as the object of the contract is reasonably worth." Professor Williston says: "Even an agreement that the price shall be fixed by an interested party is valid if his interest is known and there is no bad faith." 1 Williston on Sales (Rev.Ed.) § 167, p. 434-5; see Civ.Code §§ 1729, 1655, 1656. In the present case the actual discretion of Union Sugar in setting the purchase price is limited both by the fact that Union Sugar must charge California Lettuce no more than it charges other growers generally and by the limits prescribed by the United States Secretary of Agriculture under the Sugar Act of 1948, 61 Stat. 922, 7 U.S.C.A. §§ 1100-1160. Regulation of the sugar industry by the U. S. Department of Agriculture pursuant to the Sugar Act of 1948 places effective limits upon the purchase price under growing agreements similar to the contracts involved in the present case. It also appears that the prices set for the 1949 crop were identical with those set for the 1948 crop accepted by the parties and adopted in the 1948 supplemental agreement.

[18,19] Nor does the 1949 growing agreement lack mutuality for failing expressly to obligate Union Sugar to accept delivery and to purchase the beets. The obligation to purchase must be inferred from the agreement in the absence of a showing of a contrary intention of the parties. King-Keystone Oil Co. v. San Francisco Brick Co., 148 Cal. 87, 82 P. 849; Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245, 26 P. 99; see Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 146 P. 638. In the present case the intention of the parties to bind Union Sugar to accept and purchase the beets must be inferred from the prior dealings of the parties. The transactions relating to the 1946, 1947 and 1948 crops show without question that the parties expected the 1949 growing agreement to obligate Union Sugar to purchase and accept delivery of the contract beets. The contrary view, urged by California Lettuce, invites the untenable conclusion that one party agreed to sell but the other did not agree to purchase. The language of the agreement clearly contemplates a "purchase" as well as a "sale."

[20] The contention of California Lettuce that the agreement is fatally defective in not stating the time, place and manner of delivery cannot be sustained. This question is resolved against California Lettuce by section 1763 of the Civil Code which supplies the rules for determining the time, place and manner of delivery when those matters are not otherwise controlled by the contract or the dealings of the parties.

It must therefore be concluded that the trial court improperly sustained the demurrer to the first counterclaim.

[21,22] Union Sugar's second counterclaim, as stated, alleged damages in the amount of $14,529.94 occasioned by the failure of California Lettuce to apply seven tons of manure to each of the 239 acres of Union Sugar's land under cultivation. This claim arose out of the lease extension agreement of November 1, 1947 which provided: "(4) That Lessee will apply a minimum of seven tons of steer manure per acre upon the leasehold premises in addition to the minimum fourteen tons per acre required in the existing lease, the amount of manure to be applied to any particular area and the time of its application to be at the sole discretion of the lessee." Despite this discretion expressly conferred on California Lettuce in the agreement, Union Sugar's counterclaim is based on a construction of the agreement requiring California Lettuce to apply the manure during the term of the lease extension, that is, any time between November 1, 1948 and October 30, 1949. The parties undoubtedly intended that California Lettuce should have the right to choose the time to apply the manure in accordance with its convenience in growing the beets. If fertilization of the land is required at particular times, custom or the prior dealings of the parties should be shown. These are matters which would ordinarily be resolved as questions of fact during the course of the trial and not as questions of law on the demurrer or motion for summary judgment.

[23-25] Union Sugar alleges that the damages it suffered from the failure of California Lettuce to apply the manure are the cost of the manure and the expense of application. California Lettuce argues that the manure was to be applied to land on which it grew its crop, making the damages, if any, result to California Lettuce, not to Union Sugar, the lessor. Union Sugar concedes that the damages are difficult to ascertain with precision, but it contends that when liability is shown it is not necessary for the injured party to plead his damages with arithmetical exactness where the nature of the injury makes this impossible. Section 3300 of the Civil Code anticipates this kind of problem where it states that the measure of damages "* * * is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused * * * or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result * * *" from the breach of contract. In Smith v. Mendonsa, 108 Cal.App.2d 540, at page 543, 238 P.2d 1039, at page 1040, in dealing with a similar problem the court said, "* * * when it clearly appears that a party has suffered damage a liberal rule should be applied in allowing a court or jury to determine the amount, and that, given proof of damage, uncertainty as to the exact amount is no reason for denying all recovery." While Civil Code section 3301 provides that no damages can be recovered for a breach of contract which are not clearly ascertainable in both their nature and origin, the fact that the amount of damage may not be susceptible of exact proof or may be uncertain, contingent or difficult of ascertainment does not bar recovery. See Stott v. Johnston, 36 Cal.2d 864, 229 P.2d 348, 28 A.L.R.2d 580; Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co., supra, 13 Cal.2d 158, 88 P.2d 698, 89 P.2d 386;

Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 232, 73 P.2d 1163; Meyers v. Texas Co., 6 Cal.2d 610, 59 P.2d 132; Holt Manufacturing Co. v. Thornton, 136 Cal. 232, 68 P. 708; Allen v. Gardner, 126 Cal. App.2d 335, 272 P.2d 99; Smith v. Mendonsa, supra, 108 Cal.App.2d 540, 238 P.2d 1039. It follows that the second counterclaim was sufficiently definite as to the injury and the measure of damages to withstand attack by demurrer and motion for summary judgment.

[26] It remains to determine whether the trial court properly allowed California Lettuce the sum of $6,942.49 interest on the $25,768.34 found to be due and owing for delivery of the 117 acres of beets to Union Sugar. The prevailing party is entitled to interest on the amount of his judgment where the damages are certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right of recovery is vested in him upon a particular day. Civ.Code § 3287. California Lettuce correctly contends that the mere pleading of unliquidated counterclaims does not render unliquidated an otherwise certain or determinable debt owing to the plaintiff. The unliquidated counterclaims are given treatment as discounts, not as payments made at the time the debt is due. Lineman v. Schmid, 32 Cal. 2d 204, 195 P.2d 408, 4 A.L.R.2d 1380; Hansen v. Covell, 218 Cal. 622, 24 P.2d 772, 89 A.L.R. 670. They do not therefore affect the liquidated or unliquidated character of the debt.

[27] The trial court allowed the interest on the ground that Union Sugar fixed the amount due in its statement to California Lettuce of December 13, 1949. The statement, setting the amount owed at $27,300.78, was rejected by California Lettuce. In the first cause of action stated in its complaint, California Lettuce sought on a common count to recover $45,000 which it alleged to be the reasonable value of the beets delivered to Union Sugar. This allegation controverts Union Sugar's statement of the amount due. Not until its motion for summary judgment did California Lettuce concede the accuracy of Union Sugar's statement. Under these circumstances it is impossible to conclude fairly that the claim was certain at the time Union Sugar tendered its statement. Nor can it be said that the reasonable or fair market value is readily ascertainable in the present case. See Lineman v. Schmid, supra, 32 Cal.2d 204, 195 P.2d 408, 4 A.L.R.2d 1380. Difficult questions of the intention of the parties as to price and their prior dealings above mentioned would have to be tried out before it could be said with certainty what the price of the beets delivered should have been. Hence it was improper to allow interest from the date of Union Sugar's statement.

[28,29] Under the foregoing circumstances the trial court erred in granting the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "* * * if it is claimed that there is no defense to the action or that the action has no merit, on motion of either party * * * supported by affidavit of any person or persons having knowledge of the facts, the answer may be stricken out or the complaint may be dismissed and judgment may be entered, in the discretion of the court unless the other party, by affidavit or affidavits shall show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to present a triable issue of fact." The issue to be determined by the trial court in consideration of the motion under section 437c is whether the "* * * defendant has presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue or defense, and not to pass upon or determine the issue itself, that is, the true facts in the case." Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal.2d 257, 260, 223 P.2d 244, 246; Gardner v. Jonathan Club, 35 Cal.2d 343, 217 P.2d 961; Hardy v. Hardy, 23 Cal.2d 244, 143 P.2d 701; Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 122 P.2d 264; Walsh v. Walsh, 18 Cal.2d 439, 116 P.2d 62. The defendant's first and second counterclaims present questions of the parties' intentions upon embarking upon their contractual relations with each other, their prior dealings and certain trade practices. Since these matters are questions of fact on which evidence should be taken, it is clear that the present case is not a proper one for granting summary judgment. See Walsh v. Walsh, supra, 18 Cal.2d 439, 116 P.2d 62; Travelers Indemnity Co. v. McIntosh, 112 Cal.App.2d 177, 245 P.2d 1065; Gibson v. De La Salle Institute, 66 Cal.App.2d 609, 152 P.2d 774.

The order sustaining the demurrers to the first and second counterclaims, the order granting the motion for summary judgment and the allowance of interest were erroneous.

The judgment is reversed.

Eula Mae SINGLETON, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Manuel Smith PERRY as Administrator with the Will Annexed of the Estate of S. W. Corlett, Deceased, Defendant and Appellant.

S. F. 19288.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Nov. 8, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1955.

Actions for malicious prosecution for alleged theft of automobile and other personal property. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Harry J. Neubarth, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where two consolidated malicious prosecution actions were based on one simultaneous arrest for two different criminal charges instigated by defendant and jury found that one charge was justified while the other was not, plaintiff could recover damages for malicious prosecution based on unjust charge without specifically showing what damages were attributed to the malicious prosecution.

Affirmed, and appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

Opinion, 280 P.2d 531, vacated.

1. Automobiles ⇨19

With respect to transfer of motor vehicles, old rules respecting transfer of personal property must give way to those set forth in the Vehicle Code. Vehicle Code, §§ 175(a), 176, 177, 186, 503.

2. Automobiles ⇨19

Where person paid off balance of purchase price due on automobile purchased by another and allowed such other to continue to use the automobile but had the pink slip of legal ownership issued in his name, there was no transfer of legal ownership to other person. Vehicle Code, §§ 175(a), 176, 177, 186, 503.

2. Malicious Prosecution ⇨64(1)

In malicious prosecution action based on alleged theft of automobile in the legal name of defendant, evidence justified jury finding that defendant had given plaintiff permission to use automobile and had no right to use criminal process to obtain its possession.

4. False Imprisonment ⇨3

"False imprisonment" is unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another, while "malicious prosecution" is procuring the arrest or prosecution of another under lawful process, but for malicious motives and without probable cause. Pen.Code, § 236.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "False Imprisonment" and "Malicious Prosecution".

5. False Imprisonment ⇨10

The provocation, motive and good faith of defendant in an action for false imprisonment constitute no material element in the case, and can be considered only where punitive or exemplary damages are asked, and then only as affecting the measure of such damages.

6. Malicious Prosecution ⇨39, 55

Malice and want of probable cause are the gist of the action for malicious prosecution, and without allegation and proof of both, action will fail.

7. False Imprisonment ⇨2, 7(1)

Malicious Prosecution ⇨34

Damages are not recoverable for a legal arrest and conviction, and therefore, in cases of malicious prosecution, it becomes necessary to await the final determination of the action, but the same principle does not apply to an action for false imprisonment, as the form of action is based upon an illegal arrest, and no matter ex post facto can legalize an act which was illegal at the time it was done.

8. False Imprisonment ⇨20(1)

Malicious Prosecution ⇨51

An essential of the complaint for malicious prosecution is that the proceeding upon which it is based has finally terminated in favor of plaintiff, but this is not a necessary or proper allegation in an action for false imprisonment.

9. Malicious Prosecution ⇨67

Damages for malicious prosecution may include loss of time and liberty, injury to reputation, mental suffering, and bodily harm, if any.

10. Malicious Prosecution ⇨64(1)

In action for malicious prosecution for alleged theft of automobile and personal property, evidence sustained a verdict for plaintiff on basis of prosecution for alleged theft of automobile.

11. Malicious Prosecution ⇨56

Where two consolidated malicious prosecution actions were based upon one simultaneous arrest for two different criminal charges instigated by defendant and jury found that one charge was justified while the other was not, plaintiff could recover damages for malicious prosecution based on unjustified charge without specifically showing what damages were attributable to the malicious prosecution only.

12. Pleading ⇨72

The prayer for relief is no part of the statement of the cause of action and should, where necessary, be disregarded.

13. Damages $\Rightarrow$ 157(1)

Generally, in a contested case, plaintiff may obtain relief justified by allegations of complaint and the evidence, even though relief is greater than or different from that demanded.

14. Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$ 1068(4)

In malicious prosecution actions, where court instructed jury that plaintiff was suing for a total of $400,000, where in fact she could recover no more than $200,000 under the complaints, and jury returned a verdict of $25,000 damages, error, if any, was harmless.

15. Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$ 110

Order denying motion for new trial is not appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

Theodore M. Monell and William Klein, San Francisco, for appellant.

Pierre J. Ibos and James A. Himmel, San Francisco, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant S. W. Corlett¹ appeals from a judgment pursuant to a jury verdict against him in the amount of $25,000 in an action for malicious prosecution and for false imprisonment. Plaintiff brought two such actions, the present action, which is based upon defendant's charge that plaintiff stole a Cadillac automobile, and a second action, which is based upon defendant's charge that plaintiff stole rings, luggage, and other personal property.² As a result of the two charges plaintiff underwent a single arrest, imprisonment, and a preliminary hearing which resulted in dismissal of the charges. The two civil actions were tried together. Verdict and judgment in the second action were for defendant and no appeal was taken.

1. After defendant Corlett took this appeal he died and the administrator of his estate was substituted as defendant. References to defendant in this opinion are to Corlett.
2. The pleadings in the second action are not before us but the briefs of plaintiff

The principal issue is whether, in view of the fact that the arrest and detention for the claimed theft of the automobile, on which the present action is based, were simultaneous with the arrest and detention which the jury in the second action found justified, plaintiff has shown in the present action that she was damaged in any measurable amount, or at all. Defendant also contends: the evidence does not support the verdict for plaintiff in that it establishes that the Cadillac belonged to defendant; the verdict in the second action (in which no appeal was taken) is inconsistent with the verdict in this action; the trial court erred to defendant's prejudice by instructing the jury that plaintiff sued for a total of $400,000 when in fact the total amount for which plaintiff prayed was only $200,000. We have concluded that each of these issues must be resolved against defendant.

The Evidence

Defendant Corlett and plaintiff were not married but lived together as husband and wife in San Francisco from 1947 until the quarrel in 1952 which led to this action. Defendant supported plaintiff and gave her many presents. Among these was a Buick automobile. Plaintiff traded this car in as part payment on a Cadillac automobile. Defendant was angry about plaintiff's purchase of the Cadillac. Because of his anger plaintiff went to Los Angeles in the Cadillac. While plaintiff was in Los Angeles defendant paid the balance due on the Cadillac and had the "pink slip" of legal ownership issued in his name; plaintiff remained the registered owner. Defendant told plaintiff, "I paid the car off for you" and "I paid the car note off so you don't owe anything on the car." Defendant persuaded plaintiff to return to San Francisco and they continued to live together but they frequently quarreled.

and defendant agree that the complaints in the two actions are substantially identical except for the allegations of the criminal charges in respect to the description of the personal property charged to have been stolen.

While defendant was ill and hospitalized they had an argument. Plaintiff took the Cadillac, luggage (which she testified did not belong to her), rings and other articles of personal property (which are the subject of conflicting testimony as to whether they had been given to plaintiff by defendant), and went to Cleveland, Ohio. Defendant reported the matter to his attorney, then to a police inspector, then to a deputy district attorney. Defendant swore to two complaints against plaintiff, one charging theft of the car (Veh.Code, § 503) and one charging grand theft of other articles of personal property. Defendant gave the police various addresses to which he thought plaintiff might have gone. The police found her in Cleveland. She was jailed there for nearly a month, returned to San Francisco in custody of a police matron, and jailed in San Francisco for about a week. As previously stated, after preliminary hearing both criminal cases were terminated in favor of plaintiff (defendant in the criminal cases) by dismissal. On the issue of damages, plaintiff testified to her mental and physical suffering, humiliation, damage to her reputation among "friends that looked on me as decent and respectable," and her difficulties in obtaining employment.

Defendant recognizes the familiar rule that where the evidence is in conflict the appellate court will not disturb the verdict of the jury, but asserts that "in view of the peculiarity of the particular situation existing in the case at bar, appellant urges that the record undisputedly shows that he was the owner of the Cadillac and, therefore, entitled to pursue the same in the hands of plaintiff and hence that his procedure in having her arrested constitutes neither false arrest nor can the ensuing criminal proceedings constitute malicious prosecution, even though she was acquitted at the hearing."

[1-3] Defendant's words as to "paying the car off" for plaintiff, followed by plaintiff's possession of the car, could be construed as an executed gift of all defendant's interest in the automobile, in the absence of the special statutory rules as to transfer of legal title to automobiles. But "Old rules respecting transfer of personal property give way to those set forth in the Vehicle Code. [Citation.]" (Pike v. Rhinehart (1952), 112 Cal.App.2d 530, 532, 246 P.2d 963.) The transaction as to the Cadillac took place, as previously stated, in 1952. Applicable sections of the Vehicle Code as amended in 1951 are quoted in the margin.³ Because of those sections no transfer of legal ownership to plaintiff was effected. The parties themselves, however, on the view of plaintiff's evidence which the jury impliedly accepted, could have believed that defendant had given plaintiff the right to use the automobile as she desired and therefore he had no right to use criminal process to obtain its possession.

[4] As stated, plaintiff's action is both for false imprisonment and for malicious prosecution. As the court says in Neves

3. Section 175, par. (a): "Upon transfer of the title or any interest of the legal owner or owner in or to a vehicle registered hereunder, the person whose title or interest is to be transferred shall write his signature, and the transferee shall write his signature and address, in the appropriate spaces provided upon the reverse side of the certificate of ownership issued for such vehicle."

Section 176: "It is unlawful for any person to fail or neglect properly to endorse, date and deliver the certificate of ownership to a transferee who is lawfully entitled to a transfer of registration."

Section 177: "Whenever the owner of a vehicle registered hereunder sells or transfers his title or interest in, and delivers the possession of, said vehicle to another, said owner shall immediately notify the department of such sale or transfer giving the date thereof, the name and address of such owner and of the transferee and such description of the vehicle as may be required in the appropriate form provided for such purpose by the department."

Section 186 (as enacted in 1935): "No transfer of the title or any interest in or to a vehicle registered hereunder shall pass" until the parties have complied with described procedures as to the "pink slip" of legal ownership and the "white slip" of registration.

v. Costa (1907), 5 Cal.App. 111, 117-118, 89 P. 860, "False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another" (Pen.Code, sec. 236), the interference with the personal liberty of the plaintiff in a way which is absolutely unlawful and without authority. Malicious prosecution is procuring the arrest or prosecution of another under lawful process, but from malicious motives and without probable cause.

[5, 6] "The provocation, motive and good faith of the defendant in an action for false imprisonment constitute no material element in the case and can be considered only where punitive or exemplary damages are asked, and then only as affecting the measure of such damages. On the other hand, malice and want of probable cause are the gist of the action for malicious prosecution. Without allegation and proof of both, the action will fail. [Citation.]

[7, 8] "No one can recover damages for a legal arrest and conviction; therefore, in cases of malicious prosecution it becomes necessary to await the final determination of the action. But the same principle does not apply to an action for false imprisonment, as the form of action is based upon an illegal arrest and no matter ex post facto can legalize an act which was illegal at the time it was done. From this it will be seen that one of the essential elements of a complaint for malicious prosecution is that the proceeding upon which it is based has finally terminated in favor of the plaintiff, while it is equally apparent that this is not a necessary or proper allegation in an action for false imprisonment. [Citations.]" (Accord, Barrier v. Alexander (1950), 100 Cal.App.2d 497, 499, 224 P.2d 436; Collins v. Owens (1947), 77 Cal.App. 2d 713, 715-716, 176 P.2d 372.)

It is to be assumed, in view of the instructions given, that the verdict is based upon the tort of malicious prosecution, rather than the tort of false imprisonment. Concerning false imprisonment the jury were told only that it is defined by the Penal Code (§ 236) and is "the unlawful violation of the person and liberty of another," and that "the interference of the personal liberty of Eula Mae Singleton was upon a complaint made and a warrant issued by a duly constituted legal authority." There was no instruction as to damages recoverable for the tort of false imprisonment.

[9] On the other hand, the jury were instructed at some length concerning the tort of malicious prosecution, particularly the elements of probable cause and malice and defendant's claim that he acted on the honestly requested advice of counsel after a full and fair presentation of the facts. And they were correctly told (see Wong v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc. (1926), 199 Cal. 15, 18, 247 P. 894) that damages for such tort "may include loss of time and liberty, injury to reputation, if any, mental suffering, as well as for bodily harm, if any."

[10] In this state of the instructions it is to be assumed, as indicated, that the jury followed the charge as to malicious prosecution and found the existence of facts which constitute that tort.

Asserted Inconsistency of the Verdicts in Plaintiff's Two Actions

The verdicts of the jury in the two civil actions do not appear to be necessarily and as a matter of law inconsistent. As previously stated, the jury could have concluded that defendant gave plaintiff the right to use the Cadillac automobile as she saw fit and therefore had no proper ground of complaint when she took it. The jury could have believed that defendant's motives in pressing the charge with reference to the automobile were improper. Thus, it could have determined that the elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution were shown (see Jaffe v. Stone (1941), 18 Cal.2d 146, 149, 114 P.2d 335, 135 A.L.R. 775): a judicial proceeding terminated in plaintiff's favor; the existence of facts which show lack of probable cause; and malice. On the other hand, the jury could have believed that defendant acted without malice and with probable cause in pressing the charge as to the other property which defendant had not given plaintiff (luggage which plaintiff herself testified was not hers and other items of personal property which defendant testified belonged to him).

Defendant contends that even though the actions were consolidated for trial only, and even though plaintiff did not appeal in the second action, both actions are before this court, and this court should reconcile the assertedly inconsistent verdicts (citing Ferroni v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1943), 21 Cal.2d 773, 780, 135 P.2d 569; Southern Pacific Co. v. City of Los Angeles (1936), 5 Cal.2d 545, 548, 55 P.2d 847; In re Estate of McSweeney (1951), 107 Cal.App.2d 140, 144, 236 P.2d 846). Since the verdicts are not inconsistent, we need not discuss this contention.

Damages Resulting from Malicious Prosecution of or False Arrest under a Criminal Charge Where Plaintiff is Simultaneously Arrested and Prosecuted under a Justified Charge

As stated, the judgment in the second case became final without appeal. It is a conclusive determination that plaintiff has no cause of action on account of the charge of theft of the rings, luggage, and other personal property. According to defendant, plaintiff's damages were not shown to have been proximately caused by the criminal charge involved in the present action as opposed to the charge involved in the second action. (Citing Civ.Code, § 3333: The measure of damages for a tort, except where otherwise expressly provided in the code, is "the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby * * *." (Italics defendant's). Defendant says, "it was necessary for the plaintiff to show that she sustained damages as a result of the charge of stealing the automobile, as distinguished from the charge of stealing the jewelry. * * * [I]f the particular charge made in the action in which the jury returned a verdict in respondent's [plaintiff's] favor were eliminated, she would, nevertheless, have suffered exactly the same experiences, with no right of recompense or recovery. There is not one scintilla of evidence in the record which shows that by reason of the automobile charge plaintiff sustained any particular damage. Her whole cause is based upon her imprisonment predicated upon the two charges. It is conceivable that if a person were imprisoned on two charges, entirely dissimilar, a person might sustain damages by reason of being charged with some crime of horror as against a more conventional crime, even though lawfully incarcerated for the conventional crime, but in the instant case both charges were felonies and there is no reason that respondent would have suffered additionally or less because of the making of either charge by itself."

Basically, the problem is this: Must plaintiff, having shown that she was damaged by the prosecution, go further and show specifically that her damage was attributable to the prosecution on the unjustified charge rather than that on the justified charge? It is stated in Boogher v. Bryant (1885), 86 Mo. 42, 49, 50, "The authorities show, as we think, that, in order to maintain an action like this [malicious prosecution], 'it is not necessary that the whole proceeding be utterly groundless, for, if groundless charges are maliciously and without probable cause, coupled with others which are well founded, they are not on that account the less injurious, and, therefore, constitute a valid cause of action.' [Citations.] * * *

"[I]t is manifest that whatever difficulty, or impossibility even, there may be, in discriminating between the injuries, resulting from the good and bad counts, thus improperly blended, is chargeable to the wrongful act of the defendants themselves, and, upon principle, it would seem that they should not now be permitted to plead their own wrong in their own justification. If, by their wrongful acts, the plaintiff could not readily apportion his expenses, or dissect his trouble, care, anguish and vexation, and apportion them among the five counts in the information, it would seem cruel to hold that no basis could, therefore, be afforded by which to adjust the damages to the injuries sustained.

"Indeed, it would seem almost a mockery to hold that, by uniting groundless accusations with those for which probable cause might exist, the defendants could thereby escape liability, because of the injured party's inability to divide his damages between the two with delicate nicety. Such, we think, is not the law."

[11] We agree with the foregoing reasoning, and conclude that plaintiff, having shown that defendant maliciously joined an unjustified charge with a justified charge, does not have the further burden of showing that her damage was specifically attributable to the malicious prosecution as opposed to the prosecution which the jury found was not malicious.

Erroneous Instruction as to Amount of Damages Prayed for

The trial court of its own motion instructed the jury as follows: "[The complaints] asked for $100,000 for general damages for pain, suffering, confinement, and $100,000 for punitive damages or damages by way of example. Both complaints ask for the same amount, $100,000 for general damages and $100,000 for punitive damages. * * * As I said to you before, the full amount of the two complaints is $400,000, $100,000 for general damages on one case and $100,000 for punitive damages * * *."

In fact, in each complaint plaintiff alleged actual damages of $100,000 in the first cause of action; in the second cause of action she alleged no actual damages but asked punitive damages of $100,000; she prayed for only $100,000. The jury awarded $10,000 general damages and $15,000 punitive damages.

[12] Defendant complains that it was prejudicial error to tell the jury that "the full amount of the two complaints is $400,000," because the amount of plaintiff's recovery was limited to $200,000, the total amount for which the prayers ask. Plaintiff argues that the instructions as to damages quoted, 289 P.2d 800, correctly state the law because section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, "The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint; but in any other case, the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue"; and, as plaintiff says, "the prayer of a complaint for relief is no part of the statement of the cause of action and should where necessary be disregarded" (see Merlino v. West Coast Macaroni Mfg. Co. (1949), 90 Cal.App.2d 106, 112, 202 P.2d 748; Hoffman v. Pacific Coast Const. Co. (1918), 37 Cal.App. 125, 129-130, 173 P. 776).

[13] It is the usual rule that in a contested case plaintiff may secure relief justified by the allegations of the complaint and the evidence, even though the relief is greater than or different from that demanded. (E. g., Nathan v. Dierssen (1913), 164 Cal. 607, 611, 130 P. 12; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll (1910), 158 Cal. 474, 480, 111 P. 360; Johnson v. Polhemus (1893), 99 Cal. 240, 244-245, 33 P. 908; Von Schrader v. Milton (1929), 96 Cal.App. 192, 198, 273 P. 1074; Potter-Huffman Land & Livestock Co. v. Witcher (1920), 48 Cal.App. 93, 96-97, 191 P. 725.) In upholding awards of relief not specifically prayed for, the courts sometimes particularly note that there is a prayer for general relief (such as the prayer in the present complaint "for such other and further relief as to the Court may seem just and proper"). (E. g., Rogers Development Co. v. Southern California etc. Co. (1911), 159 Cal. 735, 741, 115 P. 934, 35 L.R.A.,N.S., 543; Booker v. Aitken (1903), 140 Cal. 471, 473, 74 P. 11; Mock v. City of Santa Rosa (1899), 126 Cal. 330, 341, 58 P. 826; Geller v. Anolik (1954), 127 Cal.App.2d 21, 27, 273 P.2d 29; La Jolla Casa De Manana v. Hopkins (1950), 98 Cal.App.2d 339, 349, 219 P.2d 871; Katz v. Driscoll (1948), 86 Cal.App.2d 313, 318, 194 P.2d 822; Morgan v. Veach (1943), 59 Cal.App.2d 682, 692, 139 P.2d 976 [complaint prayed for injunction and general relief; decree awarding injunction or, in the alternative, damages, affirmed]; Churchill v. Kellstrom (1943), 58 Cal.App.2d 84, 90, 136 P.2d 602 [damages can be awarded in quiet title suit, upon the theory of inverse condemnation, under prayer for general relief, even though no damages prayed for]; Martin v. Pacific Southwest Royalties (1940), 41 Cal.App.2d 161, 172, 106 P.2d 443; Sintzel v. Wagner

(1931), 119 Cal.App. 335, 337, 6 P.2d 293.) But it has been held that a court cannot properly award an amount of damages in excess of that for which the complaint prays. (Meisner v. Swenson (1921), 51 Cal.App. 361, 366, 196 P. 781, which says that relief in an amount exceeding that prayed for was "embraced within the issue" and therefore could be allowed under section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure]; *Crofoot v. [14] Regardless of the merits of plaintiff's position contrary to the cases which hold that an amount of damages in excess of that prayed for cannot be awarded, no harm appears to have resulted from the instruction, for the verdict was for an amount well within the limit of the amounts alleged as well as the amounts for which the prayers ask. [15] For the reasons above stated, the judgment is affirmed. Defendant has also noticed appeals from an order denying his motions, in the alternative, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or for a new trial. The order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is affirmed. (See Code Civ.Proc., § 629, last paragraph; MacDonald, New Procedure Affecting Motions for New Trial (1951), XXVI State Bar Journal 299, 303.) Gordon Frank KATES, a minor, by his guardian ad litem and trustee, Pauline Roblson, and Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, Respondents.

Civ. 16793.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 18, 1956.

Workmen's compensation proceeding. The Commission awarded death benefit to minor son, and compensation carrier sought writ of review and annulment of order. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that induction of minor son into army did not constitute an emancipation which would relieve divorced father of his obligation to comply with court order for support of minor son, and, therefore, son, who was 17 years and four months old at time of father's fatal injury, was child for whose maintenance father was legally liable at time of injury within Labor Code provision imposing, in such situation, conclusive presumption of dependency.

Award affirmed.

BRAY, Justice.

Raising the interesting question as to whether enlistment in the United States Army by a minor under 18 constitutes an emancipation making the presumption of dependency provided in section 3501, Labor Code, inapplicable, petitioner seeks review and annulment of an order of the commission awarding a death benefit to respondent Gordon, the minor son of John Kates who was killed in an industrial accident.

Facts.

John and his wife, Pauline, were divorced in 1939 by a decree of the superior court of the state of Washington, under which she received no alimony, but which ordered John to pay her $40 per month for the support of their three children, of whom she was given custody. April 22, 1954, John was killed in an industrial accident in California. At that time said decree was in full force. The other two children had passed the ages of 18. Gordon was 17 years and 4 months old. A week after his 17th birthday and almost 4 months prior to his father's death, Gordon, with his mother's consent, enlisted in the army, and at the time of his father's death was receiving $74 a month as a private. For an extended period prior to his death John had not in fact paid the support money ordered by the court nor supported Gordon in any manner. The commission applied the presumption of dependency provided by section 3501, Labor Code, and granted to Gordon a death benefit of $7,000.

Emancipation.

Section 3501, Labor Code: "The following shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: * * * (b) A child under the age of eighteen years or over that age but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, upon the parent with whom he is living at the time of the injury of the parent or for whose maintenance the parent was legally liable at the time of injury, there being no surviving dependent parent." (Emphasis added.)

It is contended that the father was no longer legally liable for Gordon's maintenance because the latter's enlistment emancipated him from his parents and hence the conclusive presumption of that section does not apply. Whether this is so is a matter of first impression in this state. Although the Civil Code provides that a child may be emancipated by an abuse of parental authority, § 203, by marriage or attaining majority, § 204, or by the parent voluntarily relinquishing it, § 211, there is no provision for emancipation by enlistment in the service.

[1] It has long been established that as between the government and the parent the minor becomes emancipated from the control of the latter on enlistment or drafting into the armed forces. See Baker v. Baker, 1868, 41 Vt. 55; In re Morrissey, 1890, 137 U.S. 157, 11 S.Ct. 57, 34 L.Ed. 644; United States v. Williams, 302 U.S. 46, 58 S.Ct. 81, 82 L.Ed. 39, rehearing denied 302 U.S. 779, 58 S.Ct. 361, 82 L.Ed. 602.

The effect of a minor's enlistment upon the father's obligation to comply with a court order for the minor's support has been determined elsewhere in Corbridge v. Corbridge, 1952, 230 Ind. 201, 102 N.E.2d 764. There, with the consent of both parents, the minor son enlisted in the army at a time when a divorce decree requiring the father to pay $45 per month for the minor's support was still in effect. On appeal from a judgment finding the father in contempt for failing to comply with the decree, the court flatly held that the minor's enlistment emancipated the child and made the father no longer liable for his support. The court referred to a statement in the Morrissey case, supra, 102 N.E.2d at page 767: "'An enlistment is not a contract only, but effects a change of status'" and the following in Iroquois Iron Co. v. Industrial Comm., 1920, 294 Ill. 106, 109, 128 N.E. 289, 290, 12 A.L.R. 924: "'When a minor enlists in the military service of this country, he ceases to be a part of his father's family, and puts himself under the control of the government, and is consequently emancipated so long as this service continues. * * *'" It then held, 102 N.E.2d at page 768:

"By the son's enlistment, his custody was placed in the United States Army. We cannot presume that the federal government did not and would not make full and adequate provision for his support, maintenance, medical care, and education if required. This would be true whether the son enlisted or was drafted.

"As soon as the son entered the armed forces the purposes of the trust for support, maintenance and education abated, and so continued as long as that service continued. * * *

"There is no more reason for equity granting the coercive remedy of imprisonment to compel payment of past due installments of support after a son is a member of the armed forces of the United States than if he had attained his majority, or if prior thereto he had been absolutely emancipated."

The Iroquois case, supra, dealt with a situation almost identical with ours. Under a divorce decree in full force at the time of the father's death resulting from an industrial injury, the father was ordered to pay certain sums weekly for the support of his minor son. With the father's consent, but without the mother's, and approximately three years before the father's death, the minor enlisted in the United States Marines, and was still in that service and a minor at the father's death. The commission awarded the son compensation for the death of the father. The problem before the court was stated, 128 N.E. at page 290: "It seems too clear to require argument that Reginald Olesen was not dependent upon his father for support, but the question of dependency is not controlling here. The question we are called upon to determine is whether the deceased was under legal obligation to support this son at the time of the injury." (This is identically our problem.) As set forth in the Corbridge case, supra, the reviewing court held that the minor's enlistment constituted an emancipation and that thereafter the father was "not under legal obligation to support his son." 128 N.E. at page 290. The award was reversed. In Peters v. Industrial Comm., 1924, 314 Ill. 560, 145 N.E. 629, the Illinois Supreme Court approved the rule of the Iroquois case but modified it to the extent that if at any time during minority the child is discharged from military service and returns home, he again becomes subject to parental control and the emancipation terminates. To the same effect is Green v. Green, Mo.App. 1950, 234 S.W.2d 350, where the court reversed an order of the trial court denying the father's motion to modify a divorce decree ordering support of the minor son, after that son had enlisted in the navy. See Dean v. Oregon R. & Navigation Co., 44 Wash. 564, 87 P. 824, to the effect that if enlistment in the army constitutes an emancipation, it terminates upon the minor's discharge. To the same effect, 67 C.J.S., Parent and Child, § 88, p. 814.

In Swenson v. Swenson, Mo.App. 1950, 227 S.W.2d 103, 20 A.L.R.2d 1409, the father failed to pay the amounts ordered in a divorce decree for the support of his minor son on the ground of the son's induction into the army. In reversing the trial court's order refusing to quash execution for the unpaid amount the reviewing court quoted from the Iroquois case, supra, and held that such induction emancipated the child and relieved the father from complying with the divorce decree.

There is authority to the contrary of the rule stated in the Iroquois case. In Torras v. McDonald, 1943, 196 Ga. 347, 26 S.E.2d 598, a father whose minor son was inducted into the United States Coast Guard, contended that such fact emancipated the child, and thereby rendered the father not liable in contempt for failing to comply with a previous divorce decree ordering him to pay monthly for the son's support. It appears that in Georgia, unless the power to alter or amend a decree of that type is reserved in the decree it may not be thereafter modified. The court pointed out that in making the order for support the court takes that fact into consideration. As to the contention that the minor's induction into service terminates the father's duty to pay the support provided in the decree the court said, 26 S.E.2d at page 600: "The induction of a minor son into the armed forces is nothing more than a rise or fall of the needs of a minor for maintenance and support, and is indefinite and uncertain as to the duration of such status."

In Harwood v. Harwood, 182 Misc. 130, 49 N.Y.S.2d 727, affirmed 268 App.Div. 974, 52 N.Y.S.2d 573, the question in a suit brought by a minor's mother against his father, her former husband, was: "The questions presented on this appeal are, first, whether the induction of a minor into the Military Service of the United States operates as a temporary emancipation during his term of service so as to suspend the obligation of his father to make payments, under a separation agreement, for the son's support, maintenance and education * * *." The court referred to the rule of the Iroquois case, supra, distinguishing the two cases upon the ground that this was an action upon a contract, while the Iroquois case was an issue of dependency under the Workmen's Compensation Law. The court said, however,

"But to the extent that the Iroquois case is contrary to the views here expressed, we do not follow it. The induction of the boy into the Armed Services results only in a suspension of any right appellant may have to his boy's services during such period as the Nation exercises its superior right to such services. The pay received by the boy may be regarded in the nature of a gratuity from the Government, because the Government in time of war unquestionably has the right to determine what sum, if any, it will pay to those whom it calls into service. Even while the boy is in actual service, there may be many obligations which the parent is still called upon to assume.

"The obligation under the contract is not one of reimbursement to the wife for any expenses incurred by her in maintaining and supporting the son, and nothing else. The obligation does not spring into existence only upon a showing by the plaintiff that she has expended certain sums in maintaining and supporting the boy. That does not mean, nor does she claim, that she would be entitled to retain for her own use and benefit the full sum specified in the contract to the exclusion of her son, the other beneficiary; but the fact that she would have no right to the sole use and benefit of the full installment does not impair her right to collect the entire amount. With respect to any benefits intended for the boy, her position would be that of a trustee charged with the duty, both legal and moral, to affect collection so as to make available to the boy the benefits intended for him. Seaver v. Ransom, 224 N.Y. 233, 120 N.E. 639, 2 A.L.R. 1187. The plaintiff is not seeking a 'windfall' for herself, as the appellant charges. Rather she is seeking to prevent the appellant from taking advantage of a situation arising because of the gravest of all national emergencies." 49 N.Y.S. 2d at pages 730-731.

Eisenberg v. Eisenberg, Sup.1945, 59 N. Y.S.2d 534, approved and followed the Harwood case in granting an order requiring the father to comply with the requirement of a separation agreement to pay support for a minor son who had entered the Merchant Marine. In Wack v. Wack, Sup., 74 N.Y.S.2d 435, there was a similar situation, the minor son being in the navy. Giving the Harwood case as a reference the court said, at page 436: "* * * defendant is entitled to no credit; induction into military service does not constitute an emancipation nor suspend nor abrogate the father's contractual obligation to contribute to his son's maintenance."

In Carson v. Carson, 1950, 120 Ind.App. 1, 89 N.E.2d 555, the separation agreement which provided for the support of the minor son was incorporated in a divorce decree. In an action on the contract, the father contended he was excused from complying with its terms because of the alleged emancipation of the son by reason of his being in the army. The court said, 89 N.E.2d at page 558: "It is our opinion that no emancipation of the son has occurred by reason of his entering the Armed Forces to release the father from the performance of his contractual obligations. Although, on occasion 'emancipation' has been used to signify complete severance of the legal rights and liabilities attendant upon the relationship of parent and child, it has frequently and more accurately been held to operate merely as a relinquishment to the child of its earnings, free of any of the rights or claims thereto in favor of the parent. 'Emancipation' does not operate to release a parent from liabilities and obligations involving his child which he has expressly covenanted to perform. The doctrine of emancipation has as its basis sound principles of public policy and has been applied by the courts, for the most part, to protect the best interests of children and those who have provided them with necessities when their parents have failed to do so. The entering of the child into the Armed Services does not constitute a voluntary surrender of control on the part of the parent. Harwood v. Harwood, 1944, 182 Misc. 130, 49 N.Y.S.

2d 727. * * * The pay received by the boy may be regarded in the nature of a gratuity from the Government, because the Government in time of war unquestionably has the right to determine what sum, if any, it will pay to whom it calls into service. Even while the boy is in actual service, there may be many obligations which the parent is still called upon to assume."

2 Armstrong, California Family Law, p. 1259, states: "Although no decision squarely meets this question, statements made by the supreme court in workmen's compensation cases in regard to the general scope of the parental duty to support the child suggests that California accepts the general rule that emancipation, except by marriage of the minor, affects only the rights of the parent and not his duties." (Emphasis added.) This statement is based partially¹ on language in Federal Mutual Liability Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1925, 195 Cal. 283, 233 P. 335, where the court upheld an award to a minor child for the industrial death of her father who for 8 years had failed to provide for her and only shortly before his death had commenced to contribute anything to her support. In concluding that the conclusive presumption of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Labor Code, § 3501) applied, the court said, 195 Cal. at pages 289-290, 233 P. at page 337: "Whether such conclusion is based upon the proofs of the voluntary resumption on the part of the father of his parental relations and obligations to his child, or upon the legal liability for the support of his child imposed by the terms of the divorce decree, or upon the broader ground of the basic legal obligation imposed by law upon a father to support his dependent child to the end that it shall not become a public charge, the award of the Commission upon either and all of these grounds can be sustained."

Thus Armstrong's statement can hardly be applied to the question of emancipation by enlistment in the armed forces.

As above shown, the majority of jurisdictions where the question has been considered hold that such enlistment constitutes an es emancipation in general without any consideration of the effect of enlistment.

emancipation during its continuance which releases the parent of the obligation to support² except where he has contracted to support the child during minority, in which case he would be held on the contract.³

The only case we have been able to find flatly holding in the absence of an agreement to support the minor, that the latter's enlistment does not constitute an emancipation and does not relieve the father of complying with the support order is the Georgia case of Torras v. McDonald, supra, 26 S.E. 2d 598.⁴

Petitioner cites the quotation (hereafter set forth) in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 175 Cal. 91, 94, 165 P. 15, L.R.A.1918F, 194, taken from Lackman v. Wood, 25 Cal. 147, as being in support of its claim that the minor here was emancipated. The Aetna case dealt with a 19 year old son whom it was held was not emancipated by the fact that for work on his father's ranch where the family lived the father gave the son from time to time small sums of money as payment of wages. Obviously the case itself is not in point. The Lackman case dealt with the question of whether at the time he took up certain land, the son of defendants, upon whose acts the defendants relied for their title, had been emancipated by the father. The language referred to above is, 25 Cal. at page 151: "The power of a father to emancipate his minor child cannot be questioned; nor can there be any doubt as to the effect of such emancipation upon the relations of the persons who are parties to it. The child is freed by emancipation from parental control; he can claim his earnings thereafter as against his father, and is in all respects his own man."

[2] While it is true the father may emancipate his child, Civ.Code, § 211, he had not done so in our case, unless Gordon's joining the army constituted an emancipation.

Respondent commission in determining that enlistment of the minor did not constitute emancipation, relied upon, in addition to Torras v. McDonald, supra, 26 S.E.2d 598, Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1947, 81 Cal.App.2d 37, 183 P.2d 344, where the court held that the presumption we are dealing with here applied even though the minor was self-supporting and the father had not contributed to his support for over 10 years, saying, "Irrespective of the presumptions mentioned in Labor Code, section 3501, the first duty of a father is to support his legitimate children", 81 Cal.App.2d at page 41, 183 P.2d at page 346; also Federal Mutual Liability Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 195 Cal. 283, 233 P. 335 (discussed above), and Kamper v. Waldon, 1941, 17 Cal.2d 718, 112 P.2d 1, which holds that the marriage of a minor and the emancipation thereby provided by section 204(2), Civil Code, does not release the father from his obligation to comply with the terms of a property settlement agreement entered into theretofore in which he agreed to pay monthly for the support of said minor. This holding was based upon the statement that "It may be assumed, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, that a parent is released from the legal duty of support upon the complete emancipation of a minor child, as by its lawful marriage," and the further statement: "Upon sufficient consideration the parent may agree and be bound to do more than the statute requires, so long as the additional obligation is not contrary to nor inconsistent with the statutory provision." 17 Cal.2d at page 720, 112 P.2d at page 2.

It should be pointed out that in the Waldon case the court did not determine wheth-

2. Indiana, Illinois, Missouri.

3. New York, Indiana.

4. While New York has not passed upon the question except where a separation agreement was involved, the language hereinbefore quoted from Harwood v. Harwood, 182 Misc. 130, 49 N.Y.S.2d 727, to the effect that the father's contract liability still exists after the minor's enlistment and that the moneys owed by the father are to be held in trust by the mother for the boy, coupled with the statement, 49 N.Y.S.2d at page 730, "The induction of the boy into the Armed Services result only in a suspension of any right appellant [the father] may have to his boy's services" during the period of the boy's remaining in the service, might indicate that in a case similar to ours the court might follow the Georgia rule. (Emphasis added.)

er complete emancipation results from the minor's marriage; it merely assumed for the purpose of the case that it did and then held that in spite of such assumption the father's agreement to support continued in force.

[3] This court is faced with the question of whether it will follow the majority or the minority rule as to the effect of induction into the armed services. Because the majority rule is that the emancipation may be only a temporary one, ending if the minor is released from service during his minority, and also does not release the father of his contract obligation; because as stated in Torras v. McDonald, supra, 26 S.E.2d at page 600, "The induction of a minor son into the armed forces is nothing more than a rise or fall of the needs of a minor for maintenance and support, and is indefinite and uncertain as to the duration of such status"; because in all the cases discussing the matter it is held that the payment by the father of support for the minor during the period of enlistment must be held by the mother as trustee for the minor "to make available to the boy the benefits intended for him", Harwood v. Harwood, supra, 49 N.Y.S.2d 727, 731, and because under Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 81 Cal.App. 2d 37, 183 P.2d 344, had the minor here been completely self-supporting in industry, rather than in his country's service, he would not have been emancipated and would have been entitled to compensation by reason of his father's death, we believe that the minority rule is the better one and should be applied in this state. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the conclusive presumption of dependency set forth in section 3501, Labor Code, applies; that the induction of the minor son into the army did not constitute such an emancipation as to relieve the father of his obligation to comply with the court order for support, and hence the "parent was legally liable at the time of injury * * *." Labor Code, § 3501(b).

The award is affirmed.

Action to establish and quiet title in certain realty. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Napa County, Anthony Brazil, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where wife in absence of fraud or misrepresentation consented in writing to joint tenancy in property with her husband, subsequent deeds by husband from himself to third party and from third party to himself creating a tenancy in common were valid thereby destroying joint tenancy and consequently devisees under will of deceased husband were entitled to husband's interest in property.

Affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨14(3)

Where husband and wife executed joint tenancy deed to certain real property, the parties in the absence of fraud, intended and did create a joint tenancy title with all the incidents thereof, notwithstanding what the real interests of the husband and wife might have been in the property prior to execution of the deed and however they might have been held.

2. Husband and Wife ⇨14(3)

In action by widow to quiet title to property which husband had devised to children of first wife after property had been placed in joint tenancy by deceased and his widow, evidence was sufficient to show no fraud was practiced on wife in creation of the joint tenancy, which had been destroyed prior to husband's death by his deed of his interest to third party and third party's deed of such interest to husband as his separate property.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action wherein plaintiff, the widow of Manuel Brazil, sought to establish and quiet her title in certain real property as against the claims of two children of Manuel by a prior marriage who claimed under his will.

Appellant and Manuel Brazil intermarried in 1921 and lived together as husband and wife until his death in 1952. The evidence showed that at the time of their marriage Manuel was possessed of about $3,000, a part of which at least was used by him to pay the expenses of the honeymoon trip of the couple to the Azores Islands. Appellant at the time of her marriage to Manuel was a widow with three minor children. She was the guardian of the children and of their estates and was in receipt of $40 per month therefrom for their support. She owned property of her own which the court found to have approximated in value the sum of $10,000. Throughout their marriage, as the court found, appellant reposed the greatest trust and confidence in Manuel and he handled all business matters and managed her separate property, as well as such separate property as he may have had, and the community interests of the parties. Soon after returning from their wedding trip, Manuel and appellant and her children moved on to the ranch property which is the subject of this litigation. He rented the property for about five years. In 1926 he purchased it for $8,000. He took title in his own name. The trial court found that the cash purchase price was paid from community funds, from the separate funds of appellant, and from the separate funds of Manuel, and further that the exact amount of the funds from each source was unknown. However, there was a great deal of credible evidence, both oral and documentary, that at the very least $5,750 of the total purchase price was supplied by appellant from her separate funds, and likewise there was strong evidence that thereafter an additional $4,250 of her separate funds were used in improving the property. After the property was purchased Manuel built a large dairy barn thereon in which he conducted a substantial dairy business and he also built on the property a two-story nine-room dwelling house which was the home of the family up to the time of his death in 1952. Appellant testified that Manuel on a number of occasions told her the property belonged to her and she said she did not discover the title stood in his name alone until 1945. She said she turned over to him and he handled all the funds which came to her from her separate estate, including the monthly allowance for the support of her children. In 1945, at Manuel's request, appellant accompanied him to an attorney's office where she joined him in the execution of a deed which conveyed the property to the two of them as joint tenants. She testified that she was told and she understood that the purpose of this was to place the title in such condition that if either of the two died the survivor would take the whole without the expense of probate. The attorney who prepared the joint tenancy deed and saw to its execution testified that he explained the matter to her in just that way. There was no evidence that it was also explained to her or that she understood that it was within the power of either party thereafter to destroy the joint tenancy and cause the property to be vested in the two as common tenants. She testified that after the joint tenancy deed had been executed Manuel on several occasions told her the property belonged to her. The title to the property remained unchanged after the execution of the joint tenancy deed until in 1951, a few months before he died, when Manuel caused another attorney, who had represented him on occasions, to prepare a deed of his interest in the property from himself to a third party and a deed from the third party back to him as his separate property. Shortly after the recordation of these deeds he died. Under the terms of his will his two children by his prior marriage succeeded to his undivided one-half interest.

[1-3] The trial court found that when the parties joined in the conveyance to themselves as joint tenants they thereby intended to and did create a true joint tenancy estate and, therefore, concluded that the two deeds last referred to effected a destruction of the joint tenancy status, and caused the property to be vested in Manuel and appellant as tenants in common; and that, by virtue of Manuel's will, the defendants were the owners of his interest. Appellant attacks the findings and her argument runs as follows: That from the evidence as to the source of the funds from which the property was purchased the trial court was compelled to find that Manuel held the legal title to the property in trust for appellant; that it appears without conflict that the greater part of the purchase price was furnished from the separate property of appellant; that as to the balance Manuel was guilty of commingling such community funds as might have gone into the purchase price with the separate funds of appellant in his hands; that the burden was upon him to prove any claim he might have to any interest in the property and that, failing such proof, it was all held by him in trust for appellant; that in any event there was a pro tanto resulting trust; and that equity will follow trust property, no matter what forms of conveyance or muniments of title are executed. However, we think the execution of the joint tenancy deed affords sufficient support for the trial court's findings that, by the execution thereof, the parties intended to and did create a joint tenancy title in the two with all the incidents thereof; and that this is true notwithstanding what the real interests of the parties may have been prior to the execution of that deed and however they may have been held. For example, if, after taking the title in himself, Manuel had executed and delivered to appellant an express declaration that he held the whole title or some part thereof in trust for her, nevertheless her joining in the execution of the joint tenancy deed would support the findings of the trial court. The execution of that deed was in itself an expression of an intention of the parties thereafter to hold the property in accordance with its terms. Siberell v. Siberell, 214 Cal. 767, 773, 7 P.2d 1003. The court impliedly found that no fraud was practiced upon her. There is nothing in the record which compels a finding to the contrary. When she executed the joint tenancy deed, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation she, in effect, consented in writing to a new status with respect to her interest and that of Manuel in the subject property. Schindler v. Schindler, 126 Cal.App.2d 597, 272 P.2d 566. It ought to be mentioned that, in addition to the evidence we have referred to, it appears from the record that Manuel and appellant had for years made use of joint tenancies in respect of their property. He had made a number of loans wherein the notes ran in favor of both and the deeds of trust securing payment of the same recited that their beneficial interests were those of joint tenants. At least one bank account, which shortly before his death had amounted to nearly $10,000, had long been kept in joint tenancy and appellant had withdrawn the funds from that account while Manuel still lived. As the trial court observed, it was probable from the evidence before it that these two knew a good deal more about joint tenancies than the average person knows.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Purchasers' action to rescind contract for sale of motel and to recover money judgment because of vendors' alleged fraudulent representations as to motel income, wherein vendors cross-complained seeking to have their title to motel property quieted, and purchasers answered disclaiming interest in property except lien for benefits conferred on vendors under contract. The Superior Court, Lake County, Benjamin C. Jones, J., entered judgment cancelling contract and quieting vendors' title to property, and purchasers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where court found for vendors but made no finding on unjust enrichment issue, it was duty of court to determine whether vendors would be unjustly enriched by retention of all or part of benefits they received.

Vendor and Purchaser ⇨341(4)

In purchasers' action to rescind contract for sale of motel and to recover money judgment because of vendors' alleged fraudulent representations as to motel income, wherein vendors cross-complained seeking to have their title to motel property quieted, purchasers answered disclaiming interest in property except lien for benefits conferred on vendors under contract, and court found for vendors but made no finding on unjust enrichment issue, it was duty of court to determine whether vendors would be unjustly enriched by retention of all or part of benefits they received.

Kasch & Cook, Ukiah, for appellants.

Lakeport, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiffs and appellants filed the instant action to rescind a written contract for the sale and purchase of a motel and furnishings located in Lake County, and for judgment in the sum of $15,000 because of respondents' alleged fraudulent representations as to the amount of income they had earned from the operation of the motel. Respondents answered and cross-complained, praying that their title to the property be quieted. Appellants' answer to the cross-complaint disclaimed any right, title, or interest in the property except a lien thereon in the amount, and until the return, of the benefits conferred upon respondents under the contract. The trial court found that appellants' charges of fraud were untrue and entered judgment cancelling the contract and quieting respondents' title to the property. A motion for a new trial was denied and plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment.

The written contract was entered into between the parties on May 24, 1950. The respondents thereby agreed to sell the real and personal property herein involved to the appellants for the sum of $60,000, of which $15,000 was to be paid upon the execution of the contract and the balance, together with 5 per cent interest on the unpaid principal, at the rate of $335 a month, commencing on June 26, 1950. It was provided that the down payment of $15,000, receipt of which was thereby acknowledged, was represented by a deed from appellants to respondents of a house in Colfax, the title to which respondents were to take subject to a deed of trust. During the pendency of this action, respondents exchanged this house for one in Oakland which they thereafter sold. Time was made the essence of the contract and it was provided that if appellants defaulted, the respondents should retain all moneys paid as rent and compensation for the use and occupancy of the premises.

The appellants took possession of the motel on June 1, 1950, and, on July 1st, made a payment of $335 to respondents. However, appellants became dissatisfied with the income realized from the operation of the motel and early in August served respondents with a notice of rescission of the contract of May 24, 1950, on the ground that they were induced to enter into it by fraud practiced upon them by respondents. Nevertheless, appellants remained in possession, and on August 21st paid respondents $165. Respondents testified that it was then agreed that instead of the $335 monthly payments provided for in the contract, the appellants would pay $1,000 on January 1, 1951, and $1,500 semi-annually thereafter. This was denied by appellants who claimed they did not withdraw their rescission but were persuaded to remain by respondents' misrepresentation that business improved in the winter and that they would be satisfied with the income. In any event, appellants made no payments after August 21st, but continued to operate the motel until January 1, 1951, when they quit the premises. The instant action was filed on January 8, 1951. Respondents retook possession of the property and on April 15th sold it for $54,000.

Appellants do not attack the findings that there were no fraudulent representations on the part of respondents, as they concede that the evidence on this issue was in substantial conflict, but they contend that the court erred in not finding that they were entitled to restitution in the sum of $15,000 secured by a lien upon the real property here involved. They argue that the conveyance of the Colfax house represented $15,000, that they paid respondents $500 in cash, and added improvements to the motel worth $200 so that they should recover the total of said amounts less $700 chargeable as the reasonable rental value of the motel during seven months' occupancy.

Appellants' principal contention is that: "A defaulting purchaser of real and personal property, even where the default is 'wilful' is entitled to repayment of the excess of his payments and benefits conferred upon the seller over and above the actual damages suffered by the seller as the result of the default and the reasonable value of the occupancy of the property."

In the recent case of Bird v. Kenworthy, 43 Cal.2d 656, at page 659, 277 P.2d 1, at page 2, the court said:

"In Freedman v. Rector, Wardens & Vestrymen of St. Mathias Parish, 37 Cal.2d 16, 230 P.2d 629, 31 A.L.R.2d 1, it was held that, although the vendee in a conditional contract for the sale of real estate is a willful defaulter, the vendee may recover the amount which constitutes unjust enrichment of the vendor by reason of the termination of the contract. Such recovery may be had though the vendee could receive no relief under section 3275 of the Civil Code.

"To have the benefit of the rule against unjust enrichment, the burden of proof is upon the defaulting vendee to show that the payments made by him exceed the vendor's damages. Major-Blakeney Corp. v. Jenkins, 121 Cal.App.2d 325, 332, 263 P.2d 655; Baffa v. Johnson, 35 Cal.2d 36, 40, 216 P.2d 13."

And in Major-Blakeney Corp. v. Jenkins, 121 Cal.App.2d 325, at page 332, 263 P.2d 655, at page 659, the court said:

"Where the remedy of specific performance is not possible and restitution offers the only effective relief to a defaulting vendee, relief may be granted if the vendee is able to prove that his down payment exceeds the damages to the vendor produced by his default. Barkis v. Scott, supra [34 Cal.2d 116, 208 P.2d 367], and cases there cited; see Baffa v. Johnson, 35 Cal.2d 36, 39, 216 P.2d 13. In Freedman v. Rector, Wardens & Vestrymen of St. Mathias Parish, 37 Cal.2d 16, 20, 230 P.2d 629, 631, 31 A.L.R.2d 1, relying upon sections 1670, 1671, and 3369 of the Civil Code, the court stated that even a wilfully defaulting vendee may be relieved from a forfeiture, since 'the damage provisions of the Civil Code, together with the policy of the law against penalties and forfeitures provide an alternative basis for relief independent of section 3275.' The burden rests upon the defaulting vendee seeking restitution to prove how much of his down payment exceeds the vendor's damages. Baffa v. Johnson, supra."

As hereinbefore set forth, the respondents agreed to sell the motel property to appellants for the sum of $60,000 and accepted the Colfax residence of appellants as a down payment at an agreed valuation of $15,000. Appellants paid the additional sum of $500 and occupied and operated the motel property for a period of seven months. After respondents retook possession of the property they resold it for $54,000. There is evidence that respondents later traded the Colfax house for a house in Oakland, which was later resold by them. The record is not clear as to how much respondents eventually realized from the Colfax property, but it does show that they did realize in excess of $11,000. Respondents in their cross-complaint sought to quiet their title to the motel property, and appellants in their answer to the cross-complaint re-alleged their charges as to fraud and alleged their right to have returned to them the benefits conferred on respondents by virtue of the contract. The court found against appellants' allegations of fraud and against the allegations of appellants' answer to the cross-complaint, and entered a judgment quieting respondents' title to said property. The court made no findings as to what benefits respondents had received or if they would be unjustly enriched by the retention of all or a part thereof.

In the case of Crofoot v. Weger, 109 Cal. App.2d 839, 241 P.2d 1017, which was an action by purchasers seeking relief from forfeiture of payments made under an installment contract, we held that the court should have determined all issues concerning relief and unjust enrichment. We there said, 109 Cal.App.2d at page 842, 241 P.2d at page 1019:

"In addition to the foregoing, if the court had found that the breach was willful or grossly negligent so as to prevent equitable relief under section 3275 of the Civil Code there was still the duty of the court to go further and find whether or not the termination of the contract by the respondents for the appellants' default resulted in the unjust enrichment of the respondents. If such were the result then it would have been the duty of the court to give judgment for so much of the funds paid in as constituted unjust enrichment. Freedman v. Rector, Wardens & Vestrymen of St. Mathias Parish, supra. * * * It is apparent that a situation was portrayed by the evidence which would have justified findings of unjust enrichment if relief could not be given through reinstatement of the contract, and it was therefore the duty of the court to proceed and find upon these matters and if it found unjust enrichment had resulted to give judgment for the amount thereof."

We believe that under the authorities hereinbefore cited it was the duty of the court in the instant case, just as it was in Crofoot v. Weger, to have determined and made findings upon the issue of unjust enrichment, and that because of its failure to do so the judgment must be reversed.

The judgment is reversed in so far as it fails to adjudicate the issue of unjust enrichment, and the cause remanded with directions to the trial court to proceed, upon the evidence taken or such additional evidence as the parties may see fit to offer, to determine what benefits, if any, respondents have received and if they will be unjustly enriched by the retention of what they have received under the said contract. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

Mandamus proceedings. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that, where, in prosecution for possession of narcotics, trial judge refused to admit evidence of the marijuana because search at police station during which the narcotic was discovered was not incidental to defendant's lawful arrest on drunk and assault charges, writ of mandate would not lie to test correctness of such ruling, even though People would not have right of appeal if accused was erroneously dismissed or acquitted for lack of evidence.

Writ denied.

1. Mandamus ⇨28, 40

Writ of mandate may, in proper case, be used to correct an abuse of judicial discretion, but it cannot be used to control a discretionary act of a superior judge and may not be used to compel a judge to admit or exclude evidence during trial, even if judge's ruling is erroneous.

2. Courts ⇨1

Trial judge has jurisdiction to decide matters before him erroneously as well as correctly.

3. Mandamus ⇨40

Ruling on admission of evidence is not, even if wrong, an abuse of discretion but is simply an erroneous ruling.

4. Mandamus ⇨61

Where, in prosecution for possession of narcotics, trial judge refused to admit evidence of the marijuana because search at police station during which the narcotic was discovered was not incidental to defendant's lawful arrest on drunk and assault charges, writ of mandate would not lie to test correctness of such ruling, even though People would not have right of appeal if accused was erroneously dismissed or acquitted for lack of evidence.

Thomas C. Lynch, Dist. Atty., City & County of San Francisco, Irving F. Reichert, Jr., Deputy Dist. Atty., San Francisco, for petitioner.

Mervyn Schneider, San Francisco, for respondent (real party in interest).

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The petition alleges that Verne Peacock was lawfully arrested and booked on charges of drunkenness and suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon; that the accused was searched at the scene of the arrest and then taken to the police station; that there, pursuant to normal police procedure, the accused was directed to empty his pockets; that among the objects in Peacock's possession was a glass vial containing marijuana; that thereupon, the charge of possession of narcotics was added to those already made; that subsequently, the drunk and assault charges were dropped, and Peacock proceeded to trial on the felony narcotic charge; that the trial judge, on such trial, sustained an objection to the admission into evidence of the marijuana on the ground that such evidence was not admissible under the rule of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal. 2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, because, so the trial court ruled, the search at the police station during which the narcotic was discovered was not incidental to the lawful arrest on the drunk and assault charges. The trial court, however, agreed to the request of the prosecutor to continue the trial until November 28, 1955, so that the present writ of mandate could be filed to test the correctness of the ruling. Thereupon, this petition was filed requesting that the trial court be compelled by mandate to admit the evidence.

[1-3] While a writ of mandate may, in a proper case, be used to correct an abuse of judicial discretion, it cannot be used to control a discretionary act of a superior judge. In particular, the writ may not be used to compel a judge to admit or exclude evidence during a trial, even if such ruling is an erroneous one. It is elementary that a trial judge has the jurisdiction to decide matters before him erroneously as well as correctly. That is one reason why we have appellate courts. A ruling on the admission of evidence, even if wrong, is not an abuse of discretion but simply an erroneous ruling.

[4] That mandamus will not issue in such cases is well settled in this state. Short v. Superior Court, 94 Cal.App. 664, 271 P. 783; Gubin v. Superior Court, 104 Cal.App. 331, 285 P. 1071; Lyders v. Superior Court, 129 Cal.App. 635, 19 P.2d 300. Petitioner, while recognizing the force of these cases, correctly points out that the cited cases were all civil cases, where the point could be reviewed on an appeal, and also correctly points out that the People have no right of appeal if the accused is erroneously dismissed or acquitted for lack of evidence. It is urged that, assuming the ruling on the evidence was erroneous,¹ unless mandamus be granted the People will suffer a wrong without a remedy. That this is so is undoubtedly true. But the argument is one that should be addressed to the Legislature or perhaps to the People via a proposed constitutional amendment, and not to the courts. The lawmakers of this state have determined that except under very limited circumstances not here involved, the People have no right of appeal in criminal cases. What petitioner is seeking in the present case is to review the propriety of a ruling of the trial court on the admission of evidence. If petitioner is correct that mandamus will issue in a criminal case in such a situation, then every ruling of a trial court adverse to the prosecution in a criminal case may be reviewed by means of a writ of mandamus, thus giving the People, in effect, the very appeal that the lawmakers have denied to them.

The petition for the writ is denied.

Nov. 17, 1955.

Petition for writ of error coram nobis. The Superior Court, Kern County, Norman F. Main, J., entered order denying petition, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that evidence failed to disclose mental incapacity of defendant at time he pleaded guilty.

Affirmed.

Criminal Law §997(15)

On application for writ of error coram nobis, the evidence was sufficient to indicate that defendant was mentally capable of understanding nature of proceeding and what he was doing at time his plea of guilty was entered. Pen.Code, § 288.1.

1. Petitioner argues quite forcefully that the search here was one incidental to a lawful arrest and therefore not illegal. United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653; Harris v. United States, 331 U.S. 145, 67 S.Ct. 1098, 91 L.Ed. 1399; see discussion 35 Yale Law Journal 612. We express no opinion on this subject because the point is not before us. In this opinion we have assumed that the ruling on the admission of the marijuana was erroneous. But this assumption is made simply to pass on the question of the propriety of using mandamus to test the ruling. We do not deem it proper to rule on the admissibility question. To do so would be to do indirectly what we have no power to do directly.

Willis Mevis, Bakersfield, for appellant.
Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with incest with his daughter and, in a second count, with committing a lewd and lascivious act upon the same daughter, who was then under 14 years of age. The court appointed an attorney to represent him, and he later pleaded not guilty as to both counts. Subsequently, the court granted his request to withdraw his pleas of not guilty. He then pleaded guilty to the second count, the first count was dismissed on motion of the district attorney, and he applied for probation. Pursuant to Section 288.1 of the Penal Code, a doctor was appointed to examine the defendant and report to the court. A hearing was later held in which the doctor's report and the report of the probation officer were considered. On October 13, 1950, probation was denied and judgment was pronounced sentencing the defendant to state prison. No appeal was taken from the judgment.

On August 26, 1954, the defendant in propria persona filed in the trial court a petition for a writ of error coram nobis asserting, among other things, that at the time he pleaded guilty his ability to reason and understand the nature of the case was that of an imbecile. A different attorney was then appointed by the court to represent the defendant and a hearing was had, at which evidence was presented. The petition was denied and the defendant has appealed from that order.

Appellant's sole contention is that there was an error in fact made by the trial court in believing that the appellant was mentally capable of understanding the nature of the proceedings under which he pleaded guilty, and that there are "bits of evidence" which, when taken together, proved that he was at that time mentally incapable of understanding the nature of the proceedings. The appellant relies on four matters which appear in the record. (1) After he had withdrawn his plea of not guilty and when asked "How do you plead to the second count of the information; namely, Lewd and Lascivious Conduct?", the defendant replied "I plead guilty, I suppose". He was then told to confer with his counsel, after which he replied "I plead guilty." (2) When arraigned for judgment on October 13, 1950, the court asked the defendant whether he had any legal cause to show why he should not now be sentenced. His attorney replied "He does not, Your Honor". The court then asked the defendant to speak for himself and the defendant replied "None, I reckon". The court then asked if he understood the question and the defendant replied "None, I reckon, no legal cause." (3) The report of the doctor appointed to examine the defendant, which report was dated October 9, 1950, contains this sentence: "His intelligence and mentality are, according to my examination and various tests, definitely dull and below the borderline of dull normal, even when one considers his complete lack of training." (4) A doctor, who testified at the hearing on the petition for writ of error coram nobis, interpreted the report filed by the other doctor as meaning that the defendant was a moron who might not understand the nature of the charges and if it were explained to him might not remember it.

The first two of these matters require no comment. The report of the doctor who examined the defendant before the probation hearing takes up six pages of the transcript. It states that the defendant said to the examiner "Now they claim I had intercourse with my daughter; the other charge 'L. and L.', what is that? I thought I would get a jail sentence but now it will be San Quentin." It further states: "Reading is very slow and spelling comparable to a third grader. Writing is poor. Intelligence is rather limited to quite concrete thinking." It states that when asked whether he thought his actions concerning his daughter were right, the defendant replied: "No, it is not right. They framed me. I am not guilty of that. It would not be right, I don't believe in it. I only put medicine on that child. Eighteen years is the age for girls." After referring to the defendant's lack of education and living conditions the report contains the sentence relied on by the appellant, and then states "His drinking, plus the poorest domestic quarters as further contributing factors often produce circumstances to predispose to the commission of sexual offenses."

The doctor who made this report had died and another doctor was called as a witness in behalf of the petitioner at the hearing on the application for the writ. This doctor's attention was called to the sentence in the other doctor's report which is now relied on, and he was asked: "Now, if a person is definitely dull and below the borderline of dull normal, is there any classification as to his mental condition?" The witness replied "This falls into the classification of the moron". The court then asked the doctor "Any person below dull normal is a moron?", and the doctor replied: "For purposes of classification. It does not mean these individuals cannot carry out useful tasks. It means their normal exercise of obtaining information frequently is impaired or they have to do their work under supervision. Many of them can do tasks which require repetition, but they lose a great deal of their initiative. In fact, they have little or no initiative." When asked whether in his opinion a moron charged with lewd and lascivious acts could understand this charge, the doctor replied: "I would think not, especially in this instance, since the man had had—in addition to his subnormal mental attainments had not had the benefit of any educational advantages. He may have been able to understand these things in, say, simple and you might say common language, but perhaps not in this particular language used here." The doctor then explained that this opinion was based on the idea that without any explanation the defendant would not understand that language. On cross-examination, the doctor was asked whether he thought a person such as described in the report would understand the nature of his act at the time he was committing the act, and replied: "If he was in full possession of his faculties, he probably would." When asked whether he thought it could be explained to the defendant by his counsel "so he would understand the nature of the charge placed against him" the doctor replied: "It could be done yes, that is right." When asked on redirect whether he would say that if this charge were fully explained to him at one time it was possible that at a later time he would not remember it, the doctor replied: "It is possible." The doctor then testified that he had not seen the defendant and that his assistance was of less value than if he had been able to see the man.

The attorney who represented the appellant in the trial court up to the time judgment was pronounced filed an affidavit in which he stated that he was appointed counsel for the defendant on July 11, 1950, and interviewed the defendant on a number of occasions between that time and October 13, 1950; that at all times the defendant appeared to know the nature of the charges against him and was able to cooperate with his counsel in the preparation of his defense; that affiant's investigation revealed that the evidence against the defendant was exceptionally strong; that affiant fully informed the defendant of all the facts that came to his notice, and told the defendant to make up his own mind as to how to plead; that the defendant was given several days in which to consider his decision and thereafter expressed the intention of pleading guilty to the second count; that the defendant was informed of all the possible results of his plea, and was informed that neither the district attorney nor his counsel could determine in advance what the decision and judgment of the court would be; and that at no time did the defendant indicate any lack of understanding of the nature of the proceedings or of the charges against him.

The question was one of fact for the trial court, and the evidence is sufficient to support the order complained of. While the evidence indicates that the appellant's degree of mentality was not too high it falls far short of showing that he was an imbecile or of establishing, as a matter of law, that he was not mentally capable of understanding the nature of the proceedings or what he was doing at the time his plea of guilty was entered.

The order is affirmed.

In action against city by pedestrian who claimed that she sustained injuries when she stepped into a hole in city street and who claimed that adjuster of city's insurer told her that claim would be investigated and that there was nothing further she need do until she heard from city, evidence did not demand finding that city was equitably estopped from relying on statutory requirement for timely filing of claim against city. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53052.

McCabe & Schumacher, Fullerton, for appellant.

Harry E. Sackett, Raoul Francoeur, Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages for injuries claimed to have been suffered by the plaintiff when she stepped into a hole in a city street. The complaint, filed on December 8, 1953, alleged that the accident happened on December 12, 1952; that on November 23, 1953, the plaintiff filed with the city clerk a verified claim in accordance with the provisions of Sections 53050 to 53056 of the Government Code; that the defendant city "through its agents and employees" and its insurance carrier informed the plaintiff that the city was desirous of settling her claim; that the city, "through its said agents and employees", secured from the plaintiff a full statement concerning her accident; that the said agents of the city then and there advised the plaintiff it would not be necessary for her to do anything further, and that the city would process said claim and there after inform plaintiff as to what it would do about said claim; that because the plaintiff believed the statements of the city made through its agents she did not, for several months, employ an attorney; that she did not take any steps relating thereto until the city through its agents informed her, about thirty days before she filed her claim, that the city and its insurance carrier denied all liability in connection with her injuries; that within a reasonable time thereafter she employed attorneys and presented her claim against the city; that by reason of the foregoing the city waived the requirement that plaintiff file a claim within 90 days; and that the city is estopped by reason of the foregoing to complain of the late filing of plaintiff's claim.

The city filed an answer and a trial was first had on the special issue raised by the pleadings as to whether an equitable estoppel existed, as against the city, which would excuse plaintiff's failure to file a verified claim within the time required by Section 53052 of the Government Code.

The plaintiff's husband testified that he was manager of the Northern Orange County Citrus Exchange, and had been in that business for 37 years; that before January 1, 1953, he contacted the city clerk and asked if he had any recourse "and if the city carried insurance to cover this sort of a thing"; that the clerk replied that the city was insured and referred him to the local agent for the insurance carrier; that he then talked to this local agent and "outlined the accident which occurred"; that the agent said he would get in touch with the insurance company; that on January 13, a Mr. Winser came to their home and identified himself as the representative of the insurance carrier; that Winser stated he was there to get the facts; that Winser wrote down a statement of the facts, as given him, which was signed by the plaintiff; that Winser asked him what they had in mind in the way of a settlement, and they told him they could not yet tell what the ultimate results of the accident would be; that they asked Winser "as to when we might hear and what action might be taken further and what procedure would be followed"; that Winser said it would be necessary for him to contact the doctors and submit his report to the insurance company, "and we would hear from the insurance company in due time"; that they pressed him as to how long this might take and Winser stated that "we would be advised just as soon as the report had been processed"; that they asked Winser if there was anything further they should do and he said there was nothing further they need do, "that we would hear from the insurance company"; that Winser did not tell them not to go to a lawyer; that nothing was said about a lawyer or about money, and Winser did not say when he would be back; that Winser gave him his card; that he did not call Winser; that no one called him or came to see him; that between January 13 and the end of October he talked to no one and made no inquiry of anyone concerning his wife's claim against the city; that about November 1, he called the local agent who later informed him that the insurance company had turned down the claim; and that he then told the agent he would seek legal advice to find out "if we have a claim against the insurance company." When asked why they had not made further contacts during those months, he replied that he saw no point in pressing the matter, and that they hoped to know the extent of his wife's injuries "before we got the word" from the insurance company.

The plaintiff testified to the same effect with respect to what occurred when her statement was taken, and that between January 13 and November 25 she did not call or write to anyone concerning her claim, and no one contacted her. When asked why she did not press this matter during the summer and fall of 1953 she replied: "Well, I still was having so much trouble with my knee I thought it would be better if we waited to see just how badly handicapped I would be before we tried to make a settlement, and it was my impression that after a year elapsed we wouldn't be entitled to anything, so I waited as long before that year elapsed as I possibly could." Mr. Winser testified that he was an insurance adjuster working for an adjustment company in Santa Monica; that he discussed the facts with the plaintiff and her husband on January 13, and took her written statement and also took an authorization to get needed information from her doctors; that he did not do or say anything while there other than to discuss the facts of the accident, take the statement, and have her sign it; that there was no talk about a settlement or contacting them later; that he did not tell them that they would hear from the insurance company, or that they would hear from the city; that he was not asked, and that he said nothing with respect to whether or not there was anything further they would have to do; and that after January 13 he never talked to either of them in person or by phone.

So far as material here, the court found that Winsor called on the plaintiff on January 13, 1953, and in the presence of her husband identified himself as an insurance adjuster employed by Bay Cities Adjustment Company, and working in behalf of the insurance carrier for the defendant city; that he obtained a written statement from the plaintiff and requested authority to further investigate the claim and examine the medical reports of her physician; that plaintiff asked Winsor what she was to do next and how long it would take to complete the investigation; that Winsor told her that they would hear from him and that there was nothing more they needed to do; that Winsor did not offer the plaintiff any money or mention any amount of settlement, or tell her when she would hear from him; that plaintiff was never advised not to retain an attorney and was never advised not to file a verified claim with the city; that neither plaintiff nor her husband heard from or saw Winsor again until after the suit was filed; that plaintiff and her husband kept Winsor's card containing his telephone number and address; that neither of them from January 13 up to November, 1953, ever attempted to or did contact anyone concerning their alleged claim against the defendant city; that plaintiff filed her alleged verified claim with the city clerk on November 25, 1952; that the reason given by plaintiff and her husband for not filing the claim until the expiration of 11½ months was because she was waiting to see whether or not she would suffer permanent disability; that there was no fraud or deceit in the matter of taking plaintiff's written statement on January 13, as to the facts surrounding the accident; that plaintiff was not lured into a sense of false security by reason of any word or act on behalf of the defendant city, or its agents or employees; and that as a reasonably prudent person the plaintiff was in no way prevented from filing her claim within the time prescribed by law.

The appellant contends that the court's findings to the effect that an equitable estoppel as against the city did not here exist are not supported by the evidence, and that the findings of fact do no support the judgment. It is argued that it is now clearly held, under the usual rules of equity, that a city may be estopped from relying on the statutory requirement for the filing of a claim within 90 days, where the city does anything which would reasonably tend to mislead a claimant with respect to the necessity for filing such a claim within that time; that it is only natural for a citizen to be more easily lulled into a false sense of security when a city tells him that it will investigate his claim, and there is nothing further he needs to do; and that the court here found that the appellant was told that the city would investigate further, and that there was nothing more that she needed to do.

[1] It is now well settled that a governmental agency may be estopped from relying on the failure to file such a claim within the statutory time when the conduct of its officers or agents was such as to mislead the claimant with respect to the necessity of filing the claim within the required time. Farrell v. County of Placer, 23 Cal.2d 624, 145 P.2d 570, 153 A.L.R. 323; Cruise v. City and County of San Francisco, 101 Cal. App.2d 558, 225 P.2d 988; Mendibles v. City of San Diego, 100 Cal.App.2d 502, 224 P.2d 42. In all of those cases the appeals were from judgments based on the pleadings or on the granting of a nonsuit. In the Cruise case [101 Cal.App.2d 558, 225 P.2d 991], it was pointed out that where an estoppel is pleaded "the question as to whether such estoppel exists is a question which should be left to the trier of fact to be determined as a question of fact, and not determined as a question of law."

[2] Assuming that the evidence here, in view of one of the facts found, would have supported a conclusion and judgment in favor of the appellant, it cannot be held as a matter of law that such a conclusion and judgment were required. The court did not find, as the appellant argues, that she was told by the city that it would investigate her claim and that there was nothing further she needed to do until she heard from the city. The statement in the findings relied on by the appellant was a part of a long finding relating to what the insurance adjuster told the appellant, with respect to how long the investigation would take and as to whether there was anything more she needed to do in connection with that investigation. That this statement in the findings was intended to relate to the investigation being conducted for the insurance carrier, and not to any steps that should or should not be taken in connection with enforcing a claim against the city, rather clearly appears from the other findings, to the effect that the appellant was in no way misled with respect to the filing of a verified claim with the city. No offer of a settlement was made on January 13, no statement was made that the claim would probably be settled, and nothing was asked or stated except with respect to how long the investigation would take and that the appellant would eventually hear from the adjuster. Although she was given the adjuster's address and telephone number the appellant made no attempt to contact him, the insurance carrier or the city for nearly ten months, and no claim was filed for about 11½ months after the accident. The evidence rather clearly shows that instead of relying on any representations to the effect that the filing of any suit would be unnecessary, the appellant at all times had the intention of bringing a suit within a year, and was waiting as long as possible before that year elapsed. Her own neglect and her own knowledge and intention had an important bearing on the equitable question presented to the trial court.

There is no evidence of any misleading statements made to appellant by the city or any of its employees, or regular agents. Over a long period the appellant chose to deal with the insurance carrier alone. There were many factual questions presented to the trial court, including the authority of the adjuster to act for and bind the city under these circumstances and for the purpose claimed, the meaning and effect to be given the statements made to the appellant on January 13, the extent of her reliance upon any statements made to her by the adjuster, and her subsequent acts and conduct. In our opinion it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that an estoppel against the city here appears which sufficiently excused the belated filing of the verified claim required by the statute.

The judgment is affirmed.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal by real estate brokers from that portion of an "Order Confirming Sale of Real Property" fixing brokers' commissions on a sale price of $780,000. The total commission allowed was $10,000, of which appellant's share was $5,000.00.

"Appellants contend that the Court failed to perform its judicial function to determine 'a reasonable compensation' as required by Probate Code, Section 761.5, and that Finding of Fact XIII (Clk. Tr. p. 23 that the brokers are estopped to demand a commission beyond that announced and fixed by the Court) is not supported by the evidence".

Section 761.5 of the Probate Code provides that, "Where an original bid is made by a purchaser direct to the estate and thereafter at the time of hearing the return of sale containing the original bid, an increased bid is made by a bona fide agent which results in the confirmation and sale of the property at such increased bid, the court shall allow a commission to the agent who procured the increased bid, which commission shall be fixed by the court at such amount as the court, in its discretion, finds will be a reasonable compensation for the services of the agent to the estate".

As summarized in appellants' and respondents' brief, one of the executors in the Uniack estate wrote to appellants describing "the Geraldine Tract", involved herein, listing it for sale and requesting bids, "Subject to the foregoing conditions and to the requirement that the purchaser shall deposit approximately 10 per cent of the purchase price with the offer to purchase, commission will be paid at the regular and current Los Angeles Realty Board rate only to real estate broker submitting written offer accepted by us". The current commission rate is 5 per cent.

"Appellants, licensed real estate brokers with thirty years experience, thereupon endeavored to interest one L. K. Shapiro in the property. Shapiro apparently was acting for the Western Harness Racing Association. From June 4 to September 23, 1954, * * * most of Mr. Rosenthal's (one of two partners in Central Realty Co.) time was devoted to the Geraldine Tract and adjacent properties. * * * Mr. Rosenthal did not submit a written bid during this period but he was looking to executor for his commission".

About September 13, 1954, Mr. Rosenthal telephoned the executor and was advised that an acceptable bid had been received from one Teague. On September 23, 1954, the executors notified Rosenthal that the return of sale on the Teague bid would be heard in court on October 7, 1954. During this period Rosenthal advised the executors "that he would produce a buyer in court", and was informed that such purchaser should be equipped with cashier's check and a letter of credit. The Teague bid was $430,000, with a commission of $10,750 claimed, and it is appellant's claim that this reduced commission arrangement "was unknown to him until the commencement of the hearing".

At the hearing, seventeen bids were made by various parties, "all with commission claimed, including bids by L. K. Shapiro, who designated appellants as the broker. The last bid in this series, which included none by Mr. Teague, was $496,000.00 by Mr. Shapiro". Mr. Teague then announced, "I was the original bidder. I will raise mine to $500,000 and on this bid and subsequent bids there will be a $10,000.00 commission claimed only". Thereafter there was spirited bidding by various persons without mention of commission. Mr. Teague's last bid was $650,000, and a sale of the property to

Mr. Shapiro, appellant's bidder, was by the court, "confirmed for $780,000, $10,000 commission".

It is stated in appellant's brief that "Mr. Shapiro assumed, as a minimum, that the $10,000.00 would be wholly allocated to appellants. Not a word of testimony was taken on the services of the brokers nor on the reasonableness of the compensation to them". Two weeks later, appellant's brief continues, a further hearing was held on this claim, but "The Court refused to determine any other amount, on the ground that appellants had waived and relinquished any right to further commission and were estopped to assert any claim", by reason, as stated in the trial courts Conclusions of Law, "of their silence and failure to speak or act or object to the statements made by the Court at the time of the hearing of sale", when the commission of $10,000 was confirmed. Appellants "assail such finding and assert that it has no support in the evidence".

The appellants' contention that the procedure adopted by the trial court in fixing the broker's commission was improper, cannot be sustained. A survey of the record indicates that appellants were present at the hearing of the return of sale, and "appellants make no claim that he (Mr. Rosenthal) did not hear the statements made by the parties and the Court at the hearing of October 7, 1954. He did hear those statements. It is also clear that he made no statement in open court, and he did not speak to his 'client' Mr. Shapiro during the bidding". Appellants' attempt to explain this silence by stating that "Mr. Rosenthal believed he required an attorney to participate in the proceedings", is not convincing.

The trial court announced that it would be assumed that all further bids were subject to a $10,000 commission. This statement, as said by the respondent, "specifically invited an answer or denial", and must have been so understood by every person in the court room, whether lawyer or layman. If appellants were not satisfied with the arrangement mentioned by the court, this was the time to make known any objection thereto. Cases cited by appellants furnish no support for the contentions here made.

Appellants seem to contend that by reason of previous negotiations between the executors and brokers, some sort of fiduciary relation resulted or that there was some understanding that the brokers would be compensated in accordance with prevailing rates, or at least in a "reasonable" amount; that the trial court inequitably "froze" the amount of commission without hearing, thereby defeating appellants' rightful claim. In this connection it may be noted that appellants' client had entered no bid whatever prior to the court hearing and was in no different situation than any other prospective bidder. At the hearing all bidders were given the same opportunities and were bound by the same rules.

The fixing of "a reasonable compensation" to the agent who has produced an increased bid is, by the express terms of Section 761.5 of the Probate Code, a matter within the discretion of the trial court. In the instant case, the amount of $10,000 was fixed by the court as such a reasonable amount, apparently with the full acquiescence of the various bidders present. No abuse of this discretionary power has been shown.

None of the cases cited by appellant support the claim that the trial court was required to hold a special hearing to determine "(a) What services the broker has rendered, and (b) What those services are reasonably worth". As pointed out in respondents' brief, the cases cited deal with factual situations dissimilar to that here involved. And, as hereinbefore noted, the trial court actually accorded to appellants a second hearing on October 20, 1954 at which Mr. Rosenthal was examined and cross-examined, after which the court declined to change the previous ruling as to the commission.

The findings are supported by the record and the latter discloses no reversible error.

The order is affirmed.

Littlejohn & Callister and Roy Littlejohn, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Allan L. Leonard and Iverson & Hogo-boom, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order and judgment of nonsuit.

Plaintiff brought this action against the executor of the estate of Minnie B. Hutchin, deceased, to recover on a rejected claim. He alleged that on or about April 8, 1938, Minnie B. Hutchin executed and delivered to him an instrument in writing wherein she acknowledged that for a valuable consideration she was indebted to him in the amount of $25,000 and agreed to pay such sum to plaintiff and authorized and directed her executor to pay the same to plaintiff. There was attached to the complaint a copy of a letter purportedly signed by the decedent containing the alleged promise and direction to pay.

Defendant denied the allegations of the complaint and particularly that decedent had executed or delivered to plaintiff the letter in question. Defendant also charged that the signature on the document had been obtained upon a blank piece of paper by means of fraud and concealment and without the knowledge of the decedent, or by means of fraud and fraudulent representations on the part of plaintiff.

At the trial, plaintiff, appearing in propria persona, took the witness stand in his own behalf. Counsel for defendant advised the court he would insist upon the examination proceeding by question and answer because he intended to invoke the protection of section 1880, subdivision 3,¹ Code of Civil Procedure, as to any matter occurring before the decedent's death. Thereupon the following transpired:

"Mr. Lombardi: I offer this letter from Minnie B. Hutchin which is the basis of my claim.

"Mr. Leonard: I object to the tender on the ground that there is no proof that that is the signature of Minnie B. Hutchin and we object to Mr. Lombardi's testimony in that regard and move to strike.

"The Court: That part may go out. You will have to lay your foundation for the introduction of the document.

"Mr. Lombardi: I can prove the signature by other documents.

"The Court: You will have to present evidence.

"Mr. Lombardi: I offer a report of Clark Sellers covering the examination of that document and three other documents where he reports it is her signature. May I offer this?

"Mr. Leonard: Object to it on the ground that no proper foundation has been laid and it is hearsay.

"The Court: Sustained.

"Mr. Lombardi: I don't know what to do.

"The Court: I can't tell you. I am trying the case, I am not an attorney to advise you.

"Mr. Lombardi: I don't know how to lay my foundation that it is her signature.

"The Court: You will have to proceed or not proceed, that is all. I cannot help you on that.

"Mr. Lombardi: That is all I had to offer.

"Mr. Leonard: At this time, your Honor, we move for a nonsuit on the ground of failure of proof."

The court granted the motion and judgment was accordingly entered.

The gravamen of plaintiff's appeal is that the trial judge failed to lend him any assistance in the presentation of his evidence and as a consequence he was unable to get his evidence before the court. We find no justification for a reversal.

[1] A litigant has a right to act as his own attorney, Gray v. Justice's Court, 18 Cal.App.2d 420, 63 P.2d 1160, "but, in so doing, should be restricted to the same rules of evidence and procedure as is required of those qualified to practice law before our courts; otherwise, ignorance is unjustly rewarded." Knapp v. Fleming, 127 Colo. 414, 258 P.2d 489; Monastero v. Los Angeles Transit Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 156, 160-161, 280 P.2d 187. The Supreme Court of Arizona, in Ackerman v. Southern Arizona Bank & Trust Co., 39 Ariz. 484, 7 P.2d 944, stated the principle in this language: "A layman with resources who insists upon exercising the privilege of representing himself must expect and receive the same treatment as if represented by an attorney—no different, no better, no worse." To that same effect is Biggs v. Spader, 411 Ill. 42, 103 N.E.2d 104. The fact that a layman elects to represent himself "certainly does not excuse him from a failure of proof" of his cause of action. Pete v. Henderson, 124 Cal.App.2d 487, 491, 269 P.2d 78, 80.

Applying these principles to the proceeding at hand, it is clear plaintiff received the decision to which he was entitled, namely, a nonsuit, since he did not establish any element of his case. But, he argues, the judge knew he was a layman unlearned in legal procedure and the technical rules of evidence, therefore he should have helped him out. That would have been an unjust reward for ignorance as the Supreme Court of Colorado pointed out in the Knapp case, supra. Plaintiff was not entitled "to capitalize" on his own ignorance. Monastero v. Los Angeles Transit Co., supra.

[2,3] It is the duty of a trial judge to see that a cause is not defeated by "mere inadvertence", Hellings v. Wright, 29 Cal. App. 649, 156 P. 365, or by "want of at-ed, against an executor or administrator upon a claim, or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of such deceased person."

1. Section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, reads in part: "The following persons cannot be witnesses: * * * 3. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted tention", Bare v. Parker, 51 Cal.App. 106, 196 P. 280, 281, and "to call attention to omissions in the evidence or defects in the pleadings" which are likely to result in a decision other than on the merits, Farrar v. Farrar, 41 Cal.App. 452, 182 P. 989, 991, and "within reasonable limits" by proper questions "to clearly bring out the facts so that the important functions of his office may be fairly and justly performed." In re Estate of Dupont, 60 Cal.App.2d 276, 140 P.2d 866, 873. He is not, however, required to act as counsel for a litigant in the presentation of his evidence. That is virtually what plaintiff insists the trial judge should have done for him. Claims against an estate are not easily proved where the "dead man's statute" is involved. The rules of evidence in such matters are somewhat technical, and designedly so, in order to protect estates against spurious demands. Warren v. Nair, 102 Cal.App.2d 298, 300, 227 P.2d 515. This case presented difficulty of proof for issues were made not only as to the genuineness of decedent's signature to the document in question and the manner in which it was procured but also as to the circumstances under which it was delivered to plaintiff by her, if in fact any delivery was ever made. To explain section 1880, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure, and the decisions construing it to a layman so that he could understand and apply them in the presentation of evidence in a suit on a transaction had with a deceased person, is to forget the difficulty that even some members of the legal profession have in properly presenting competent evidence to prove claims against estates in these circumstances. Such an undertaking would undoubtedly prove abortive and a waste of time. Also, it might well take from the proceeding the appearance of objectivity and impartiality which are so important to public confidence in the administration of justice. This is not a case where a few suggestions on the part of the trial judge would have solved plaintiff's difficulty. Had it been such, the trial judge would undoubtedly have followed the customary practice and offered appropriate suggestions.

Plaintiff takes the position that because the trial judge failed to assist him in the presentation of his evidence he "was unnecessarily and arbitrarily deprived of a fair and just trial on the merits of his case." The obvious answer is that he, and not the trial judge, is responsible for his present plight. If plaintiff had a legitimate claim against this estate for $25,000 it would have been an easy matter to employ competent counsel to represent him in the trial court as he has now done at this late date on appeal.

[4] Plaintiff relies on Miller v. Republic Grocery, Inc., 110 Cal.App.2d 187, 242 P.2d 396, 399. That was a suit on a promissory note. Due "to an oversight" the allegation as to the assignment of the note was omitted from the complaint. When the assignment was offered in evidence objection was made and sustained on the ground it was not within the issues. Counsel did not ask leave to amend his complaint. The nonsuit followed. Plaintiff later made a motion under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the judgment of nonsuit, to reopen the case and for permission to file an amended complaint. The motion was denied. On appeal it was held that it was an abuse of discretion to deny the motion. That was obviously a very different situation from the one at bar. In the Miller case, a suggestion by the trial judge that the complaint be amended to allege the assignment was all that was required and such a suggestion should have been made. Here, however, the trial judge is called upon to perform a dual role: (1) to assist and advise the plaintiff in the presentation of his evidence, and then (2) to pass upon its admissibility and weight. In view of the intricacies involved in the problems here presented this is an undue burden to place upon him and he should not be expected or required to assume it.

It is not necessary to consider other questions discussed in the briefs.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Crim. 5220.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 23, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 6, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of grand theft. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., in trial before jury, entered judgment, and denied motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, Acting P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction.

Judgment and sentence affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1144(13)

Upon appeal from judgment of conviction and from order denying motion for new trial, evidence would be viewed in light most favorable to the people.

2. Escrows ⇨12

Where grant in escrow is made upon condition, such grant takes effect upon performance of the conditions and upon delivery of deed by the depository to the grantee.

3. False Pretenses ⇨12

In prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses acquisition of the property is complete only upon receipt by defendant of possession and title.

4. Criminal Law ⇨149

Date of commission of offense of grand theft was date defendant obtained title to the property, and, therefore, prosecution brought within three years of recordation of deed by which defendant obtained title was not barred by statute of limitations.

5. False Pretenses ⇨49(1)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for grand theft. Pen.Code, § 1110.

6. False Pretenses ⇨22

Even if property is worth consideration paid therefore, such fact is not defense to charge of grand theft where there is substantial evidence that defendant knowingly made false representations with intent to defraud and with purpose and effect of inducing prosecuting witness to part with something of value.

7. Criminal Law ⇨417(1)

Where declaration is part of a transaction, which is fact in dispute or evidence of that fact, such declaration is evidence as part of the transaction. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1850.

8. False Pretenses ⇨6, 49(1)

Where vendors believed that they were selling their property directly to purchaser unencumbered and did not know that they had signed title over to realty broker who caused trust deed to be placed on the property, trust deed was part and parcel of a false scheme and was false token, as well as corroborating evidence sufficient to meet requirements of penal code provision requiring corroboration. Pen.Code, § 1110.

9. Criminal Law ⇨402(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, proper foundation was laid for admission of oral testimony relative to contents of letter relating to defendant's misrepresentations, in view of fact that recipient of letter testified to such receipt but stated that she did not have letter at time of trial and had searched for it in designated places at designated times.

10. False Pretenses ⇨41

In prosecution for grand theft, admission of testimony of participants in transaction which was part of scheme which defendant had devised to defraud certain person was relevant and properly admitted.

11. Criminal Law ⇨478(1)

In prosecution for grand theft of realty, admission of testimony of two witnesses as experts to value of the realty involved was not error in view of fact that such witnesses testified they had bought and sold property in the area and were familiar with the property values over a long period of time.

12. Criminal Law ⇨480

Usual expert as to value of realty is qualified by proof of his familiarity with the property and with other property in the neighborhood, his experience in the business, and his familiarity with state of market and of sales of similar property in the vicinity.

13. False Pretenses ☞11

Realty may be subject of theft just the same as personalty. Pen.Code, §§ 484, 532.

14. Criminal Law ☞829(1), 830

In prosecution for grand theft, giving of certain instructions and refusal to give other instructions requested by defendant was not error, in view of facts that jury was fully, fairly and correctly advised on each material issue and that instructions requested and refused were either covered by other instructions or were properly refused as inapplicable.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, for appellant.

McCOMB, Acting Presiding Justice.

From a judgment of guilty of grand theft after trial before a jury, defendant appeals. There are also appeals from the order denying a motion for a new trial, and "all proceedings had at the time of passing judgment and sentence."

[1] Facts:* There are two parcels of real property involved in this case. The first, which will be hereinafter referred to as "the 304 acres", consists of 304 acres of desert land near Harper's Dry Lake in San Bernardino County, owned by Mr. Asher Goodrick, who had settled on the property, drilling one well sufficient for chicken raising and domestic use, and had obtained title to it by a United States Patent in 1935.

The land was situated on the slope of a hill with a rise of 50 feet per mile. It was very sandy and without water development unsuitable for alfalfa farming. It had a market value of between $1 to $5 per acre in 1950.

The second parcel of land was a large rooming house hereinafter referred to as the "State Street property" located at 6200 State Street in Los Angeles County, owned by Mrs. Verna Harold. It had been purchased in 1949 for $15,750.

In July, 1950, Mr. and Mrs. Goodrick listed the 304 acres for sale with defendant, a licensed real estate broker, asking a price of $1,500. Defendant, unbeknown to the Goodricks, became interested in buying the property for himself and intended to put his son on the property to develop it. Defendant told Mr. Goodrick that he could not get more than $300 for it. To facilitate a deal he requested Mr. and Mrs. Goodrick to sign a paper, which they did. Mr. Goodrick had shown defendant, at his request, the 304 acres.

Thereafter, defendant told Mr. Goodrick that the deal had fallen through and purportedly returned the paper to Mr. Goodrick. In July, 1950, defendant informed the Goodricks that he had a purchaser, Mary Baker, who would pay $300, and an escrow was consummated at the Security-First National Bank, the Goodricks signing a deed to Mary Baker. Thereafter, the Goodricks received a check through the escrow for $300.

Mrs. Mary Baker, an elderly person, had previously sold some lots in Oklahoma through defendant. She then owned no property except a small interest in a plastics concern in which she worked as a bookkeeper. She was a person of limited means. Defendant contacted Mrs. Baker in July, 1950, and informed her that he had a deal she could profit by. He told her that he had for sale 304 acres of perfectly flat desert land worth $200 an acre; that he had seen the land and a Vice President of Richfield Oil Company owned the land next to it and paid $200 an acre for it; that this land was producing alfalfa; that he thought he could get the 304 acres for her for $200 down plus the expense of escrow of about $100; that there was a deed of trust in the sum of $15,000 that had to be cared for. Mrs. Baker told defendant she did not have any money and could not pay the trust deed. Defendant then told Mrs. Baker that he had two men in his office who wanted to lease the land and plant it to alfalfa, and he assured her these men would lease it as soon as she bought it, and that the rental on the land would more than pay off the trust deed.

* The evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to the people (respondent) pursuant to the rules set forth in People v.

Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 265, 269 [2], 108 P.2d 732 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).

Defendant took Mrs. Baker to the escrow department of the Security-First National Bank, where she signed a note to Lulu Brockman for $15,000, payable $5,000 in 3 years, $5,000 in 5 years and $5,000 in 7 years. She also signed a trust deed to Lulu Brockman to secure the note against the 304 acres and paid $300 in cash. Lulu Brockman was the mother-in-law of defendant.

In 1949, Keith Harold, the son of Mrs. Verna Harold, bought the State Street property through defendant for $15,750, and in the fall of 1949 bought another house and lot through defendant who then promised to sell the State Street property without commission, and thereafter brought prospective purchasers to look at the property. Verna Harold paid off certain encumbrances on the State Street property and Keith Harold deeded this property to his mother with the understanding that when it was sold Mrs. Harold would be reimbursed with interest, and the balance of the proceeds would go to Keith Harold. Mrs. Opal Glover, the sister of Verna Harold, occupied the State Street property with Keith. They had also three roomers as tenants.

In August, 1950, defendant proposed an exchange of the $15,000 note and trust deed on the 304 desert acres, plus $500 cash, for the State Street property. Keith told defendant that his mother had the largest interest in the property and it was in her name, and that he would have to convey anything that defendant said to his mother to see whether she considered it satisfactory or not.

Defendant represented to Keith Harold that he had an old lady who had a trust deed on some alfalfa land (that is, the 304 acres) in San Bernardino, whom he thought might be interested in trading the land for the State Street property and would give in addition $500 cash; that Mary Baker, the maker of the note (which was secured by the trust deed) owned the alfalfa ranch very close to the 304 acres, and Mary Baker also owned several apartment houses, was an executive and part owner of a plastics concern, that with two sons-in-law she intended setting up in business to grow alfalfa seed on the 304 acres, and that the first payment was made payable in three years so that they might have time to raise at least one crop before the first installment became due; that Lulu Brockman was a widow and no longer had the ability to farm the land and therefore decided to sell it; that the land was worth $75 an acre, at least $50 an acre; that it had been farmed; that it was cleared, had two good wells on it, was perfectly level, and it had what he thought was a perfect slope for irrigation; and that the country all about it grew alfalfa. He also reported that Mary Baker had substantial assets.

Keith Harold wrote to his mother in effect repeating these representations to her. Verna Harold replied by letter to her son. Pursuant to this letter, Keith Harold told defendant that his mother advised that if everything defendant had said was true, and if the deal looked all right to him it would be all right to put it in escrow.

The escrow was opened accordingly. Mrs. Verna Harold received by mail a deed which she signed, conveying the State Street property to Lulu Brockman. The deed was mailed to the escrow agent. Defendant paid $500 and produced into escrow an assignment of the note and trust deed on the 304 acres from Lulu Brockman to Verna Harold. On September 19, 1950, the deed was forwarded by the escrow agent to the Title Insurance and Trust Company, and it was directed to comply with escrow instructions to obtain insured titles and to record both deeds simultaneously.

On or shortly prior to October 2, 1950, the titles to the two properties were insured and the escrow agent ordered the recording of the instruments, which were recorded October 3, 1950. Keith Harold and his aunt moved out of the State Street property about October 12, 1950, and delivered the keys to defendant.

Thereafter, the State Street property was transferred from Lulu Brockman to Mary Pugh, the daughter of defendant, who obtained a $6,500 loan upon it on November 9, 1950. Ultimately $10,000 of the proceeds of the sale of the property found its way into the bank account of defendant.

In July, 1953, Mrs. Verna Harold sent the note and trust deed on the 304 acres to a bank in Los Angeles for collection. Thereafter Keith Harold was contacted by an attorney for Mary Baker and went to defendant. Keith Harold told defendant of the facts he had learned and asked just who Lulu Brockman was. Defendant said, "I am Lulu Brockman."

Mary Baker was not aware that the 304 acres were unencumbered, that is, that the note and deed to Lulu Brockman were a new note and trust deed. Neither Keith Harold nor Mary Baker had seen the property prior to their entering the transactions relating to the 304 acres and the note and trust deed above described.

Questions: First: Was the prosecution of the present action barred by the statute of limitations?

[2-4] No. Defendant urges that the three-year statute of limitations barred the prosecution of the present action, stating that the date (September 12, 1950) when Mrs. Verna B. Harold signed the deed transferring the State Street property to Lulu Brockman, with the intent to transfer the property, was the date the alleged offense occurred. Such date is not controlling. The deed was recorded October 3, 1950, less than three years from the date of the filing of the information (September 29, 1953). The escrow officer acknowledged that this recording was in the course of the transaction pursuant to the instructions. In other words, the transaction was not deemed completed until recordation of the deed. Possession of the property was not in fact surrendered to defendant until subsequent to that date.

It is settled that where a grant in escrow is made upon conditions, such grant takes effect upon the performance of the conditions and upon delivery of the deed by the depository to the grantee. (In re Reed, 204 Cal. 119, 123, 266 P. 948; Watts v. Mohr, 86 Cal.App.2d 256, 262 [3], 194 P.2d 758.) The foregoing rules considered in connection with the rule that in a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, the acquisition of the property is complete only upon possession and title being received by the defendant (People v. Pillsbury, 59 Cal.App.2d 107, 111 [1], 138 P.2d 320; cf. People v. Fawver, 29 Cal. App.Supp.2d 775, 779, 77 P.2d 325), makes it clear that the date of the commission of the offense was not prior to October 3, 1950, the date defendant obtained title to the property. Therefore the present proceeding was not barred by the statute of limitations.

Second: Was there substantial evidence to support the judgment of guilty?

[5] Yes. (1) Defendant contends that Mrs. Harold got just what she bargained for, a trust deed note and some cash in exchange for the State Street property. This is not the fact.

The record discloses that she was defrauded by defendant who made representations to her son knowing that such representations were false and would be transmitted to Mrs. Harold and acted upon by her. Among other material misrepresentations made by defendant was the one that the maker of the note, Mary Baker, was a woman of means, and that the 304 acres which secured the trust deed was alfalfa land. By such representations Mrs. Harold was induced to part with the State Street property which had been purchased the year before for more than $15,000 and in return she received a note and trust deed secured by property worth no more than $1,500, and the maker of the note and trustor lacked financial assets sufficient to meet the obligation which she had assumed.

[6] Even if property is worth the consideration paid therefor, this is not a defense where there is substantial evidence, as in the present case, that defendant knowingly made false representations with the intent to defraud and with the purpose and effect of inducing the prosecuting witness to part with something of value. (People v. Raines, 66 Cal.App.2d 960, 962, 153 P.2d 424.)

People v. Tufts, 167 Cal. 266, 139 P. 78, relied on by defendant, is not here controlling. In such case it was held that a husband's untrue representation that he had power of attorney from his wife to transfer certain notes was immaterial if the transfer would be valid without the power of attorney. Such is clearly not the case here.

Testimony of defense witnesses also relied upon by defendant which was contradicted by prosecution witnesses must, of course, be disregarded on appeal. (See People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 700 [28], 251 P.2d 401.)

(2) Defendant urges that there is no proof of false representation to Mrs. Verna Harold; that any alleged representation to her son was not transferable to her so as to constitute a false representation within the meaning of the statute; that her son was not the agent of defendant but was the agent of Mrs. Harold and therefore defendant was not bound by any letter from the son to his mother purportedly relaying defendant's representations.

This is contrary to the evidence. Keith Harold testified that defendant made certain representations to him respecting the purported trade; that he told defendant his mother had the largest interest in the State Street property and he would have to convey defendant's statements to his mother; that he subsequently told defendant he had conveyed defendant's statements to his mother and the latter had advised him that if everything was as defendant represented he should proceed with the escrow, and thereafter defendant initiated the escrow.

[7] This evidence as to defendant making the representations to Keith Harold and his conveying the representations to his mother was proper, and falls within the rule that where a declaration is part of a transaction, which is the fact in dispute or evidence of that fact, such declaration is evidence as part of the transaction. (Airola v. Gorham, 56 Cal.App.2d 42, 50 et seq., 133 P.2d 78; Code of Civ.Proc. sec. 1850.) The rule is aptly stated in 22 Am. Jur. (1939) 458 as follows:

"* * * The rule is, moreover, that it is not necessary that the false representations be made to the person defrauded in order to convict one of obtaining money or property by false pretenses. A false representation to an agent or clerk has been held a false pretense to the principal. Likewise, one may be guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses where he makes his representations by means of an advertisement directed to the general public. * * *" (See also People v. Green, 22 Cal.App. 45, 50, 133 P. 334.)

(3) Defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient for lack of corroboration under Penal Code, section 1110, providing that in a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses defendant cannot be convicted unless the false pretense was expressed in language accompanied by a false token or writing, or, among other things, that the pretense be proven by the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness and corroborating circumstances.

This argument is devoid of merit. The People's evidence showed that the 304 acres were unencumbered when owned by the Goodricks; that as far as the Goodricks were concerned the 304 acres were being sold by them to Mary Baker for the total consideration of $300. As far as Mary Baker was concerned, however, she was buying this property for a consideration of $15,300. The property was represented to her by defendant as being encumbered when in fact it had not been.

Defendant maintained that the Goodricks sold this property to him, and that he caused the trust deed to be placed on the property, with Lulu Brockman (his mother-in-law) as his nominee.

[8] The Goodricks' testimony was contrary to this. They testified in substance that they believed they were selling their property directly to Mary Baker unencumbered. They were not aware they had signed title over to defendant and that defendant caused a trust deed to be placed on the property. Accordingly, in light of this evidence, the trust deed was part and parcel of a false scheme.

People v. Wynn, 44 Cal.App.2d 723, 728 et seq., 112 P.2d 979, is here applicable. In such case conditional sales contracts and chattel mortgages served to carry out the false pretense that the security was bona fide, and, as in that case, we here hold that the trust deed was a false token as well as a corroborating circumstance sufficient to meet the requirements of section 1110 of the Penal Code.

In addition, there was direct testimony of two witnesses as to defendant's representations which also meet the requirements of the Penal Code, section 1110.

[9] Third: Was a proper foundation laid for the admission of oral testimony relative to the contents of the letter from Keith Harold to his mother relaying defendant's misrepresentations?

Yes. Verna B. Harold testified that she received the letter; that she did not have the letter at the time of trial; that she had searched for it and could not find it; that she did not recall what she had done with it after she had showed it to her husband; that she looked for the letter in September, 1953, both at home and in her safety deposit box at the bank where she kept papers relating to the transaction in question. Clearly this was sufficient foundation for the admission of oral testimony predicated upon the finding of the trial court that the written document itself had been lost.

Fourth: Did the trial court err in admitting testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Goodrick and of Mary Baker?

[10] No. Defendant contends that such testimony was irrelevant. It was relevant to the transaction with Keith Harold as showing part of the scheme which defendant had devised for the purpose of defrauding Mrs. Harold. (See People v. Eddards, 25 Cal.App. 660, 664 et seq., 145 P. 173.)

There was likewise no error in permitting Mr. Goodrick to testify as to what he thought the 304 acres were worth on August 8, 1950, since he then was the owner of the property and had been for a number of years. Therefore his opinion as to its value was proper. (People v. La Macchia, 41 Cal.2d 738, 746 [11], 264 P.2d 15.)

[11, 12] Neither is there any merit in defendant's contention that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Mr. De Flon and Mr. Depue as experts as to the value of the 304 acres. Each testified they had bought and sold property in the area and were familiar with the property values over a long period of time. Their qualifications fell within the rule stated by the Supreme Court in People v. La Macchia, supra, 41 Cal.2d 746 [10], 264 P.2d 21, as follows:

"The usual expert is qualified by proof of his familiarity with the property and with other property in the neighborhood, his experience in the business, his familiarity with the state of the market and of sales of similar property in the vicinity * *"

Fifth: Is real estate a subject of theft?

[13] Defendant contends that Penal Code, sections 484 and 532 are inherently unconstitutional and not applicable to real property, relying upon People v. Cummings (1896), 114 Cal. 437, 46 P. 284. After the decision in People v. Cummings, our Supreme Court in People v. Rabe (1927), 202 Cal. 409, 416, 261 P. 303, held that, in view of the subsequent amendment of the statute (sec. 532) to include real property the holding in People v. Cummings, supra, no longer states the law, and that real property may be the subject of theft just the same as personal property. (Cf. People v. Roland, 134 Cal.App. 675, 680 et seq., 26 P.2d 517; People v. Hiden, 102 Cal.App.2d 655, 659 [2], 228 P.2d 95.)

Sixth: Did the trial court err in (a) giving certain instructions, and (b) refusing to give other instructions requested by defendant?

[14] No. An examination of the record shows that the trial judge fully, fairly and correctly advised the jury on each and every material issue, and that the instructions requested by defendant and refused were either covered by the instructions read by the trial judge to the jury or were properly refused as inapplicable to the present case. (People v. Gardner, 128 Cal.App.2d 1, 8 [15], 74 P.2d 908 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).)

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial and "all proceedings had at the time of passing judgment and sentence" are, and each is, affirmed.

John CALDWELL and John Caldwell, as guardian ad litem for Johnnie Leroy Caldwell, a minor, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Frank Joseph GELDREICH, Ardell Hynes, et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5085.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Nov. 17, 1955.

Guardian's action on behalf of minor and himself against motorist for minor's personal injuries. After jury verdict for motorist, the Superior Court of Riverside County, Hilton H. McCabe, J., entered an order purporting to grant a new trial and motorist appealed. On appeal guardian moved to augment record. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that affidavit of guardian's attorney that he had searched his files and could not find copy of notice of entry of judgment was insufficient to show that affidavit of mailing of such notice was false, and order purporting to grant new trial entered more than 60 days subsequent to mailing of notice of entry of judgment, was invalid.

Reversed and motion to augment record denied.

1. Judgment $\Rightarrow$ 276

Affidavit of attorney for defeated party that he had searched his files and could not find copy of notice of entry of judgment and could not remember receiving same, would not support a finding that prevailing party's affidavit of mailing of notice of entry of judgment was false or fraudulent. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1012, 1013.

2. Notice $\Rightarrow$ 14

Where service of notice is made by mailing same to party's attorney, burden is not upon sender to show that notice was actually received by addressee. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1012, 1013.

3. Notice $\Rightarrow$ 10

Service of notice and papers through mail, where authorized by statute, is termed substituted service and is intended to take the place of and be equivalent in point of law and service to a personal service. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1012, 1013.

4. New Trial $\Rightarrow$ 116(2)

Under statute providing that power of the court to pass upon motions for new trial shall expire 60 days from and after service on moving party of written notice of entry of judgment, service of such notice upon attorney by mail was completed when deposit of same was made in the post office. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 12a, 660, 1012, 1013.

5. Attorney and Client $\Rightarrow$ 29

If name of attorney was signed to written notice of entry of judgment by an associate in his office, it must be presumed that the associate was authorized to do so.

6. Attorney and Client $\Rightarrow$ 29

Where attorney for defeated parties secured stipulation extending time to file affidavits to support his motion for new trial by procuring associate of attorney for prevailing party to sign attorney's name to stipulation, defeated party was estopped from claiming that prior written notice of entry of judgment signed in the name of attorney for prevailing party by associate, was invalid. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 660.

7. New Trial $\Rightarrow$ 116(2)

Where order purporting to grant new trial was entered more than 60 days after written notice of entry of judgment addressed to moving party was deposited in the mail, order was invalid. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 12a, 660, 1012, 1013, 1013a, 1963, subd. 1.

John L. Roberts, Riverside, for appellants.

Harmon C. Brown, Riverside, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiff and respondent John Caldwell, individually and as guardian for his minor son Johnnie Leroy Caldwell, brought this action against defendants and appellants for claimed injury to them as a result of the collision of the son's bicycle with the defendants' automobile. Trial was had by jury resulting in a verdict for defendants. The series of events that followed were these:

On July 13, 1954, judgment for defendants was entered. Written notice of its entry was served on plaintiffs by mailing a copy thereof to plaintiffs' counsel in Riverside on July 26, 1954, according to an affidavit filed on July 27th. On August 4th, plaintiffs filed notice of intention to move for a new trial. On August 16th, the trial judge signed an order fixing September 17th as the time for hearing the motion. The motion was heard. On October 6, more than 60 days after the written notice of entry of judgment was served and more than 60 days after notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed, the trial court signed an order granting a new trial, but did not include insufficiency of the evidence as one of the grounds. The showing made by the affidavits in support of this motion indicated that there was additional or newly discovered evidence which plaintiff failed to produce at the trial.

Except as otherwise provided in section 12a of the Code of Civil Procedure, under section 660 thereof the power of the court to pass on a motion for new trial expires sixty days from and after service on the moving party of written notice of entry of the judgment, or if such notice has not theretofore been served, then sixty days after filing of the notice of intention to move for a new trial. If such motion is not determined within said period of sixty days, or within said period as thus extended, the effect shall be a denial of the motion without further order of the court.

Apparently, from the present state of the record on appeal, the order attempting to grant a new trial, at the time here indicated, was beyond the court's jurisdiction and ineffective. Dolan v. Superior Court, 47 Cal.App. 235, 190 P. 469; Schomer v. R. L. Craig Co., 137 Cal.App. 620, 31 P.2d 396.

Confronted with this dilemma plaintiffs have belatedly, after the submission of the case on appeal, moved this court to have the record augmented, asked that certain portions of it be expunged, and to substitute a claimed minute entry of the trial court granting the motion for new trial on October 4, 1954, in order to establish the trial court's right to grant the new trial. The request is that they be allowed to present to this court, upon affidavit or otherwise, their claim that in fact no notice of entry of judgment was received by or on behalf of the plaintiffs. They also aver that the notice mailed, in any event was defective in form, etc., and consequently the time for determination of the motion was sixty days from the date of filing the notice of motion for such new trial. For this claimed reason they seek to expunge from the record the notice of entry of judgment and affidavit of mailing contained in the clerk's supplemental transcript.

There is positive showing by affidavit of defendants that notice of entry of judgment was mailed to counsel for plaintiffs on July 26, 1954. The effect of plaintiffs' counsel's affidavit is that he searched the files of his office and found no notice of entry of judgment in the above-entitled case therein, and to the best of his knowledge and belief no such notice was ever received by him; that he made no inspection of the files in the county clerk's office and had no knowledge of the claimed service until he was served with a copy of such notice and affidavit of mailing to be used in a supplemental transcript on appeal in May, 1955. He alleged that after arguing the motion for new trial on October 1st, he received a card from the clerk of the court through the mail post-marked "October 4, 1954—5:30 p. m." reciting: "Caldwell v. Geldreich—Motion for New Trial—Motion granted"; that thereupon he prepared and forwarded to the court for signature a formal order granting the new trial, and that the judge, instead of dating it October 4th, dated it October 6th, and signed it on that date; that due to illness and press of business he did not seek an early hearing on the motion for new trial. He did obtain from defendants' counsel a stipulation extending time to file affidavits in support of the motion for new trial.

[1-3] Assuming that the motion here pending was granted by us, we would be immediately confronted with two opposing affidavits. We would necessarily be inclined to believe that such a notice was in fact mailed to counsel for plaintiff as indicated therein. Since counsel for plaintiffs stated in his affidavit that he did not have a memory of receiving such a notice, it might be suggested that the notice was lost in the mail or misplaced in his office and was not brought to his attention. These facts alone would not support a finding that defendants' affidavit of mailing was false or fraudulent. McKeon v. Sambrano, 200 Cal. 739, 255 P. 178. It does not appear from a reading of sections 1012 and 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the burden is upon the sender to show that the notice was actually received by the addressee. In Traders Credit Corporation v. Superior Court, 111 Cal.App. 663, 666, 296 P. 99, it was held that where service is made by mail, in cases permitted by these sections, such service is declared to be complete at the time of the deposit in the post office of the sender in a sealed envelop addressed to the person upon whom it is to be served. In that case they cited Heinlen v. Heilbron, 94 Cal. 636, 30 P. 8, to the effect that the service by mail authorized by section 1012, supra, does not contemplate a delivery as a part of the service, as seen by the provision of section 1013 that "The service is complete at the time of the deposit" in the post office. Such service is termed a "substituted service", and is intended to take the place of and be equivalent in point of law and service to a personal service. In McKeon v. Sambrano, supra, service by mail was held to be complete at the time of the deposit in the post office, and the addressee incurs the risk of the failure of the mail. To the same effect is Gill v. Southern Pacific Co., 174 Cal. 84, 161 P. 1153; In re Estate of Richards, 154 Cal. 478, 98 P. 528; and Brown v. Green, 65 Cal. 221, 3 P. 811.

[4] Labarthe v. McRae, 35 Cal.App.2d 734, 97 P.2d 251, is distinguishable because a different section of the code, 659 C.C.P., was there under consideration. That section provides that the ten-day period within which to move for a new trial should not start to run until "after receiving" the written notice of entry of judgment. Section 660, supra, contains no such provision but provides that the power of the court "to pass on motion for a new trial shall expire sixty (60) days from and after service on the moving party of written notice of the entry of the judgment * * *." Under the above-cited decisions the service of notice of decision was complete when the deposit was made in the post office.

Upon the showing made and considering the delay in seeking the relief here indicated, the motion to vacate the submission and strike the affidavit and notice of entry of judgment filed in the action should be denied.

[5, 6] There is an added claim that the notice of entry of judgment filed with the affidavit of mailing was a copy and not an original and that this copy was signed "John L. Roberts", as attorney for defendants, when in fact the name John L. Roberts was signed by attorney Byron C. Morton, who was associated with attorney Roberts in his office and in said case, while said attorney Roberts was on vacation.

The claim is that attorney Morton lacked authority to sign said notice of entry of judgment and accordingly he was not the attorney of record in the case. It is contended that the notice was therefore a nullity, citing such authority as Jansson v. National Steamship Co., 34 Cal.App. 483, 486, 168 P. 151. We see no merit to this point. The typewritten record shows the name of John L. Roberts appended to the notice. If it was signed by attorney Morton it must be presumed he was authorized to do so. Section 1963, subd. 1, C.C.P. At least counsel for plaintiffs should be estopped to deny his authority so to do because he secured a stipulation (signed in a similar fashion) to file affidavits in support of his motion for new trial after the time required by law to file them from attorney Morton, in the absence of attorney Roberts. This stipulation was filed in said action and plaintiffs relied upon it. Wells Fargo & Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 25 Cal.2d 37, 42, 152 P.2d 625; 10 Cal.Jur. p. 611, sec. 2.

The record before us does not indicate that the notice of entry of judgment filed with the clerk of the court was a copy rather than the original, as contended by plaintiffs. However, this claim, if true, would not necessarily be fatal. Section 1013a of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that proof of service by mail may be made by affidavit affixed to the original, or to a true copy of the document served and filed in the cause. Plaintiffs filed their notice of intention to move for a new trial within the time required, and the time for hearing the motion was set well within the 60-day period.

[7] Under the record before us it must be held that the time within which the trial court had to pass upon the motion for a new trial expired 60 days after the service of the notice of entry of judgment and that the notice was sufficient in form. It therefore becomes unnecessary to determine the advisability of allowing plaintiffs to show that there may have been some minute entry of the clerk of the court granting the motion for a new trial on October 4, 1954, since that claimed minute order was made more than 60 days after service of notice of entry of judgment.

The motion to vacate the order of submission of this cause, to strike portions of the record, and to augment it, is denied. The purported order granting a new trial is reversed.

Nash, San Francisco, a corporation,
Appellant.
Civ. 16384.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 16, 1955.

Action against automobile dealer, arising out of collision of a truck with an automobile recently purchased for a plaintiff from the dealer. In Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Orla St. Clair, J., a verdict was rendered in favor of the dealer and it appealed from an order granting a new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the trial court had properly given an instruction on assumption of risk and erred prejudicially in granting a new trial upon the sole ground that it should not have given such instruction.

Order reversed.

I. Appeal and Error ⇐977(3)

New Trial ⇐6

Granting of new trial is a matter resting largely in discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed except upon a manifest abuse.

2. Automobiles ⇨16

In action arising out of collision of truck with automobile recently purchased from defendant dealer, if there was evidence that dealer had violated statutes requiring test of brakes and lights before sale, then court erred in giving instruction on assumption of risk, but if there was no evidence of violation then instruction was properly given. Vehicle Code, § 660.

3. Automobiles ⇨16

Even if automobile dealer failed to adjust brakes after being requested by buyer to do so, such fact did not in itself prevent application of doctrine of assumption of risk. Vehicle Code, § 660.

4. Automobiles ⇨16

Statute providing that dealer shall not sell new or used motor vehicle without first testing and if necessary adjusting lights and brakes to conform with code and regulations does not require dealer to inspect brake system for defects (except as they might affect stopping of automobile), but merely to test and adjust brakes to conform with Vehicle Code. Vehicle Code, §§ 660, 670.

5. Automobiles ⇨16

If automobile dealer violated statute requiring test, and, if necessary, adjustment of brakes and lights before sale of automobile, then defense of assumption of risk was not available to the dealer. Vehicle Code, § 660.

6. Automobiles ⇨16

In action arising out of collision of truck with recently purchased automobile, burden of showing that defendant dealer violated statute requiring test of brakes and lights before sale of automobile, evidence of which violation would make defense of assumption of risk unavailable to dealer, was upon plaintiffs. Vehicle Code, § 660.

7. Automobiles ⇨16

In action arising out of collision of truck with recently purchased automobile, evidence failed to establish defendant dealer's violation of statute requiring test of brakes and lights before sale, and hence there was no reason based on such statute why instruction as to assumption of risk should not have been given. Vehicle Code, § 660.

8. Automobiles ⇨16

Where plaintiff knew that his brakes caused skidding, it was question for jury, in his action against automobile dealer who sold the automobile, whether plaintiff assumed the hazard of the danger. Vehicle Code, § 660.

9. Negligence ⇨105, 136(26)

An objective standard must be applied in determining whether a plaintiff had knowledge and appreciation of his risk which he has allegedly assumed, and his knowledge and appreciation of danger is ordinarily a question for the jury.

10. Automobiles ⇨16

In action arising out of collision of truck and automobile recently purchased from defendant, on evidence that defendant by his salesman had told plaintiff that the brakes had been inspected and had been checked and were o. k. the time they had been brought in before, it was jury question whether statement made by salesman was an assurance of safety or a promise of protection, so it was not improper for trial court to give instruction on assumption of risk. Vehicle Code, § 660.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨1072 New Trial ⇨39

Where instruction on assumption of risk was properly given in civil negligence case, trial court's granting of new trial on sole ground that it should not have given such instruction was error requiring reversal of order granting new trial.

MacInnis, Alaga & Glassman, Harry P. Glassman, San Francisco, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant Nash, San Francisco, a corporation,¹ appeals from an order granting a new trial after verdict in its favor.

Question Presented.

Was the new trial improperly granted, being based upon the trial court's assumption that it erred in giving an instruction on the doctrine of assumption of risk? The application of the doctrine depends upon whether there was evidence of one or more of the following matters: (a) violation of section 660, Vehicle Code; (b) knowledge by plaintiffs of the hazard; (c) assurance by defendant of condition of brakes.

Record.

The theory of the complaint was that the brakes were faulty, that defendant before sale of the car had failed to comply with section 660 and thereafter had failed, although requested, to adjust the faulty brakes, and that the faulty brakes were the proximate cause of the accident. The jury found in defendant's favor. The court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new trial "on the authority of Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., 38 Cal.2d 409, at page 430 [218 P.2d 17]."²

Evidence.

At 5:30 p. m. December 27, 1951, on U. S. 40 near Truckee, the auto driven by plaintiff Joe and occupied by his wife and six children, collided with a truck, injuring all occupants. Plaintiff Joe testified that the accident was caused by failure of his brakes and the resultant skid on the ice and snow when the car was shifted quickly to a lower gear. The car was purchased from defendant. Although the car functioned perfectly at first, plaintiff Joe became dissatisfied with the brakes; they were "spongy," very sensitive, so about a week or so after purchase he had Paul take it to the defendant for checking, and for oil changing.³ On taking it out the manager told him he had checked the brakes and they were all right. Defendant's evidence showed that the car had only been in the shop once for servicing (December 24th) and there was no record of complaint concerning brakes. Plaintiff Joe testified he brought the car in the day of the accident, December 27th, for the 1000 mile check and service and complained about the brakes. On being told that the shop would not be able to service the car until very late that day, he left and started on the fatal journey. After the accident the car was examined in a San Francisco garage and it was found that fluid was in the brake system and there was a spongy brake pedal. A mechanic testified that in his opinion there was a leak in the brake "junction block," which leak could cause the brakes to fail. An expert testified that "air in the lines" causes a spongy brake.

Assumption of Risk.

(a) Violation of section 660.

[1-3] The granting of a new trial is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed except upon a manifest abuse. Sloboden v. Time Oil Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 557, 281 P.2d 85. Here the court granted the new trial on the basis of the decision in Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., 35 Cal.2d 409, 430, 218 P.2d 17, where the court held that where a defendant violates an ordinance which is a police regulation and which violation causes a plaintiff injury, the doctrine of assumption of risk may not be applied. See also Friedman v. Pacific Outdoor Adv. Co., 74 Cal.App.2d 946, 170 P.2d 67, and Bickham v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 120 Cal.App.2d 815, 263 P.2d 32. Here the court instructed on assumption of risk, and granted the new trial on the ground that it erred in so doing because of the claimed violation of section 660. If there is evidence of such violation, then the assumption of risk instruction should not have been given and the new trial was properly granted. But if there is no evidence of such

1. Defendant Nash-Kelvinator Sales Corp. was granted a nonsuit. No appeal was taken therefrom.

2. Should be 35 Cal.2d 409, 430, 218 P.2d 17.

3. Although purchased by plaintiff Joe's brother Paul, and title taken in his name, it was purchased for the exclusive use of plaintiff Joe.

violation then the instruction was properly given. See Conner v. Southern Pacific Co., 38 Cal.2d 633, 637, 241 P.2d 535, 538, to the effect that where instructions are correct there is no basis on a motion for new trial for the exercise of the court's discretion, and no legal ground in that respect on which a new trial may be granted. "The inquiry as to whether instructions are erroneous presents purely a question of law [citation] and if it appears on appeal that a trial court in granting a new trial based its order exclusively upon an erroneous concept of legal principles applicable to the cause, its order will be reversed [citation]." There was no error of law, and as the new trial was granted solely on the assumed error, the new trial was improperly granted.⁴

[4-7] What evidence is there that defendant did not make the tests required by section 660? That section provides: "No dealer shall sell a new or used motor vehicle without first testing and if necessary adjusting the lights and brakes on such vehicle to conform with the provisions of this code and department regulations adopted pursuant to this code unless such vehicle is sold for the purpose of being wrecked or dismantled." It should be pointed out that there is nothing in the statute which requires the dealer, prior to sale and delivery of a car, to inspect the brake system for defects (other than as they might affect the stopping of the car), but merely to test and adjust the brakes to conform with the provisions of the Vehicle Code. The special provision on this subject was section 670, which prescribed the stopping distances under various conditions. Defendant's vice-president testified that it was customary and standard practice of his agency to inspect a car before delivery, checking against a factory form the matters which he detailed, which included inspection of certain details of the brake condition, and it was standard procedure to "road check" every car which included checking the brakes. While he did not know of his own knowledge that stopping distances were checked, he assumed they would be. The burden of showing that this test was not made was on plaintiffs. There was no direct evidence that the test was not made. Plaintiffs rely primarily on the fact that some 20 days after delivery and after the car had been driven approximately 1200 miles, the brakes failed, and there was testimony based upon examination of the car after the accident from which the jury might have concluded that there had been some defect in the brake system. There was no testimony that the testing required by section 660 would have disclosed this defect. We are not considering whether defendant, in failing to make such an inspection, might not have been negligent. We are only concerned here with the question of whether defendant may have violated section 660, which violation would have denied it the defense of assumption of risk. According to plaintiff Joe's own testimony he "guessed" the car functioned perfectly when delivered to him, the sponginess developing subsequently. The car at all times prior to the moment of the accident would stop on the first application of the brakes without pumping; plaintiff Joe had no difficulty in stopping the car at any time; the day of the accident he had full brake. There is no evidence that at any time prior to the accident, the brakes would not stop the car within the distances prescribed by section 670. There was no evidence of the violation of section 660, and hence no reason based on that section why the assumption of risk instruction should not have been given.

(b) Knowledge.

"The defense of assumption of risk rests upon the plaintiff's consent to relieve the defendant of an obligation of conduct toward him, and to take his chances of harm from a particular risk. Such consent may be found: * * *

"b. By implication from the conduct of the parties. When the plaintiff enters

4. We are not concerned here with the claimed failure of defendant to adjust the brakes after being requested to do so, if such request was made. As to that contention, the defense of assumption of risk would apply.

voluntarily into a relation or situation involving obvious danger, he may be taken to assume the risk, and to relieve the defendant of responsibility. Such implied assumption of risk requires knowledge and appreciation of the risk, and a voluntary choice to encounter it." Prosser on Torts, 2d Ed., p. 303.

The testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses as to the car's condition after the accident indicated that the leak in the brake junction block was caused by a metal particle and that such a leak, by letting air in the hydraulic system, could cause the brakes to fail. There was no testimony that such condition must have existed at the time of the purchase of the car or that it could have been discovered by making the stopping distance tests required by section 670. Although the car seemed to be in good condition at first, shortly after delivery of the car Joe discovered that the brake pedals were spongy and the brakes on application were sensitive, locking the wheels and causing the wheels to skid. He testified that he knew there was air in the brakes. While, of course, plaintiff Joe would not know what was causing this condition, he did know of the condition and he knew it on the very day that the accident happened. In spite of the knowledge that the brakes when applied on occasion caused a locking of the wheels and a skidding of the car, he drove it on a mountain road upon which there was ice and snow.

[8,9] In Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, at page 162, 265 P.2d 904, at page 906, the court said: "Where the facts are such that the plaintiff must have had knowledge of the hazard, the situation is equivalent to actual knowledge, and there may be an assumption of the risk, but where it merely appears that he should or could have discovered the danger by the exercise of ordinary care, the defense is contributory negligence and not assumption of risk." Here plaintiff Joe knew that his brakes caused skidding. Thus it was for the jury to determine whether he assumed the hazard of that danger. As said in Prosser on Torts, 2d Ed., p. 310, concerning both assumption of risk and contributory negligence: "At the same time, it is evident that in all such cases an objective standard must be applied, and that the plaintiff cannot be heard to say that he did not comprehend a risk which must have been obvious to him. * * * In the usual case, his knowledge and appreciation of the danger will be a question for the jury * * *."

There was, therefore, ample evidence from which the jury could (and probably did) conclude plaintiff Joe had knowledge of the hazard and assumed the risk.

(c) Assurance.

[10] Plaintiff Joe testified that the morning of the accident he took the car in. He wanted the 1000 mile check up and the brakes examined and checked. Defendant's salesman told him that nothing could be done that day until very late, and that the brakes "had been inspected and had been checked, and were o.k. * * * the time they had been brought in before." Because of this statement, plaintiffs claim the assumption of risk doctrine could not apply, basing their contention on the following language from Prosser on Torts (Hornbook Series 1941) quoted but not commented on in Fred Harvey Corporation v. Mateas, 9 Cir., 1948, 170 F.2d 612, 616: "If, however, he (plaintiff) surrenders his better judgment upon an assurance of safety or a promise of protection, he does not assume the risk, unless the danger is so obvious and so extreme that there can be no reasonable reliance upon the assurance." It was a jury question whether the statement made by the salesman here was an "assurance of safety or a promise of protection." According to his own testimony, plaintiff knew that the brakes, in spite of the salesman's statement, were not "o.k." They were "spongy" and on occasion would cause skidding.

[11] The instruction on assumption of risk was properly given.⁵ Therefore, the trial court erred in granting a new trial upon the sole ground that it should not have given that instruction.

5. No contention is made that the form of the instruction was improper.

Civ. 8675.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Nov. 17, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Action by grantors against grantees and subsequent bona fide purchaser to quiet title to real property or to reform a deed to grantees on the ground of fraud or mistake. The Superior Court, Madera County, Stanley Murray, J., entered judgment quieting title in purchaser and grantors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where grantors have conveyed realty to grantees who subsequently conveyed the same to a bona fide purchaser for value, and original grantors with knowledge of second conveyance commenced an action against grantees and purchaser to reform original deed on ground that it described more property than was intended, and recorded lis pendens before deed of bona fide purchaser was recorded, statute voiding every conveyance as against any judgment affecting title unless conveyance is recorded before notice of action, did not defeat title of bona fide purchaser.

Affirmed in part and reversed with directions.

1. Deeds ⇨211(2, 3)

In grantors' action against grantees and subsequent bona fide purchaser for value, evidence presented a prima facie case for reformation or rescission of deed from grantors to grantees on the ground of misrepresentation and/or mistake.

2. Judgment ⇨788(1)

Primary purpose of statute voiding every conveyance of real property as against any judgment affecting title, unless such conveyance shall have been duly recorded prior to record of notice of action, is to protect those who in good faith acquire an interest in real property in reliance upon the record. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1214.

3. Judgment ⇨788(1)

Where grantors conveyed realty to grantees who subsequently conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for value, and original grantors with knowledge of second conveyance commenced an action against original grantees and bona fide purchaser to quiet title or reform original deed on ground that it described more property than was intended, and recorded a lis pendens before bona fide purchaser's deed was recorded, statute voiding every conveyance as against any judgment affecting title unless conveyance is recorded before record of notice of action, did not defeat right of bona fide purchaser. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 738; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1214.

4. Judgment ⇨788(1)

Under statute voiding every conveyance as against any judgment affecting title, unless conveyance shall have been recorded prior to record of notice of action, such unrecorded conveyance will be subordinated to a judgment cutting down or voiding title which grantor in unrecorded conveyance purported to convey, but statute has no application to a judgment creating a new title in the judgment holder which before judgment he did not have, or which merely adjudicates a good title which he received after the unrecorded conveyance. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1214.

5. Vendor and Purchaser Ⓒ244

In grantors' action against original grantees and subsequent grantee to reform deed, evidence supported finding that second grantee was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

6. Appeal and Error Ⓒ117(6)

Where grantors brought action against grantees and subsequent purchaser for value to quiet title to real property or to reform a deed on ground of fraud or mistake, and their right to judgment quieting title was precluded because of intervening right of subsequent purchaser for value, but complaint alleged false and fraudulent representations by original grantees and there was evidence to support these allegations, case would be remanded for determination of issues as to alleged fraudulent representations, even though complaint did not specifically pray for damages for such representations. SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiffs above named commenced an action to quiet title to certain real property or to reform a certain deed, dated November 26, 1951, conveying said real property to defendants Gough and Sharp. The amended complaint set forth two causes of action, the first being the usual quiet title action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The second cause of action alleged ownership and possession on November 26, 1951, of certain real property described as Lots 17 and 18, 21 through 24, inclusive, and 25, excepting from the last a triangular portion of the northwest corner and a rectangular portion in the northeast corner, El Torres Addition, County of Madera, per map on file in the Official Records of Madera County. It further alleged that on said date plaintiffs orally agreed with defendants Gough and Sharp that plaintiffs would sell and said defendants buy for $800 Lot 25, with the above exceptions and the further exception of a portion of land lying between the above exceptions, hereinafter called the Sandoval parcel; it further alleged defendants Gough and Sharp prepared a deed which conveyed all the aforesaid real property owned by plaintiffs, and falsely represented to them it conveyed only that portion of Lot 25 orally agreed upon to be sold and conveyed, and that plaintiffs relied on such representations and were thereby induced to sign such deed; and it also alleged that on said date plaintiffs did execute and deliver to said defendants such deed. It was further alleged in this cause of action that plaintiffs first discovered the mistake in the deed on or about the 27th of April, 1952, and thereupon they immediately demanded correction of the mistake or rescission with an offer of restoration of consideration received, but said defendants refused this demand. It was also alleged on information and belief that defendant Preciado after delivery of the aforesaid deed had made a conveyance of said real property to defendant Security Title Insurance & Guarantee Company by trust deed, with defendants Gough and Sharp as beneficiaries.

The answers of the several defendants, in general, admitted the former ownership of plaintiffs of said real property but denied any present ownership or interest therein by them, alleged the conveyance by plaintiffs for $800 consideration paid, denied the allegations of misrepresentation and mistake and plaintiffs' offer to rescind and restore the consideration paid, and alleged a subsequent conveyance to defendant Preciado as a bona fide purchaser for value without any notice of any prior claims.

Following a trial, the court found that on the 26th of November, 1951, plaintiffs were the owners of the real property as alleged in their complaint, excepting further from Lot 25 the Sandoval parcel (title to which was in a separate action quieted in Sandoval, et ux, against all parties herein); that on said date plaintiffs executed and delivered a deed to said real property to defendants Gough and Sharp for consideration of $800 paid; that on or about the 13th of December, 1951, and prior to commencement of this suit or recording of lis pendens herein, said defendants, for a valuable consideration, conveyed said property to defendant Preciado and the latter took same as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of any defect, fraud, or mistake in the conveyance from plaintiffs to defendants Gough and Sharp and without any knowledge to put him on notice.

The findings then stated further that because of the aforesaid findings it was unnecessary to make any findings concerning the allegations of fraud, mistake, etc., in the complaint. The court concluded that defendant Preciado took title to the real property by the deed of December 31, 1951, as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, and any defect in the prior conveyance from plaintiffs could render the earlier deed voidable only if rights thereunder were exercised prior to the intervention of rights of third persons purchasing for value without any notice of fraud, etc.

In accordance with said findings, judgment quieting title to said real property was entered in favor of defendants Preciado and plaintiffs have appealed from said judgment.

Appellants make no contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings that defendants Preciado were bona fide purchasers for value, but appellants do contend most earnestly that under section 1214 of the Civil Code said defendants could not become bona fide purchasers because the deed to defendant Henry Preciado was recorded subsequent to the time of recording the lis pendens in the instant action. Said section 1214 provides as follows:

"Every conveyance of real property, other than a lease for a term not exceeding one year, is void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the same property, or any part thereof, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded, and as against any judgment affecting the title, unless such conveyance shall have been duly recorded prior to the record of notice of action."

The record shows lis pendens in this action was recorded on the 12th of May, 1952, the date of commencement of the action. Gough and Sharp conveyed to Preciado by deed dated December 13, 1951, and this deed was not recorded until May 22, 1952. The deed of trust from Preciado to Security Title Insurance & Guarantee Company was dated December 13, 1951, and recorded the same date. The evidence indicates that plaintiffs spoke and read little or no English and had no advice or help outside their own immediate family, and that Gough and Sharp took the initiative generally, i. e., opened negotiations, had the deed prepared, obtained the notary, transported plaintiffs to the notary, etc. It further indicates that plaintiff Jose Torrez showed Gough and Sharp where Lot 25, which was the parcel for sale, lay on the ground, that they all walked around it and looked at it, but that communications at that time were all by pantomime as Torrez did not speak English and they did not speak Spanish. There was no dispute in the record that Gough and Sharp sold the land actually conveyed in the deed to Preciado for about $4,000, or about five times the price paid to plaintiffs for it. Several unrecorded contracts of sale of various portions of the land in dispute were shown to have been executed by plaintiffs some time prior to the deed to defendants. A contract of sale of the Sandoval parcel, which as noted before was part of the land actually conveyed by plaintiffs to Gough and Sharp, and then to Preciado, was dated August 5, 1949, and was apparently recorded August 10, 1949, although the record is not explicit on that. The record does show that the deed from appellants to defendants Gough and Sharp was recorded on November 27, 1951, in Volume 532 of Official Records, and the Sandoval contract was recorded in Volume 472, and so it may be assumed that the date of recording the Sandoval contract was prior to the Torrez deed recording and so prior to any deed to Preciado.

[1] It is apparent that the evidence makes a prima facie case for reformation or rescission of the deed from appellants to Gough and Sharp on the ground of misrepresentation and/or mistake, but the primary question with which we are confronted upon this appeal is: When a grantor brings suit to set aside or reform his conveyance to his grantee after the latter has conveyed to a third party for value without notice, and grantor knows of this second conveyance, but grantor records his notice of lis pendens prior to the recording of the second conveyance, and both grantee and the third party are joined as defendants, is the second conveyance void as against judgment affecting title obtained by grantor based on his rights to set aside or reform his prior conveyance?

Appellants cite a number of authorities in support of their contention. They first cite the case of Moore v. Schneider, 196 Cal. 380, 238 P. 81, in which the court had occasion to consider the amendment to Civil Code, section 1214. Sophie Schneider had been granted certain real property by William Schneider, her husband, without giving value therefor, by a recorded deed. Subsequently, a conveyance of the property was made by William Schneider and one Miller to Moore as assignee for benefit of creditors, but this conveyance was not recorded. Sophie sued William and filed a notice of lis pendens, and judgment quieting title in her and against him was entered. Moore then sued Sophie to have his equitable interest in the property established. The trial court held that the judgment in the prior quiet title action was not a bar to the subsequent suit brought by Moore. Upon appeal the judgment was reversed and in the course of its opinion our Supreme Court said, 196 Cal. at pages 390, 392, 238 P. at page 84:

"Section 1214 of the Civil Code, supra, was amended in 1895, by adding thereto the provision that every conveyance of real property is void 'as against any judgment affecting the title, unless such conveyance shall have been duly recorded prior to the record of notice of action.' Stats.1895, p. 50. The context indicates very clearly that the added portion, defining the effect of judgments obtained after record of notice of action, is unrelated to subsequent purchasers, questions of good faith, valuable consideration, or those who have notice. For this reason, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the authorities cited by respondent which hold that section 1214, supra, and section 1217, supra, should be construed together. [Citing cases.] They deal with situations which do not arise under the provision of section 1214 applicable to the facts in this case. Cases, such as Warnock v. Harlow, 96 Cal. 298, 31 P. 166, 31 Am.St.Rep. [200] 209, decided before section 1214, supra, was amended in 1895, are not in point on the question here under consideration.

"The particular language of the New York statute, that the holder of an unrecorded title or incumbrance is 'bound by the proceedings to the same extent as if he was a party to the action,' has led the courts of that state to suggest that the rule might not have the same application in cases where a plaintiff has actual notice of the unrecorded incumbrance at the time of the commencement of the action. Kursheedt v. Union Dime Sav. Institution, supra [118 N.Y. 358, 23 N.E. 473, 7 L.R.A. 229]; Lamont v. Cheshire, 65 N.Y. 30. The California statute has made the rule more stringent in its application than it is in New York, by declaring that a conveyance which is not of record when the lis pendens is filed is 'void' as against the judgment affecting the title to the property. The provision was added to section 1214 in 1895, long after section 1217, providing that an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties and those who have notice thereof, based on an older enactment (Stats.1850, p. 249), was incorporated in our present Code. It was enacted by the Legislature, we may assume, to stimulate and bring about the prompt recordation of all conveyances of real property. Its purpose is to prevent fraud through the withholding of notice of transactions affecting titles, to the detriment of subsequent purchasers in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and those who may seek to confirm their claims to real property by judgments affecting the title. It constitutes a most salutary rule. Whether or not it should apply in a case in which a prior grantee is not made a party to the action, or in which it appears that a plaintiff has actual knowledge or notice of the unrecorded claim of title at the time of the commencement of the action, we are not prepared to say. Neither situation is presented here. The findings do not support the contention of the respondents that Mrs. Schneider knew of the assignment to respondent Moore when she brought her action to quiet title. There is nothing in the findings to show that she took with notice of his claim. We are satisfied that the contention of the appellant is the correct one, and that the judgment rendered in the quiet-title action is a bar to the present action."

Appellants also cite the case of Holman v. Toten, 54 Cal.App.2d 309, 128 P.2d 808, in which plaintiff failed to record a lis pendens. The court said, 54 Cal.App.2d at page 317, 128 P.2d at page 812:

"The provision of section 1214 of the Civil Code making a conveyance of real property void 'as against any judgment affecting the title, unless such conveyance shall have been duly recorded prior to the record of notice of action' is not operative here. It is limited by its terms to cases where a notice of action is recorded (see Moore v. Schneider, 1925, 196 Cal. 380, 392, 238 P. 81; Taylor v. Chapman, 1936, 17 Cal.App. 2d 31, 61 P.2d 476) and the record here does not show the recording of such a notice by defendant. Hence the case remains subject to the rule that 'An unrecorded deed takes precedence over a subsequent judgment against the grantor.' Davis v. Perry, 1932, 120 Cal.App. 670, 676, 8 P.2d 514, 517."

Appellants place their principal reliance upon the recent case of Evarts v. Jones, 127 Cal.App.2d 623, 274 P.2d 185, which was decided since the instant case was tried, and in which a hearing was denied. In that case respondent Jones had contracted to sell certain real property to E. F. Evarts. On September 15, 1950, Jones brought a quiet title action against E. F. Evarts and recorded lis pendens. Judgment was entered for Jones February 20, 1952. Appellant E. K. Evarts had taken a deed to this real property from E. F. Evarts on January 1, 1950; it was acknowledged April 14, 1952; and it was recorded April 15, 1952. E. K. Evarts then brought this action to quiet title. The trial court held that the judgment in the earlier action of Jones v. E. F. Evarts was res adjudicata as to the title of Evarts and gave judgment in favor of Jones. Upon appeal the court said, 127 Cal.App.2d at page 625, 274 P.2d at page 187:

"* * * Although Section 1214 is not mentioned in the briefs, it furnishes an answer to the question.

"Prior to 1895, judgments were not mentioned in the section. In that year the portion in italics was added. Before the amendment one who obtained a judgment quieting his title in an action instituted subsequent to the acquisition of an earlier hostile conveyance was not protected as a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer. Unless his judgment ran against the holder of the earlier conveyance, it would not have been binding upon the latter. The purpose of the amendment, of course, was to afford a means for strengthening titles to real property. The effect was to encourage the recordation of instruments affecting title and thereby give greater protection to those who in all matters concerning title might rely upon the public records. The amended section is comprehensive. It relates to all conveyances whether made before or after the recording of a notice of the action. If it had not been the intention to make it applicable to prior conveyances, there would have been little if any necessity for the amendment."

An interesting case in which the effect of said section 1214 was considered is the case of Taylor v. Chapman, 17 Cal.App.2d 31, 61 P.2d 476. In that case Miss Taylor had purchased two lots for the price of $3,800, receiving her deeds in 1929 and 1930. These deeds were not recorded until April 30, 1934. The lots were unimproved and there were no buildings upon them. She inadvertently failed to pay two lighting assessments amounting to the sum of $6.24. The defendant claimed to have purchased these two lots at a tax sale for the delinquent assessments and to have received deeds from the city. On February 8, 1934, the defendant filed an action to quiet title against the grantor of Miss Taylor, and recorded a notice of lis pendens. At this time the defendant was unaware of the unrecorded conveyance; he did not join Miss Taylor as a defendant, nor did she intervene in his action. Shortly thereafter, the defendant became aware of Miss Taylor's title and communicated with her. On May 12, 1934, Miss Taylor commenced action to quiet her title against the defendant. On May 24, 1934, the defendant obtained a consent judgment in his action against Miss Taylor's grantor. He defended in the action brought by Miss Taylor solely on the grounds of his judgment in the prior action and did not introduce his tax deeds into the record. He claimed that Miss Taylor's deeds were void under section 1214, as against his judgment "affecting title," since they were not recorded "prior to the record of notice of action"; or, in other words, that the plaintiff's unrecorded deeds became ipso facto void when the notice of lis pendens was recorded in an action which subsequently resulted in a judgment quieting title. In affirming a judgment in favor of Miss Taylor the court refused to give a literal interpretation to section 1214 and stated at page 35 of 17 Cal.App.2d, at page 478 of 61 P.2d:

"The appellants' interpretation of section 1214, if accepted, would lead to strange results which might often constitute a travesty on justice. Suppose, for instance, that the appellants had taken a quitclaim deed from some one who had owned these lots fifty years before, although there had been a dozen intervening owners, and had brought a quiet title action against that grantor who, consenting to judgment, had obviated the necessity of any real proof. By filing a lis pendens ahead of the deed of a bona fide purchaser a judgment thus obtained would render void the title of the real owner, without any hearing as to his rights and regardless of any lack of equities in the other claim. Again, a man purchasing a property for cash and recording his deed within an hour might find that he had no title because some one was sharp enough to file notice of lis pendens, a few moments before, in an action to quiet title against a fictitious owner. The case at bar furnishes another illustration which speaks for itself.

"We are unable to believe that it was the intention of the Legislature to make section 1214 applicable to such a situation as that here presented, where the grantee in the unrecorded conveyance was not a party to the action referred to in the notice of lis pendens, and where the party securing the judgment obtained any rights he has through a tax sale, and not through the affirmative acts of the grantee in the unrecorded conveyance or of any of his predecessors." (A hearing was denied by the Supreme Court.)

We do not believe that the authorities relied upon by appellants compel the construction of said section 1214 that appellants have placed upon it. In Moore v. Schneider, supra, the court declined to pass upon the question of whether section 1214 would apply where a prior grantee was not made a party to the action, or where it appeared that a plaintiff had actual knowledge of the unrecorded claim of title at the time of the commencement of the action. And in Evarts v. Jones, supra, the title of defendant was clearly superior to that of plaintiff and it was unnecessary to rely upon section 1214, and, as stated by the court, said section was not even mentioned in the briefs on appeal. We believe that the case of Taylor v. Chapman, supra, bears a closer analogy on the facts to the instant case than do Moore v. Schneider or Evarts v. Jones.

[2, 3] It was no doubt the primary purpose of section 1214, and of the 1895 amendment thereof relating to judgments affecting the title, to protect those who in good faith acquire an interest in real property in reliance upon the record. But where, as in the instant case, a person has by deed conveyed certain real property to another, and his said grantee has conveyed said property to a bona fide purchaser for value, and the original grantor, with knowledge of the conveyance to said second grantee, commences an action against his grantees and the grantees of his grantees seeking to reform his deed upon the ground that it described more property than was intended to be conveyed, and records a lis pendens before the deed to the second grantee is recorded, we do not believe that section 1214 will avail the original grantor to defeat the right of the bona fide purchaser.

The portion of section 1214 upon which appellants rely reads:

"Every conveyance of real property * * * is void as against * * * any judgment affecting the title, unless such conveyance shall have been duly recorded prior to the record of notice of action."

[4] This means no more than that such unrecorded conveyance will be subordinate to a judgment affecting, i. e., cutting down or voiding, the title which the grantor in the unrecorded conveyance purported to convey. It has no application to a judgment which creates a new title in the judgment holder which before judgment he did not have; or which merely adjudicates good a title which he got after the unrecorded conveyance.

In the instant case the appellants had no title to the parcel they want reconveyed to them because conveyed away by fraud or mistake. They had a right to compel such reconveyance by suit and judgment. But such title as such reconveyance would give them could not stand against or affect the title which the defendant had conveyed out because they would take by it only what defendant then had—nothing, unless they are to be classed as being themselves bona fide purchasers, which cannot be so here since before getting any title, before even recording lis pendens, they knew of respondents' interest. Under the facts here the only relief they could get by their action was by way of damages against their alleged fraudulent grantees.

[5, 6] We therefore conclude that there is substantial support in the record for the finding that defendants Preciado were bona fide purchasers and that in so far as the judgment quiets the title of said defendants Preciado to said real property it must be affirmed. However, as hereinbefore set forth, the complaint alleged false and fraudulent representations by defendants Gough and Sharp as a result of which appellants Torrez conveyed more property than was orally agreed upon. There was evidence which supported these allegations and when the court determined that defendants Preciado, to whom defendants Gough and Sharp had conveyed the real property deeded to them by appellants, were bona fide purchasers, we believe that the court should have proceeded to determine the issues as to said alleged fraudulent representations. While the complaint did not specifically pray for damages for said alleged fraudulent representations, it did include a prayer for general relief and therefore the court could and should have proceeded to a determination of said remaining issues.

The judgment is affirmed in so far as it quiets the title of defendants Preciado to the property described therein, but in so far as it fails to determine the remaining issues hereinbefore set forth it is reversed with directions to the trial court to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

137 Cal.App.2d 125

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Donna
Norine SCHUSTER, Deceased.

Daniel D. SCHUSTER, Leonora G. Caldwell,
George S. Tuttle, Petitioners and Respondents,

v.

John B. SCHUSTER, Louise Schuster Greer,
Contestants and Appellants.

Civ. 21173.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

Proceeding to determine heirship and construe will. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., entered judgment, and contestants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that, under will which, after disposing of certain realty and personalty stated that rest of testatrix' effects were given to testatrix' mother to "distribute as she deems wisest," such disposition was intended by testatrix to be a bequest of the residuary estate, rather than disposition of other purely personal items not specially bequeathed.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Wills ⇨587(1)

Under will which, after disposing of certain realty and personalty stated that rest of testatrix' effects were given to testatrix' mother to "distribute as she deems wisest," such disposition was intended by testatrix to be a bequest of the residuary estate, rather than disposition of other purely personal items not specially bequeathed.

2. Wills ⇨439

In interpretation of will, ascertainment of testator's intention is fundamental rule of construction to which all others are subordinate.

3. Wills ⇨440

In ascertaining testator's intention, court naturally first looks to language used in the will.

4. Wills ⇨559

Primary meaning of "effects" is personalty, but it is a very general term and may include realty where that appears to be testator's intent, and whether it includes realty depends upon context of will in which term is used and the surrounding circumstances.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Effects".

5. Wills ⇨458

Word or phrase which occurs more than once in a will is presumed always to be used in the same sense, but such rule is not applicable where context clearly manifests an entirely different meaning.

6. Wills ⇨449

In absence of controlling language in will to the contrary, it is presumed that testator intends to dispose of all his property.

7. Wills ⇨449

In construing will, trial court properly took into consideration the presumption against partial intestacy.

8. Wills ⇨858(1)

Where testatrix expressed intention to leave her property "to my loved ones," and then proceeded to enumerate them, leaving something to each of the named relatives, and ended her will by bequeathing "Any and all the rest" of her property to her mother, her estate would go to such of her "loved ones" as were mentioned in her will and as were still alive and none would go by intestacy to others.

9. Wills ⇨601(8), 612(4), 675, 689

Where last clause of will read, "Any and all the rest of my effects I give to my mother to distribute as she deems wisest", such language did not create a trust or power of appointment, did not limit outright and absolute character of gift, and did not require finding that testatrix did not intend that all her undisposed property should not be included in such residuary clause.

10. WILLS Ⓒ706

Where trial court's construction of will appears to be reasonable and consistent with testatrix' intent, reviewing court will not substitute a different interpretation, even though it might seem equally tenable.

George Bouchard, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Daniel W. Gage, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOX, Justice.

Decedent left a will, which she wrote, that reads as follows:

"August 31, 1929
 "2672 Glendower Ave.
 "Los Angeles, Calif.

"This is my one and only will in existence. Being of sound health and mind, but wishing to bequeath my effects in case of my death, to my loved ones, I hereby give to my Mother—Nora D. S. Danford—my house and lot at 2672 Glendower Ave. Los Angeles, my lot on West Third Street near the corner of Fairfax Ave. L. A. and any cash I may have at the time of my death.

"I hereby give to my sister—Helena K. S. Tuttle of Ontario Calif. my cottage and lot at Laguna Beach, Calif., and any pictures she may desire of my painting. I give to my niece—Leonora G. Tuttle my diamond and pearl ring and any pictures she may desire of mine. I give to my nephew George S. Tuttle—my turquois and diamond ring and any pictures he may desire of mine. I give to my brother Daniel D. Schuster of Milwaukee Wis.—my two diamond stone ring. Any and all the rest of my effects I give to my mother to distribute as she deems wisest.

"Signed—Donna Norine Schuster
 Aug 31, 1929 Los Angeles, Calif."

[1] The basic question is, considering the entire will of Miss Schuster, was the last sentence thereof, "Any and all the rest of my effects I give to my mother to distribute as she deems wisest," intended to be a bequest of the residuary estate, rather than a disposition of clothing, furniture, paintings and other purely personal items not specifically bequeathed? The trial court answered this question in the affirmative. We have reached the conclusion that the decision is correct.

At the time of her demise, Miss Schuster left surviving the following heirs at law:

(1) Daniel D. Schuster—a full brother;

(2) George S. Tuttle and Leonora G. [Tuttle] Caldwell, a nephew and niece, respectively, children of Helena K. S. Tuttle, who was a full sister of decedent and who predeceased her;

(3) Louise Greer, a half sister;

(4) John B. Schuster, a half brother.

The decedent, Daniel D. Schuster, and Helena K. S. Tuttle, are the children of George Schuster and his first wife, Nora D. S. Danford; Louise Greer and John B. Schuster are the children of George Schuster by his second wife.

Both George Schuster and Nora D. S. Danford predeceased their daughter, Donna Norine Schuster.

Prior to her passing Miss Schuster had sold the lot, mentioned in her will, on West Third Street. She still owned the other two pieces of real property. She had $7,438.45 in the bank. She also had certain of the jewelry and pictures specifically bequeathed. Since making her will in 1929 she had accumulated stocks valued at $11,684 and postal savings certificates amounting to $1,527. At the time of her passing there was salary due her from the Los Angeles Board of Education amounting to $216. Her furniture in the Laguna Beach property was valued at $80 and her two cars were appraised at $60. There is also in the estate the proceeds of insurance resulting from a fire which destroyed the major portion of the house on Glendower Avenue (and most of the furniture) where Miss Schuster lived. She perished in this fire. She also had some additional jewelry valued at $165.

Under the trial court's decision Miss Schuster's estate goes to her brother, and to her nephew and niece,—children of her deceased sister. This appeal is taken by her half brother and half sister.

[2,3] In the interpretation of a will, ascertainment of the testator's intention is the fundamental rule of construction, to which all others are subordinate. In re Estate of Salmonski, 38 Cal.2d 199, 209, 238 P.2d 966; In re Estate of Lawrence, 17 Cal.2d 1, 6, 108 P.2d 893; In re Estate of Klewer, 124 Cal.App.2d 219, 221, 268 P.2d 544, 41 A.L.R.2d 941; Probate Code, § 101. In ascertaining such intention we naturally first look to the language used in the will. Here, at the very outset, Miss Schuster expressed an intention to dispose of her property by the will she was writing for she said she wished to bequeath her "effects" in case of her death to her loved ones, whom she proceeded to name. The first-mentioned of her "effects" was undoubtedly her most cherished piece of property, her home. She gave that to her mother. The second item of her "effects" was a lot she then owned on West Third Street in Los Angeles. She gave that to her mother, too. The third item of her "effects" to be disposed of was "any cash I may have at the time of my death." That also went to her mother. The second paragraph of her will opens with a gift to her sister of the fourth item of her "effects," a cottage at Laguna Beach. This is coupled with a gift of any of her pictures her sister may desire. Then follow gifts of jewelry and "desired pictures" to her niece and nephew, and a gift of a diamond ring to her brother. In the final sentence of this paragraph she said: "Any and all the rest of my effects I give to my Mother to distribute as she deems wisest." It thus appears that in the first sentence of her will the testatrix used the same expression, "my effects," that she used in the concluding sentence.

[4] While the primary meaning of "effects" is personal property, it is a very general term and may include real property where that appears to be the intent of the testator. Whether it includes the latter class of property depends on the context of the will and the surrounding circumstances. Annotation 80 A.L.R. 941.

[5] When Miss Schuster first used the expression "my effects" she obviously intended it in a broad sense—to include all her property,—for in the same sentence she proceeded to dispose of two pieces of real property and whatever cash she might have at the time of her death, and in the very next sentence she gave her sister her "cottage and lot at Laguna Beach" and any of her paintings her sister might desire. When she used the same expression, "my effects," in the concluding sentence of her will it is a reasonable inference that she intended to use it in the same sense in which she had previously used it, for "a word or phrase occurring more than once in a will is presumed always to be used in the same sense." Comstock v. Corwin, 111 Cal.App.2d 770, 772, 245 P.2d 654, 656; In re Estate of Vogt, 154 Cal. 508, 511, 98 P. 265. Of course, "this rule is not applicable where the context clearly manifests an entirely different meaning", Comstock v. Corwin, supra, but a reading of this two-paragraph, holographic will does not disclose any indication that the testatrix used the expression—"my effects" in different senses. The trial court, therefore, was justified in concluding that in the use of the words "my effects" in the last sentence of her will the testatrix did not intend, as appellants argue, to include merely her clothing, furniture, paintings and other purely personal items not specifically bequeathed but, in fact, intended to dispose of her remaining property regardless of its character. That the testatrix intended to include all her undisposed of property is clearly indicated by the comprehensive language she used, viz.: "Any and all the rest of my effects * * *" (Emphasis added.)

[6,7] There is a presumption that a testator intends to dispose of all of his property in the absence of controlling language in the will to the contrary. In re Estate of Akeley, 35 Cal.2d 26, 28-29, 215 P.2d 921, 17 A.L.R.2d 647; In re Estate of

O'Brien, 74 Cal.App.2d 405, 408, 168 P.2d 432. In construing the will it was proper for the trial court to take this presumption against partial intestacy into consideration. In re Estate of Akeley, supra; In re Estate of Lawrence, supra.

[8] Also, the testatrix expressed an intention to leave her property "to my loved ones." She then proceeded to enumerate them, leaving something to each of the named relatives and ending her will by bequeathing "Any and all the rest" of her property to her mother. It is significant that the appellants are not mentioned. The interpretation placed on the final sentence gives full effect to the expressed intention of the testatrix. Her estate thus goes to such of her "loved ones," whom she mentioned in her will, as are still alive and none of it goes by intestacy to others.

[9] There is some argument as to the character of the estate that passed under the residuary clause. The trial court took the view, as stated in its findings, that the last sentence of the will "constitutes an outright gift of the entire residue of the estate." This conclusion finds adequate support in the language the testatrix used " * * * I give to my mother * * * " But it is argued the concluding words "to distribute as she deems wisest" in some way limit the unconditional character of the gift. Such language clearly does not create a trust or a power of appointment, because none of the elements of a trust or power of appointment, namely, an expressed intention, a beneficiary, or a purpose, are present. (Civil Code, § 2221.) In re Estate of Cook, 58 Cal.App.2d 376, 136 P.2d 338, is apposite here. In that case the testatrix stated in her will that she gave all of her effects to Ethel, but on her death would like to have her brother and sister get a certain amount. The court stated, 58 Cal.App.2d at page 378, 136 P.2d at page 339, quoting from In re Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 671, 61 P. 964, 64 P. 1071, that "While the desire of a testator for the disposition of his estate will be construed as a command when addressed to his executor, it will not when addressed to his legatee be construed as a limitation upon the estate or interest which he has given to him in absolute terms." The words, "I give to my mother" are positive and absolute. The language that follows is simply the daughter's way of emphasizing the idea that her mother was free to dispose of such property in whatever way she desired or thought best. Had a lawyer drafted this will he might well have advised that such language was unnecessary but it is understandable that a daughter, speaking to her mother in her last will, might desire to elaborate on this point so that her mother would feel no restraint in any disposition she might consider making of any portion of the residuary estate. In any event, this language does not limit the outright and absolute character of the gift, nor does it require a finding that the testatrix did not intend that all her undisposed of property should not be included in this residuary clause.

Appellants argue that the arrangement of the will indicates that the testatrix intended to dispose only of purely personal items by the last clause. They say that in the ordinary will a testator disposes first of his personal effects, such as clothing and jewelry, and then his more substantial assets, such as stocks and real estate. Under these circumstances, they argue, a residuary clause which has the effect of bequeathing a relatively large portion of the decedent's estate follows naturally. Miss Schuster's will reverses this order of disposition in that she first disposes of her real property and cash before she mentions her jewelry and paintings. From this "reverse order" appellants contend that the testatrix intended by the last clause of her will to dispose of items not previously disposed of such as her remaining paintings and other purely personal possessions not previously mentioned in her will.

Appellants' approach, however, overlooks the fact that this will was written by the testatrix herself. She started out dealing with the things and persons that meant most to her—her home and her mother. Obviously the desire uppermost in her mind was that her mother should have her most prized possession, viz., her home. She then gave her mother her vacant lot and whatever cash she might have upon her passing. It is thus clear that the testatrix was interested in giving her mother the major portion of her property. Miss Schuster then gave her Laguna Beach cottage to her sister together with such of her paintings as her sister might want. Following these very substantial gifts she bequeathed items of jewelry and pictures to her niece and nephew and to her brother. Then appears the final sentence by which she gave "Any and all the rest of" her effects to her mother. In view of the relationship, and the testatrix' first consideration for her mother and desire to adequately provide for her, it is reasonable and natural she should intend that any property other than that which she had specifically willed should go to her mother. Certainly such an inference is more reasonable than one by which a substantial portion of her property would pass by intestacy to heirs at law whom she did not mention as being among her "loved ones." Thus the inference that appellants would draw from the arrangement of the will is largely, if not entirely, dissipated. Certainly the trial court was not required to draw such an inference. In fact, the arrangement reasonably justifies an inference in support of the trial court's construction of the will.

Appellants also argue that the specific bequests to the mother of the testatrix in the first paragraph of the will negates a residuary bequest to her of assets other than purely personal effects. This does not necessarily follow, particularly when the relationship and the mother's situation are considered. This will was made in 1929. The mother and father had been divorced 30 years previously. The mother had married Mr. Danford, who had passed away eight years before the testatrix made her will. While the mother's age does not appear, it is obvious that she was well along in years. Considering her mother's age and widowhood, it is a reasonable inference that the daughter desired her mother to have all her property except that which she specifically bequeathed to her brother, sister, niece and nephew. Certainly the trial court was justified in drawing such an inference in view of her mother's situation rather than a contrary inference, and, of course, we must indulge such reasonable inferences as will support the trial court's conclusion.

What we have just pointed out serves to answer appellants' further proposition that the failure of the testatrix to make any other provision for the disposition of the purely personal effects indicates that the residuary clause was intended to dispose only of such items. To sustain appellants' position would result in a considerable amount of her property passing by intestacy. This, of course, is contrary to the presumption against intestacy. In re Estate of Akeley, supra. Furthermore, appellants' position is too legalistic and not sufficiently realistic in view of the mother-daughter relationship, the mother's circumstances, and the daughter's obvious desire to provide for her.

Appellants also argue that "the nature of the items bequeathed in the second paragraph indicate an intent to limit the scope of the last clause to purely personal items." They rely on the "ejusdem generis" rule which, they point out, simply limits the scope of an ambiguous term by the context in which it is used. They then argue that since the word "effects" is used in connection with the disposition of personal paintings and jewelry of relatively small value it must logically follow that by the use of this word only purely personal items not elsewhere disposed of are included in the residuary clause. The complete answer to this contention is found in the instrument itself. It is twofold: First, as we have previously noted, the word "effects" appears in the initial sentence of the will where the testatrix gave to her mother her home, her lot on Third Street and whatever cash she had at the time of her death. It is thus unmistakably clear that she uses the term in a very broad sense—to include all her assets. Then there is the inference that she used the word in the same sense when she used it again in the residuary clause. In re Estate of Vogt, 154 Cal. 508, 511, 98 P. 265; Comstock v. Corwin, 111 Cal.App.2d 770, 772, 245 P.2d 645. The second phase of the answer lies in the character of the property disposed of "in the second paragraph" of the will to which appellants refer. It will be noted that the first item disposed of in that paragraph is the decedent's "cottage and lot at Laguna Beach." Thus the "second paragraph" disposes of both real and personal property. The "ejusdem generis" rule, therefore, does not appear to support appellants' conclusion.

Appellants rely on In re Estate of Sorensen, 46 Cal.App.2d 35, 115 P.2d 241, and a quotation therein from Barney v. May, 135 Minn. 299, 160 N.W. 790, in support of an argument that the language the testatrix here used should not include after-acquired stocks, her claim for unpaid salary and insurance resulting from the fire. There is absent here, however, a very significant word. In the Sorensen case the expression by the testatrix was "personal effects." The court there held that this language did not encompass a "large residue of money and securities." The holding was obviously correct for such items would hardly be classed as "personal" effects. The absence of such qualification of the word "effects" renders the decision valueless in the instant matter.

[10] The construction of this will by the trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the testatrix. In such circumstances a reviewing court will not substitute a different interpretation though it may seem equally tenable. In re Estate of Sullivan, 86 Cal.App.2d 890, 894, 195 P.2d 894; Comstock v. Corwin, supra, 111 Cal.App.2d at page 773, 245 P.2d 645; In re Estate of Lewis, 91 Cal.App.2d 322, 325, 204 P.2d 898; In re Estate of Bourn, 25 Cal.App.2d 590, 600, 78 P.2d 193; In re Estate of Halsell, 133 Cal.App.2d 665, 284 P.2d 821.

Ann Margaret Leemhuis, Appellant,
Civ. 21098.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

'Action by decedent's sons against decedent's wife and others involving question whether decedent's assignment of his 102 shares in family corporation, amounting to 40% of stock, to himself and his wife in joint tenancy was concomitant with agreement that sons should be owners of such shares after wife had enjoyed life estate in them. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., decreed that wife held the 102 shares as trustee for sons, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that wife held title of shares in trust for benefit of sons.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trusts $\S$ 44(2)

In action by decedent's sons against decedent's wife involving question whether decedent's assignment of his 102 shares in family corporation, amounting to 40% of stock, to himself and his wife in joint tenancy was concomitant with agreement that sons should be owners of such shares after wife had enjoyed life estate in them, evidence established that wife held title of corporate shares in trust for benefit of sons.

D. Chase Rich, Los Angeles, for appellant.

LeSage & Bowman, Pasadena, by Thomas W. LeSage, Pasadena, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The judgment herein decrees that defendant, Ann Margaret Leemhuis, by certificate 33 holds 102 shares of the capital stock of Airfloor Company of California, Inc., as trustee for plaintiffs, owners in fact; that she transfer title to plaintiffs and do all things necessary to vest ownership of the shares in plaintiffs, subject to a life estate in Ann Margaret. She now appeals on the ground that the evidence does not support the finding of the trust agreement.

Respondents are the sons of Johannes Leemhuis Sr. who in April 1953 at the age of 62 died intestate in Los Angeles County. He was of Dutch descent. In 1938 he migrated to California from South Africa with his wife and five children. Mrs. Leemhuis died in 1944. Her children were all then adults. Johannes met appellant in 1945 and they resided together as husband and wife until his decease. They celebrated a ceremonial marriage in November 1952.

In 1949 Johannes invented a device to aid in the heating of buildings, and applied for a patent. Respondents joined him in perfecting the new invention. In 1950 the four formed a partnership for the manufacture and sale of the device and within a short time they organized Airfloor Company of California and transferred all the assets of the firm to the corporation which thereafter manufactured Johannes' device. Its directors were five, including respondents, one Olafson, and the father who was president. John was the only son who worked actively for the corporation. Rudolph and Louis merely attended the board meetings. At the time of the trial, June 1954, they had issued 440 shares, 102 of which belonged to decedent. Appellant purchased 10 shares for $1,000. The stock issued to respondents was divided among them on the basis of the amount of work done on the invention, giving Johannes 40 per cent, John 12 per cent, Louis 40 per cent and Rudolph 8 per cent.

On April 20, 1953, Johannes died intestate. As surviving spouse, Ann succeeded to one-third interest in all the assets of his estate. In addition, she had acquired a note for $23,500 secured by a deed of trust, and other assets. Despite such acquisitions, appellant laid claim to the 112 shares of the corporation which she and decedent had assigned to him and her in joint tenancy. The question for decision is whether that assignment of the 112 shares was concomitant with an agreement that the respondents should be owners of such shares after appellant shall have enjoyed a life estate in them. The evidence appears to give an affirmative answer to such inquiry.

About forty days prior to Johannes' death, he prepared a memorandum at the home of appellant's sister, Mrs. Reed, where he and his wife then resided. Mrs. Reed was present during the discussion of decedent and appellant. At no place in the record do we find any testimony of Mrs. Reed in support of appellant's contention to the effect that at her husband's death she became owner of all the shares. Appellant testified that she took decedent's dictation of his letter to the corporation commissioner; that her notes of the dictation had not been preserved; that Johannes wrote the memorandum in long hand and that she had consigned it to the ash can; that after her letter to the commissioner, a certificate for 112 shares was issued and placed in escrow with Attorney McHaffie; that she gave no consideration for the joint tenancy.

From the testimony of several witnesses, it was established that for many years prior to March 8, 1953, Johannes had announced and adhered to a rule that the stock of the Airfloor Company was to remain in the men of the Leemhuis family. Such rule was repeated among the members of that family until Johannes' death. Appellant declared the rule after her husband's death at a conference with respondents as follows:

"Boys, I want to admit that the stock still does not belong to me. It may be turned over to me but it still belongs to one person, and we are four to see what is going to be done with that stock * * * it is still your daddy's stock * * * he just left it to me in name only * * * I am going to distribute it * * * the way I want * * *. It is still his stock, it is not mine * * *. Your father didn't want the two girls in on it, just the three boys * * *. I am sticking to your father's rule, the three boys only * * * I am not going to alter it."

She testified, "They were rules made by him and I wanted to abide by them. * * * He made those rules prior to our marriage. It was told to the three boys and myself * * * It was something he would say from time to time at various places." That conference was held September 24, 1953. Her deposition was taken April 10, 1954, when she deposed that at the conference the stock was not discussed; denied her statement that the stock had been given to her "in name only." But a playing of the wire recording established that she had made to respondents all the statements which she repudiated in court.

She admitted that she proposed the conference "for the purpose of discussing certain matters * * *. The conference was at the plant in South Gate." At the trial, she testified that it was a friendly conference, but denied that she had said that she held title to the stock in name only or that she had said, "It is still your daddy's stock; he just left it to me in name only." After the recording had been played, appellant testified, "Well, it pertains to the stock that should be held in the Leemhuis name and that it should go to the boys and the grandchildren."

In addition to the foregoing, Barbara Leemhuis (wife of John) testified that at her home a few days after the passing of Johannes Sr., appellant visited her where she recited decedent's "rule" with respect to the stock of the Airfloor Company and stated that decedent had placed the stock in joint tenancy because he "was undecided as to how to leave the stock" among the three sons and that the joint tenancy was to continue only during his trip to Africa and that decedent knew he could trust appellant to divide the stock fairly among the boys. Also, Barbara testified that on the occasions of the visits she and her husband made to decendent's home during the three years prior to his death, decedent, at least once a week stated that the Airfloor stock was a "family affair * * * wanted the boys to be sole runners of the business * * and it should not go outside of the family."

[1,2] Such evidence establishes that appellant held the title of the corporate shares in trust for the benefit of respondents. The case of Grace v. Rodrigues, 111 Cal.App.2d 131, 243 P.2d 906, 910, supports the contention of respondents. The mother of the litigants, without consideration, conveyed her Elmhurst property to the defendant seven years prior to the mother's decease. At one time, Mrs. Rodrigues stated that when her mother came out of the hospital, she would make everything all right; at another, she said, "My mother said to sell the property and divide it between my brother and I"; subsequently she said to Mrs. Grace (her sister), "I will give you what's coming to you." In a conversation among members of the family, there had been quite a little conversation in reference to the property's being equalized among the three children, and appellant said: "it was no more than right that each one of us should have our share as my mother wanted it." At another conversation among the three children, appellant said she was going to sell it and divide it among the three. To Mrs. Govey who visited appellant at Grace's home, appellant said, "I will sell the property and divide it between you and Louisa and the three of us." Despite the appellant's denials of the above statements, the court found that she held the Elmhurst property in trust for herself and respondents. The judgment was affirmed with the announcement that "'although it is necessary, in order to establish a trust, to offer clear and convincing proof, such proof may be indirect, consisting of acts, conduct, and circumstances'"—citing Hansen v. Bear Film Co., Inc., 28 Cal.2d 154, 173, 168 P.2d 946; Air-ola v. Gorham, 56 Cal.App.2d 42, 49, 133 P.2d 78. A voluntary trust is created as to the trustor and beneficiary by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty an intention to create a trust, its subject, purpose and beneficiary.

Such trusts may be proved by parol evidence that is clear, satisfactory and convincing. Civil Code, sec. 2221; Kobida v. Hinkelmann, 53 Cal.App.2d 186, 188, 127 P.2d 657.

[3,4] Whether the finding of a trust is justified, it is necessary to take into consideration all the evidence. (Ibid.) Pursuant to such rule, the weight of the evidence in the instant cause preponderates to such extent that any reasonable person must approve of the conclusions derived by the trial court. The finding of an express oral promise to hold in trust may be based "solely on inferences from the circumstances, behavior and posterior declarations of transferor and transferee without any indication of what was actually spoken between them." Casey v. Casey, 97 Cal. App.2d 875, 882, 218 P.2d 842, 847. Silent acquiescence on the part of the grantee is sufficient proof of the trust where the grantee has knowledge of the grantor's intention and understanding of the transaction. 89 C.J.S., Trusts, § 149, p. 1044; 65 C.J. 472; see Box v. Box, 146 Neb. 826, 21 N.W.2d 868.

[5] Inasmuch as the appellate court must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of a finding as well as all inferences which might reasonably have been thought by the trial court to lead to the same conclusion, Bancroft-Whitney v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 142, 134 P. 1157, it must be said that the record in this action abundantly supports the findings and justifies the judgment.

[6] There is no substance in the claim of appellant that she paid a consideration for the transfer of the 102 corporate shares to her name as a joint tenant with her husband. She testified that she gave no consideration therefor. From that and all the evidence bearing upon the subject, the court was justified in finding that she paid no consideration for the transfer of the shares to appellant as a joint tenant with her husband.

[7] The theory now advanced that appellant's transfer of her ten shares to the joint tenancy was a valuable consideration for the transfer by decedent of his 102 shares to her is not applicable to the facts as found. If appellant held the 102 shares in trust for respondents, then she held her ten shares in trust for herself. She is in the identical position of a resulting trustee who has paid a small fraction of the cost of the corpus of the trust. She is trustee for Leemhuis heirs to the extent of decedent's contribution to the entirety. "If the one party pays only a part of the consideration, the party taking the title to the whole land becomes a trustee for the other party, pro tanto. * * * payment of part of the consideration carries with it a proportional interest in the land." Gerety v. O'Sheehan, 9 Cal.App. 447, 449, 99 P. 545, 546. It follows that appellant's transfer of her 10 shares to the joint tenancy does not defeat the trust in which she holds the 102 shares for respondents.

[8-11] Appellant assigns as prejudicial the court's rulings which required her to testify to certain privileged conversations with her husband (a) at the time (March 9, 1953) they authorized the transfer of the 112 shares to the joint tenancy; (b) that the husband desired his shares to go to his sons; (c) with reference to the note of March 9, 1953, for $23,500. The record contains nothing to indicate that such conversations were intended to be confidential. The privilege is to be strictly construed. The burden was on appellant to establish that the conversations came within the purview of Code of Civil Procedure, section 1881, subdivision 1. Tanzola v. De Rita, 45 Cal.2d 1, 285 P.2d 897, 900. The test of whether a conversation between spouses is admissible is whether the testimony elicited "entailed a disclosure of any marital communication." Ibid. The inhibitions of subdivision 1 of section 1881 may be waived. In re Strand, 123 Cal.App. 170, 172, 11 P.2d 89.

[12-14] Appellant waived the privilege, if it existed, by her prior testimony that the letter of March 9, 1953, had been dictated to her by her husband and that her sister Mrs. Reed heard it. The rule of privilege as to communications between attorney and client, Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 663, 677, 22 P. 26, 131; Mitchell v. Towne, 31 Cal.App.2d 259, 265, 87 P.2d 908, applies to conversations between spouses. Where communications between husband and wife are not confidential, they are not privileged. Horowitz v. Sacks, 89 Cal.App. 336, 344, 265 P. 281. Also, prior to any objection to the admission of the conversations, the letter of March 9 had been received on stipulation. Moreover, before appellant made her objections to the conversations, she had freely and duly given her deposition whereby she testified that she had had no conversations with decedent with reference to the transfer of the shares. By her silence, her acquiescence and her active participation in conversations and events, appellant waived such privilege as she might have enjoyed.

[15] But if the objections by appellant had been valid on all other grounds, the court committed no prejudicial error by reason of the circumstance that (1) the facts adduced by such conversations were proved by other testimony and (2) in each instance appellant either denied the statement specified in the question or gave evidence favorable to her own contention. Inasmuch as all alleged confidential communications in support of appellant's theory were rejected by the court, there could have been no prejudice suffered by appellant.

[16] It was not error to require appellant to testify with reference to the $23,500 note which had been placed in the joint tenancy of the spouses. No claim is asserted to that note by respondents.

[17] Requiring appellant to give her testimony for the second time under 2055, Code Civil Procedure, was a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court. She first denied certain statements attributed to her. After the wire recording of her conversation had been played to her, it was proper to allow her to explain her recorded words.

[18] It was not error to admit into evidence the memorandum of the agreement of respondents and decedent dated July 8, 1949, showing their division of the corporate shares under four different sets of circumstances. It reveals in writing the intention of decedent some four years prior to his decease and that such intention was consistent with his "rule" and his avowed intention in his lifetime.

Judgment affirmed.

R. C. TABB, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 3131.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 21, 1955.

Hearing Denied Dec. 21, 1955.

Defendant was charged with unlawful selling, furnishing or giving away narcotics in violation of statute and with prior conviction under the same statute. He admitted the prior conviction, and a jury in the Superior Court, Alameda County, Chris B. Fox, J., found him guilty. He appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held, inter alia, that proof of conviction for similar offense was evidence bearing on defendant's knowledge of nature of substance with which he dealt, and trial court did not err in refusing to give an instruction limiting to impeachment the evidence as to prior conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Witnesses Ⓒ337(5), 350

It is proper to impeach a defendant by showing that he has been convicted of a felony, and questions may be asked to ascertain nature of offenses involved in previous convictions. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

2. Witnesses Ⓒ350

In prosecution for sale of narcotics, wherein defendant denied he had been previously convicted of a felony, it was proper and necessary to ask further questions to elicit fact that defendant had pleaded guilty and had been sentenced on felony charges, and questions calling for nature of counts on which convicted, i. e., narcotics charges, were proper. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051; West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Poisons Ⓒ9

In prosecution for sale of narcotics, one element of offense to be proved by prosecution was defendant's knowledge that substance with which he dealt was a narcotic, and it was proper to bring out facts to show that defendant was familiar with marihuana. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Witnesses Ⓒ350

When defendant's answers, in prosecution for sale of narcotics, to questions as to prior conviction were evasive and defendant said he had served time because marihuana cigarettes were found on his porch, it was proper to ask defendant if he knew various terms used in parlance of narcotics trade. 5. Criminal Law Ⓒ1036(2)

6. Poisons Ⓒ9

In prosecution for sale of marihuana, burden was on prosecution affirmatively to establish elements of the crime charged. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

7. Criminal Law ☞ ☞673(5)

In prosecution for sale of marihuana, proof of prior conviction for similar offense was evidence bearing on defendant's knowledge of nature of substance with which he dealt, and trial court did not err in refusing to give instruction limiting to impeachment the evidence as to prior conviction. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

8. Criminal Law ☞1037(1)

Absence of objection will not prevent reversal where misconduct of prosecuting attorney is of such character as to have produced an effect which, as reasonable probability, could not have been obviated by any instructions to jury.

9. Criminal Law ☞1171(1)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics, wherein defendant characterized as an "ex-addict" a man with whom defendant had been living, prosecutor's argument, which was not objected to at trial, that prosecutor didn't think there was such a thing as an ex-addict, did not warrant reversal. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

10. Criminal Law ☞1171(3)

In narcotics prosecution, prosecutor's remark that sale in question was "just one piece or one link in the whole operation in West Oakland," if it was erroneous, was not prejudicial in view of direct and positive evidence of guilt. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

11. Criminal Law ☞1037(2)

In narcotics prosecution, if defendant's counsel was not satisfied that judge's admonition to prosecutor "to confine himself to the record" was sufficient to cure any error in prosecutor's remark to jury, defendant's counsel should have asked that remark be stricken or that jury be asked to disregard it or that district attorney be reproved for misconduct. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction after jury verdict on a charge of violating § 11,500 of the Health and Safety Code, the unlawful selling, furnishing or giving away narcotics. He was charged also with a prior conviction of the same section. A plea of not guilty was entered, but the prior conviction was admitted.

On September 2, 1954, an agent of the State Bureau of Narcotic Enforcement, Major W. McBee, was introduced to appellant by Trosclair, an informer and a heroin addict. They met opposite 3219 Filbert Street in Oakland, which was the address of appellant Tabb's art shop. Appellant was introduced as "Candy". Trosclair had informed the agent that he thought appellant's last name was Yates. At this meeting Trosclair told appellant that McBee wanted to get some marijuana. Appellant indicated that the price would be $15. McBee then gave appellant $15 and drove him to the vicinity of 37th and West Streets in Oakland. Appellant left the car and was gone for a few minutes. On his return he told McBee that the man he was looking for was not there. They returned to 3219 Filbert Street, and appellant gave back to McBee the $15. Appellant crossed the street to a phone booth, and apparently made a telephone call. On returning he told McBee that he was "all wasted away" and didn't have anything himself, that if McBee wished he would "hold out a can for him on the following day." This, according to the agent, in the parlance of the narcotics trade, meant that the person didn't have anything, that anything he had was gone at that time.

On the following day, September 3, 1954, McBee contacted appellant opposite the art shop at approximately 12:50 p. m. Trosclaire was present. Appellant entered McBee's automobile where he handed a paper bag to McBee. McBee asked him if it was $15 and appellant said "yes". McBee gave him the money. Appellant asked McBee if he wanted to look at it to see if it was any good. McBee opened the bag and saw a green leafy substance. This proved to be a one-half ounce of marijuana, which was introduced as People's Exhibit No. 1.

McBee, at the trial, positively identified appellant Tabb as the person with whom he had negotiated the narcotics purchase. He stated that appellant's appearance had changed since the date of the transaction in that he no longer had the "distinctive" goatee which he was wearing at the time of the sale. After the transaction McBee had gone through the photographic files of the Oakland Vice Squad, located appellant's picture therein as the party from whom he had made the purchase. Appellant was apparently not arrested until sometime in October. The informer, Trosclaire, at the time of trial, was in a federal hospital for narcotic addicts.

Appellant testified that he had never had any contact with McBee prior to the preliminary hearing, and denied all of the incidents related by McBee concerning the narcotic transaction. He admitted that Trosclaire, a heroin addict, had been living with him for about two weeks prior to September 3, at 3219 Filbert Street, Oakland. He said that he first learned of Trosclaire's addiction about a week and half after he came to live with him, and that he then asked him to move out, but since Trosclaire had no money, appellant could not turn him out in the cold. When asked if he had been previously convicted of a felony, appellant said that he had not, but on advice of counsel had pleaded guilty to a similar action. He admitted pleading guilty to two counts under § 11,500, Health and Safety Code for which he had spent two years in San Quentin and two years on parole.

Appellant contends that the questions asked by the prosecuting attorney and the statements made by him in argument constituted prejudicial misconduct and deprived him of a fair trial. The questioning which appellant assigns as prejudicial was as follows:

"Q. This was not your first brush with a narcotic, was it, Mr. Tabb? A. No, it was not.

"Q. Now, Mr. Tabb, have you ever been convicted of a felony? A. I have never been convicted of a felony, although on advice of counsel, I have pleaded guilty to a similar action.

"Q. Isn't it a fact, sir, that on April 8 of 1948, you were convicted in the Superior Court of the State of California in this County for two counts of 11,500 of the Health and Safety Code? A. I wasn't convicted. My attorney advised me to plead guilty.

"Q. Didn't you go to San Quentin, sir? A. Yes, I did. I spent two years in San Quentin and did two years on parole successfully.

"Q. And this 11,500 had to do with possession and furnishing of marijuana, didn't it? A. It did not.

"Q. It did not? A. It had to do with three marijuana cigarettes found on my front porch.

"Q. Possession of marijuana, is that correct? A. One count of possession, yes.

"Q. And a second count of furnishing marijuana, wasn't that true? A. That is what they said.

"Q. You, before listening to Major McBee on the stand here knew what marijuana was then, didn't you? A. I was slightly acquainted with it, yes.

"Q. And you also knew some of the terms we have been speaking of like pot and bread and things of that nature? A. I am afraid I haven't been in that element for quite a while."

It is to be noted that during this questioning no objections were interposed by appellant's counsel.

[1-4] There is, of course, no question of the propriety of impeaching a defendant by showing that he has been convicted of a felony. § 2051, Code of Civ.Proc. Furthermore, questions are permitted to ascertain the nature of the offenses involved in the previous convictions. People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 320, 169 P.2d 924; People v. Garrow, 130 Cal.App.2d 75, 278 P.2d 475; People v. Gardner, 128 Cal.App.2d 1, 7, 274 P.2d 908. Since, at first, appellant denied he had been convicted, further questioning was necessary to bring out the fact that he had actually been adjudged guilty of a felony. There can be no objections to the questions which call for the nature of the counts on which he was convicted. Was there, then, anything objectionable about the three remaining questions which were asked to determine whether or not he was familiar with the narcotic marijuana? His answers to the prior questions were rather evasive, tending to create the impression that he may not really have known anything about marijuana, but that he was unfortunate enough to be caught with it on his premises. Therefore, since one element of the offense to be proved by the prosecution was appellant's knowledge that the substance which he dealt with was a narcotic, it was proper to bring out facts to show that he was familiar with marijuana. In People v. Sykes, 44 Cal.2d 166, 280 P.2d 769, it was said that in circumstances where appellant had repeatedly denied the commission of the crime, it was within the permissible scope of cross-examination to ask if appellant had ever had narcotics in his possession. The court said that "The evidence that at prior times he had narcotics in his possession was admissible to show familiarity with them."

Appellant contends that the question of the district attorney went beyond the permissible purpose and tended to elicit testimony which in the minds of the jurors tended to prove that appellant had criminal tendencies and was likely to have committed a crime involving narcotics. He cites People v. Musumeci, Cal.App., 284 P.2d 168, 173, which holds that "testimony tending only to prove inclination of an accused toward crime, thereby rendering more probable his guilt of the charge for which he is on trial is inadmissible." The cited case cannot be said to parallel the situation here involved, for there defendant was questioned at great length to bring out the fact that he was a sex pervert, and the only purpose of doing so would be to show that he was inclined to commit a crime of the type with which he was then charged. Here appellant admitted to only a slight acquaintance with marijuana, and the prosecutor asked him but one more question concerning certain terms used in reference to the narcotic in order to show that his acquaintance therewith was something more than slight.

[5] It may also be noted that since no objections were raised at trial to these questions, appellant cannot raise them for the first time on appeal. People v. Wissenfeld, 36 Cal.2d 758, 766, 227 P.2d 833; People v. Simeone, 26 Cal.2d 795, 806, 161 P.2d 369; People v. Farrell, Cal.App., 284 P.2d 29. In People v. Newson, 37 Cal.2d 34, 230 P.2d 618, cited by appellant, the testimony was received over objection of defendant's counsel.

[6,7] It is contended that an instruction should have been given limiting the purpose of the evidence regarding appellant's prior conviction, on the court's own motion. There appears to have been no error in the failure to give such an instruction in this case, since, as determined above, the burden was on the prosecution to affirmatively establish the elements of the crime charged, hence knowledge of the nature of the narcotic on the part of appellant had to be proved. Proof of conviction for a similar offense was evidence bearing on appellant's knowledge of the nature of the substance with which he dealt. The court was therefore correct in not giving an instruction limiting this evidence to impeachment of appellant.

The district attorney in his argument to the jury, when discussing the informer, Kerry Trosclair, characterized by appellant as an ex-addict, said: "I don't think there is such a term as an ex-addict." At least, I have never heard it. It is an unfortunate thing about narcotics, once you've got it, and there isn't a case on record where anybody has ever been cured permanently. And it was elicited from McBee that Trosclair is presently in a Federal hospital for treatment. Therefore, it certainly casts some doubt on Tabb's classification of Trosclaire as an ex-addict. That only goes to show knowledge on the part of Tabb here."

[8, 9] No objection was raised to this portion of the argument at the trial. In People v. Codina, 30 Cal.2d 356, 362, 181 P.2d 881, it was held that alleged improprieties must be opposed at the time they are made and the court requested to admonish the jury concerning them, if they are to be made a ground of appeal. See, also, People v. Sutic, 41 Cal.2d 483, 496, 261 P.2d 241; People v. Sampsell, 34 Cal.2d 757, 763, 214 P.2d 813. It is true, however, that the absence of objection will not prevent reversal where misconduct of the prosecuting attorney is "of such a character as to have produced an effect which, as a reasonable probability, could not have been obviated by any instructions to the jury". People v. Robarge, 111 Cal.App.2d 87, 244 P.2d 407, 413.

Appellant says that the district attorney by the language quoted above, sought to link appellant in some way with Trosclaire's plight. Apparently the only purpose of the passage was to cast doubt on appellant's credibility when he classified Trosclaire as an ex-addict. The argument appears to be that since everyone should know that there are no ex-addicts, appellant was not truthful in thus characterizing Trosclaire. There is nothing in the language that could lead the jury to believe that appellant was an addict. In People v. Duvernay, 43 Cal. App.2d 823, 111 P.2d 659, cited by appellant, a case in which it was concluded that defendant had not had a fair trial, the prosecuting attorney in argument had stated that he didn't know whether this defendant was a user or not, and that defendant had many of the characteristics of a user.

[10, 11] The district attorney, some time later in his argument, discussed the fact that the state agent, McBee had no interest in sending an innocent man to jail, and went on to say that the jury must look to the motives of the witnesses, that admittedly it is difficult when there are so few witnesses, "but that is the nature of a narcotics case. Some narcotics cases are bigger than others where you get the large operators which, unfortunately, we can't lay hands on as often as we would like. You have a much more elaborate setup with stakeouts, continuous buys, or rather one buy right after another, and a good many witnesses that can be presented. But this is just one piece or one link in the whole operation in West Oakland." The italicized language was objected to as prejudicial and the court told the prosecutor that he ought to confine himself to the record. Any error in making this remark was not prejudicial in view of the direct positive evidence of appellant's guilt. Also, appellant's counsel at the trial was satisfied that the judge's admonition to the prosecutor to "confine himself to the record" was sufficient, since he did not ask that the remark be stricken or request that the jury be asked to disregard it, or request that the district attorney be reproofed for misconduct. See, People v. Sutic, 41 Cal.2d 483, 496, 261 P.2d 241.

[12] There is no merit in the contention that the evidence is insufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty. Appellant's principal argument is directed at McBee's identification of Tabb. Much is made of the fact that McBee didn't know that appellant's name was Tabb at the time of the alleged transaction, that the informer had told McBee appellant's name was Candy Yates, but that McBee never made any investigation to determine whether there was such a person as Candy Yates. Furthermore, it is argued that the person McBee dealt with wore a goatee, whereas appellant was clean shaven at the time of trial. McBee identified a photograph, Plaintiff's Exhibit 2, as that of appellant as he looked on September 2 and 3, 1954. Appellant at the trial admitted that it was his photograph, and that on the aforementioned date he wore a mustache, goatee and beard which had later been shaved off in the County Jail.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record before us, the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Max I. BLACK, Petitioner and Appellant,
v.

STATE PERSONNEL BOARD of The State of California, Ford A. Chatters, President and member thereof, Emery Olson, Wilmer W. Morse, Robert D. Gray and Benjamin E. Mallary, members thereof, California Aeronautics Commission, Bernard M. Doolin, Director Aeronautics, Robert C. Kirkwood, Charles G. Johnson, First Doe and Second Doe, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20873.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 14, 1955.

Mandamus proceeding to review an order of the State Personnel Board dismissing petitioner from his position as field representative for the California Aeronautics Commission. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., denied an alternative writ of mandate, and the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., pro tem., held that there was sufficient evidence to sustain finding that employer had been guilty of conduct justifying discipline.

Affirmed.

1. Mandamus ⇨172

Any finding of State Personnel Board which was not specifically attacked in administrative mandamus proceeding would have to be accepted as true. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

2. Mandamus ⇨172

In an administrative mandamus proceeding, court is limited, so far as sufficiency of evidence is concerned, to determination of whether substantial evidence is produced in support of challenged findings, and it may not weigh evidence or make independent findings as to effect thereof. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

3. Evidence ⇨83(1)

Mandamus ⇨154(7)

In an administrative mandamus proceeding, ruling of administrative tribunal comes before court attended by strong presumption that official duty has been regularly performed, and such presumption must be overcome by factual allegations; mere conclusions being insufficient. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

4. Mandamus ⇨154(7)

In administrative mandamus proceeding, petitioner's charge, that there was no "substantial evidence" to support challenged phases of administrative findings, was but a conclusion and could not be treated as equivalent to indispensable facts necessary to overcome strong presumption, that official duty had been regularly performed, which attended ruling of administrative tribunal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5

5. Mandamus ⇨169

Unless petitioner avers, in administrative mandamus proceeding, facts sufficient to make a prima facie case, court is justified in denying petition out of hand. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

6. Officers ⇨72(1)

Conviction of violation of vehicle code as result of incident would not, if standing alone, be sufficient sustaining evidence of driving-while-intoxicated charge made against state employee in dismissal proceeding, but it was competent for purpose of supplementing and explaining evidence of fact of driving while intoxicated. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 19572 (c, d, f, p, s); Vehicle Code, § 502.

7. Officers ⇨66

Driving a vehicle while intoxicated and running through signal light constituted failure of good behavior outside of duty hours incompatible with or inimical to public service within government code section rendering such conduct cause for discipline of government employee. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 19572 (c, d, f, p, s); Vehicle Code, § 502.

8. Officers ⇨72(2)

What constituted any other failure of good behavior or acts either during or outside of duty hours which were incompatible with or inimical to public service, within government code section making such conduct cause for discipline of government employee, was essentially question for determination by Personnel Board. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 19572 (c, d, f, l, p, s), 19574.

9. Officers ⇨69.7

Evidence sustained State Personnel Board's finding that field representative for Aeronautics Commission had been guilty of insubordination, in making unauthorized disclosure of information relating to work of Commission, within the purview of government code section making insubordination cause for discipline of government employee. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 19572 (f, p, s).

10. Administrative Law and Procedure

Determination of penalty to be imposed by administrative agency lies with agency and not with court.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Appeal from order denying alternative writ of mandate in a proceeding brought under § 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure, to review an order of the State Personnel Board dismissing petitioner from his position as Field Representative for the California Aeronautics Commission. It appears from the petition that certain charges were filed against petitioner under § 19574 Government Code, same being set forth in a Notice of Punitive Action, the vehicle prescribed by statute. Answer having been filed and hearing had, the board found against petitioner and ordered his dismissal. Rehearing was denied and thereupon petition for mandate was filed in the superior court.

The Notice of Punitive Action contained allegations which summarized state these grounds for dismissal: inefficiency, inexcusable neglect of duty, insubordination, conviction of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, wilful disobedience, and acts during and outside of duty hours which are incompatible with and inimical to the public service within the meaning of subdivisions (c), (d), (f), (l), (p) and (s) of § 19572 of the Government Code. That code section provides that: "Each of the following constitutes cause for discipline of an employee, * * * (c) Inefficiency. (d) Inexcusable neglect of duty. * * * (f) Insubordination. * * * (l) Conviction of a felony or conviction of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. * * * (p) Wilful disobedience. * * * (s) Any other failure of good behavior or acts either during or outside of duty hours which are incompatible with or inimical to the public service. * * *"

The board's finding IV stated in substance that petitioner had failed, neglected, and refused, in approximately 65 instances to transmit copies of correspondence emanating from the Burbank office to the Sacramento office as required of him by Staff Memorandum No. 1, of which he had knowledge; that in approximately 44 instances he violated the said memorandum by failing and refusing to sign correspondence in the prescribed manner; that he informed the Director of Aeronautics that there was no official correspondence in the Burbank files which had not been previously transmitted to Sacramento, when in fact there were approximately 64 copies of official correspondence falling in that category; that these failures and refusals were incompatible with and inimical to the public service within the meaning of subdivisions (c), (d), (f), (p) and (s) of said § 19572.

The board's finding V was: "That on or about May 22, 1953, the said Max I. Black drove a vehicle in the City of Los Angeles while intoxicated and ran through a signal light"; that on or about May 25, 1953, he was convicted in the municipal court of Los Angeles county of a violation of § 502 of the Vehicle Code, driving a vehicle upon a highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor; and that such conduct constituted failure of good behavior and acts outside of duty hours, incompatible with and inimical to the public service, within the meaning of subdivision (s) of § 19572.

Finding VI was to the effect that on or about February 6, 1953, petitioner was instructed by the Director of Aeronautics to refrain from revealing to persons not officially connected with the California Aeronautics Commission any information relating to the work of the commission without prior approval of the Director of Aeronautics, unless the release of such information pertained directly to specific and designated activities of the said Black with the said commission; that on or about August 4, 1953, said Black received from the Director's office a copy of a letter from the Director to one Major General Vanaman, relating to the establishment of a Sacramento Air Traffic Council, which letter is set forth in the finding; that the subject of the letter did not relate to Black's duties or activities, that he received it in the ordinary course of official business, that in violation of his instructions he forwarded a copy of same to Vice Admiral C. E. Rosendahl, together with a letter from himself to Vice Admiral Rosendahl which is set forth in the finding; that petitioner concealed from the Director the transmittal of said letter to Vice Admiral Rosendahl, who was not connected with the California Aeronautics Commission and had no right to receive the information contained in the letter from the Director to Major General Vanaman; that such conduct on the part of petitioner constituted insubordination, wilful disobedience and failure of good behavior and acts during business hours which are incompatible with and inimical to the public service within the meaning of subdivisions (f), (p) and (s) of § 19572.

The board further found in paragraph X: "That the causes, and each of them, for which the punitive action was imposed and found to be true in Paragraphs IV, V and VI hereof are sustained by the evidence; that each of said causes, separately and severally, so found to be true is sufficient to support the punitive action taken." And it was ordered that petitioner be dismissed from the service.

[1] No copy of petitioner's answer to the Notice of Punitive Action is included in his petition for mandate. But the specifications of insufficiency of evidence therein contained do not challenge the support for finding V with respect to the fact of driving while intoxicated and running through a signal light, or the fact of conviction of violation of § 502, Vehicle Code. Nor does the petition specify any insufficiency of the evidence to support that portion of finding VI which sets forth a copy of the letter to Major General Vanaman, or that portion setting forth the copy of the letter to Vice Admiral Rosendahl. Other portions of that finding are attacked upon the basis of "no substantial evidence" to support the same. Any finding which is not specifically attacked is to be accepted as true. Stuck v. Board of Medical Examiners, 94 Cal.App. 2d 751, 754-755, 211 P.2d 389.

[2] The State Personnel Board is an agency having adjudicating power derived directly from the constitution and under settled rules the court in an administrative mandamus proceeding under § 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure, is limited, so far as sufficiency of evidence is concerned, to determination of whether substantial evidence was produced in support of a challenged finding. It may not weigh the evidence or make independent finding as to the effect thereof. Boren v. State Personnel Board, 37 Cal.2d 634, 637-638, 234 P.2d 981; Genser v. State Personnel Board, 112 Cal. App.2d 77, 80, 245 P.2d 1090; Nelson v. Department of Corrections, 110 Cal.App.2d 331, 336, 242 P.2d 906.

[3,4] In such a proceeding the ruling of the administrative tribunal comes before the court attended by a strong presumption that official duty has been regularly performed, Drummev v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 85, 87 P.2d 848; Sipper v. Urban, 22 Cal.2d 138, 144 (concurring opinion), 137 P.2d 425; De Luca v. Board of Supervisors, 134 Cal.App.2d 606, 286 P.2d 395, which presumption must be overcome by factual allegations; mere conclusions will not suffice. In the present instance the stenographic record of the proceedings before the board was not attached to or filed with the petition. Petitioner repeatedly charges that there was no

"substantial evidence" to support the challenged phases of findings IV, V and VI. That is but a conclusion, and cannot be treated as the equivalent of the indispensable facts. See Perry v. Chatters, 121 Cal.App.2d 813, 815, 264 P.2d 228; Cross v. Tustin, 111 Cal.App.2d 395, 399, 244 P.2d 731; Kelley v. Kingsbury, 210 Cal. 37, 39, 290 P. 885.

[5-8] Unless petitioner avers facts sufficient to make a prima facie case, the court is justified in denying the petition out of hand, as was done at bar. In Wilson v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 103 Cal.App.2d 426, 430, 229 P.2d 406, 408, this court said: "The practice is to present the petition to the court with a request that the alternative writ be issued ex parte. But a petitioner is not entitled as a matter of right to the issuance of that writ. He must make a proper showing by the allegations of his petition. If his petition fails to state a prima facie case entitling him to the issuance of the alternative writ, it is within the power of the court to deny it out of hand. This is familiar practice in all courts having original jurisdiction in mandamus. Furthermore, the power of the court is not without a discretion, wisely exercised, to grant or deny either the alternative or the peremptory writ. Wiedwald v. Dodson, 95 Cal. 450, 30 P. 580; Betty v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 619, 116 P.2d 947; Bartholomae Oil Corp. v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 726, 117 P.2d 674." See also Dare v. Bd. of Medical Examiners, 21 Cal.2d 790; Sipper v. Urban, supra, 22 Cal.2d 138, 141, 137 P.2d 425. The judge of the superior court ruled, and we agree, that the admitted fact of driving a vehicle while intoxicated and running through a signal light, amounts to substantial evidence supporting finding V, and, as already observed, the court was not authorized to weigh the evidence or go further than to find the presence of substantial support for the finding. Although the conviction of violation of the Vehicle Code as a result of that incident, if standing alone, would not be sufficient sustaining evidence of the charge of driving while intoxicated, Manning v. Watson, 108 Cal.

App.2d 705, 711-712, 239 P.2d 688, it was competent for the purpose of supplementing and explaining the evidence of the fact of driving while intoxicated. This is recognized in the Manning case and in §§ 11513 (c) and 19578, Government Code.

Counsel for petitioner argues that as subdivisions (h), (i) and (l) of § 19572, Government Code, specify drunkenness on duty, intemperance and conviction of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, as grounds for disciplinary action, the driving of a vehicle while off duty, though under the influence of liquor, does not constitute a basis for a penalty. The board ruled, however, that it falls within subdivision (s): "Any other failure of good behavior or acts either during or outside of duty hours which are incompatible with or inimical to the public service." The trial court took the same view, and we agree because the question is essentially one for determination by the Personnel Board, and that determination manifestly was not an unreasonable one.

[9] The letter from petitioner to Vice Admiral Rosendahl is of itself sufficient substantial evidence of the fact of insubordination which is embraced by finding VI. It forwards to Admiral Rosendahl a copy of the letter from the Director to Major General Vanaman, and the pertinent portions of petitioner's letter are as follows: "Upon my return to the office yesterday I found a letter from Mike Doolin to a General Vanaman, which I think should be of interest to you. I am forwarding this letter to you and would request that you keep it confidential since Mr. Doolin has been very critical of me in releasing information. However, I feel that you should know about this since I believe that the subject would definitely come within the purview of what your organization is set up to do. I am also going to forward to you some of the information concerning meetings which have been held in the Los Angeles area in the past regarding the noise problems at Los Angeles International Airport.

"This morning I made a flight with Fred Stoeffler, who is Hill and Knowlton's representative on Captain Lee Webb's AIA Staff, and briefly discussed your organization with him. He seemed quite familiar with it but stated that in the past he thought that your organization had not been particularly effective. I am going to see Captain Webb tomorrow and get his thinking in the matter and would also ask that this be kept confidential between you and I. I will attempt to do a little 'bird-dogging' for you and send you such information as I may be able to pick up in regard to your program. I would appreciate it very much if you will let me know the results of your meeting on August 11th and might add, incidentally, that I am very much interested in a spot with your organization if one should develop. I am pretty sure that I have gone just about as far as I can go with the organization for which I am now working and I think that the sooner I make a change the better off I will be. In any case, I will certainly keep in touch with you." (Emphasis added.) It could not well be said that this letter reflects anything less than insubordination and an intention to conceal the same from petitioner's superiors. The argument that it pertained directly to specified and designated activities of appellant and that this is established by uncontradicted and "qualified" evidence, also that uncontradicted evidence showed that petitioner did not conceal the transmittal of said letter from petitioner to Admiral Rosendahl, rests upon allegations of the petition such as these: "That there is no substantial evidence to support the finding in Finding VI. * * * that in violation of said request and instructions of February 6, 1953, and without requesting or obtaining the approval of the Director * * * the said Max I. Black forwarded a copy of said letter of the Director of Aeronautics to Major General Vanaman to one Vice Admiral C. E. Rosendahl" or "[t]hat the said Max I. Black concealed from the Director of Aeronautics the transmittal of said letter to said Vice Admiral Rosendahl," also, "in this connection the uncontradicted, qualified evidence discloses that the release of such information pertained directly to specific and designated activities with said Commission; that the uncontradicted evidence discloses that petitioner did not conceal from the Director the transmittal of said letter to Rosendahl." (Emphasis added.) These allegations of the petition contain merely a series of conclusions and are not sufficient, as appellant argues, to establish a prima facie case of insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding.

[10] The trial judge, observing that the Board had specifically found in paragraph X above quoted that each of the causes for punitive action set forth in paragraphs IV, V and VI, "separately and severally, so found to be true is sufficient to support the punitive action taken," concluded that it was unnecessary to determine whether substantial evidence existed in support of finding IV. There was no error in this, for having found that paragraphs V and VI of the findings are supported by substantial evidence, paragraph IV could be of consequence only with respect to the penalty imposed, and the Board having declared each offense covered by V and VI to be sufficient ground for dismissal, it had left no opening for the trial judge to inquire into that matter. Indeed, appellant's brief does not discuss the sufficiency of the evidence to support finding IV. This seems to be a tacit recognition of the established rule that the determination of the penalty to be imposed by an administrative agency lies with the agency and not with the court. King v. Board of Medical Examiners, 65 Cal.App.2d 644, 652, 151 P.2d 282; Fuller v. Board of Medical Examiners, 14 Cal. App.2d 734, 737, 59 P.2d 171.

This case does not fall within the ambit of Cooper v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 252, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593, and Nelson v. Department of Corrections, supra, 110 Cal.App.2d 335, 242 P.2d 906, cases in which the court, having found one charge unsupported, remitted the matter to the administrative agency for the purpose of reconsidering the amount of the penalty. We have no finding here of absence of substantial evidence to support finding IV, and as above indicated counsel for appellant presents no discussion of same. We find no error in the rulings of the trial judge.

The order denying alternative writ of mandate is affirmed.

Marlon E. DE BOYNTON, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

Curtis Sherman DE BOYNTON,
Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 20617.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 18, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 9, 1955.

Hearing Denied Jan. 5, 1956.

Proceeding on divorced husband's petition to have wife show cause why she had refused to permit child to visit with husband outside wife's presence. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Elmer D. Doyle, J., entered order directing wife to permit husband physical custody at certain periods, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that under evidence, trial court's order awarding father physical custody at certain periods, without supervision, was not abuse of discretion.

Order affirmed.

1. Infants ☞19

In child custody proceeding, an investigator's report, which was in evidence, could properly be considered in making order.

2. Divorce ☞299

Divorced husband had right to visit reasonably with his child at, and away from, mother's residence, and such right could not be denied without cause.

3. Divorce ☞303(1)

Where divorce decree granted custody of child to mother, with visitation rights in father, order directing that husband should have physical custody of child on alternate weekends and on alternate Christmas holidays did not modify, but merely defined, the decree, and could be entered without a showing of substantial benefit to child.

4. Divorce ☞303(2)

It is not always necessary that a change of circumstances be shown as a prerequisite to modification of a custody decree, and a situation may arise in which welfare of child might require a change of former order.

5. Parent and Child ☞2(3.1)

Paramount concern in awarding custody as between parents is welfare of child.

6. Evidence ☞570

The opinion of an expert is not of such quality as to compel its acceptance by trier of fact.

7. Appeal and Error ☞1011(1)

Where there is a conflict in evidence, finding of trial court is final.

8. Parent and Child ☞2(4)

Under evidence adduced in child custody proceeding, trial court's order awarding father physical custody at certain periods, without supervision, was not abuse of discretion.

Robertson, Harney, Drummond & Dorsey, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Iverson & Hogoboom, by Wm. P. Hogoboom, Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Judge.

The question for decision is whether the trial court abused its discretion in modifying the interlocutory decree of divorce by so interpreting its provision with respect to custody as to confirm the father's right to visit with his child beyond the limitations imposed upon him by the mother.

By such decree, entered August 8, 1952, "the custody of the minor child of the parties, Elizabeth Joan De Boynton, be and the same is hereby awarded to plaintiff, subject to the right of reasonable visitation by defendant." Dissatisfied with the conduct of appellant in refusing "to allow defendant to take the minor child * * * outside the residence occupied by plaintiff" and because she has "at all times denied defendant his right of reasonable visitation," by petition, filed October 6, 1953, respondent caused appellant to be ordered to show cause why she had refused to permit the child to visit with respondent outside the presence of appellant. Pursuant thereto, a series of hearings was held by the trial court. On October 27, 1953, the matter was referred to Commissioner Brock for "findings and recommendation" and an investigator was appointed, "his report to be received in evidence, subject to the right of both parties to offer additional evidence." Pending further hearing, without prejudice, defendant was allowed to take the minor child away for Christmas Eve night, to be returned at 10:30 a. m. on Christmas day. Three other hearings were held on January 26, May 26, and June 15, 1954. A final order was entered on June 21, 1954, whereby "the defendant shall have rights of reasonable visitation with the minor child and the defendant shall have physical custody of said child on alternate weekends" from 6 p. m. Friday to 7:30 p. m. on Sunday and "shall have physical custody of said minor child on alternate Christmas holidays from December 20 to December 26 of alternate years."

Despite the fact that respondent at no time sought any substantial change in the original provision for custody, at the hearing on January 26, 1954, appellant for the first time accused respondent of degenerate acts toward his 30-month-old daughter. Basing her accusation upon what she declared to have been the statement of the infant, appellant made her charges first to the court's investigator and later to the court. By reason of such asserted behavior, appellant demands that the father's visits with the child should be wholly forbidden or be allowed only under strict supervision. After hearing the complaint of appellant, the investigator interviewed Dr. Simms, a child psychologist whom appellant had consulted with the result that Dr. Simms, after two hourly visits with the child "found nothing to indicate evidences of degenerate behavior by the father." The investigator's report contains the statement that "the home in which he would lodge the child on weekends is of adequate size and comfortably furnished and proper care and supervision is available." He recommended action substantially as that embraced within the court's final order.

Notwithstanding the denials of respondent, the testimony of his wife, and the opinions of the investigator, appellant insists that the testimony of Dr. Lobb, a psychiatrist, should have been the court's guidance. From the tests made by the witness, she derived the opinion that "this child shows evidence of having been psychologically disturbed and profoundly disturbed by some exposure to male sexuality * * * subjected to precocious sexual stimulation." While from such tests the psychiatrist opined that the infant had been molested by the father, yet the witness concludes that "the best program for the child would be a situation in which we do not have an abrupt breaking off with this man * * *. But if she saw him only in the presence of a responsible person, not so identified with him as to be unreliable, but a responsible person, either an impartial female, or the mother or someone of that type, then I think for the best interests of the child that visitation should be allowed."

The court was not overwhelmed by the suspicions of the mother or the theory and tests of her psychiatrist. It adopted the testimony that was contradictory to that of Dr. Lobb, including the report of Dr. Simms who was not brought into court. Mrs. Barbara De Boynton, present wife of respondent, testified that she always accompanied respondent when he brought his daughter to their home; she was never alone with her father; he was never undressed in the child's presence; she, alone, accompanied the infant to the bathroom;

"at all times" in our home "there has always been someone with her other than the father"; she plays with other children of about her own age; she appears to love her father very much and tells him so about every 20 minutes; has her nap from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m.; she never displayed interest in or knowledge of her genitals in the presence of women or men. Mrs. De Boynton considers the daughter a lovely child, "very intelligent and well mannered." Respondent denied the charges of appellant and the implications of Dr. Lobb. He testified that the child had long been subject to chafing and diaper rash; that she had complained about it to her mother who applied a remedy. Numerous neighbors testified to the happy relations between father and daughter and of his kindness to and care for her.

[1] After all the evidence had been introduced, the Commissioner received the investigator's report by stipulation, interviewed the child alone and then made his recommendations to the court. After appellant's objections and exceptions to the Commissioner's findings and conclusions had been duly considered, the order of June 21, 1954, was entered. It was not based solely upon the investigator's report, but since that document was in evidence, its contents were properly considered. Exley v. Exley, 101 Cal.App.2d 831, 836, 225 P.2d 662.

[2] The motion of respondent was not for a modification of the interlocutory decree. Neither does the order appealed from modify the judgment. Respondent's petition merely sought the aid of the court to effect definite terms for the enforcement of his rights under the decree. The order defines in concrete terms the extent of the father's right to visit with his child and requires appellant's compliance. Gury v. Gury, 219 Cal. 506, 507, 27 P.2d 758. Respondent had the right to visit reasonably with his child at, and away from, the mother's residence. Such right ensues from parenthood and should not be denied without cause. Exley v. Exley, supra, 101 Cal.App.2d at page 839, 225 P.2d 662.

[3] Appellant contends that the custody provisions of the decree should not have been modified without first showing the child would gain a substantial benefit. As above observed, his visitation rights were not substantially modified, but were merely interpreted. Smith v. Smith, 126 Cal. App.2d 65, 271 P.2d 178, does not support appellant. That decision merely reports the attempt of a father to effect an actual change of custody in order that he might remove his child's residence to Arkansas. To grant his request would have deprived California courts of custodial control.

[4, 5] Appellant contends that before making a change in the provision for custody, it was incumbent upon the court first to determine that there had been a change in conditions that would affect the child. The "change of circumstance" rule is not ironclad. A situation may arise in which the welfare of the child might require a change of the former order as to custody. Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 728, 68 P.2d 719, 723. The paramount concern in awarding custody as between parents is the welfare of the child who is not property, but is a person with rights. Juri v. Juri, 69 Cal.App.2d 773, 779, 160 P.2d 73.

[6-8] Appellant complains that the trial court abused its discretion in failing to require custody by the father to be supervised. She quotes the testimony of Dr. Lobb as the basis for her contention. In the first place, the court was not obliged to and did not adopt that doctor's conclusions. Evidently they were not based upon all the known facts. In the second place, other testimony was received which, in the reasoning and opinion of the trial judge, was of more persuasive force than that of the learned doctor. The opinion of an expert is not of such quality as to compel its acceptance by the trier of fact. Rose v. State, 19 Cal.2d 713, 733, 123 P.2d 505. Its purpose is merely to add to the light projected by the other proof. Ibid. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the finding of the trial court is final. Nothing in the record indicates an abuse of discretion in making the order. The evidence already reviewed is sufficient to warrant the implied finding of the father's fitness to have his daughter's physical custody and to justify the order defining with exactness the extent of his visitation rights. He has a comfortable home, a refined wife who has a high regard for the child and supervises her diet, her activities and her rest in a bedroom of her own. Not a hostile witness was produced from among the friends who visited respondent while his baby was there.

Order affirmed.

ESTATE of Della E. WAMACK, aka Della E. Womack, Deceased.

Samuel WAMACK, Petitioner-Appellant,
v.

Joseph A. CHESNUTT, Contestant-Respondent.
Civ. 21026.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
Nov. 18, 1955.

Proceeding by surviving husband to revoke letters of administration previously granted deceased wife's nephew, and to obtain appointment of himself as administrator of wife's estate. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., denied the petition, and from the ensuing judgment, the surviving husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that where surviving husband had executed prenuptial agreement waiving all claims to wife's estate, and did not appear at hearing of which he had notice, and at which nephew was appointed administrator of wife's estate, surviving husband was not entitled to appointment as administrator, and that the agreement barred his claim to a family allowance, and to a share in his wife's estate.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ19

The court may, in its discretion, refuse to grant letters of administration to any person who had actual notice of a previous application for letters of administration by another person, and had an opportunity to contest the previous appointment. Probate Code, § 453.

2. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ19

Where surviving husband, who had executed prenuptial agreement waiving all claims to wife's estate, had due notice of hearing on nephew's petition for letters of administration of wife's estate, and failed to appear at hearing, husband abandoned such priority to letters of administration as he might have asserted as surviving husband, and was not entitled to appointment as administrator. Probate Code, § 453.

3. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ32(2)

Burden of establishing an abuse of discretion of court in appointing nephew as administrator of wife's estate was on surviving husband, and in absence of clear showing thereof, the reviewing court would not disturb the judgment denying the husband's petition to revoke the nephew's appointment. Probate Code, § 453.

4. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ32(2)

In proceeding by surviving husband to revoke letters of administration of wife's estate, previously granted nephew at hearing of which husband had notice, and at which he failed to appear, court did not abuse discretion in denying husband's petition for letters of administration. Probate Code, § 453.

5. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ17(2)

Relatives who have a clear right to succeed to some share of a decedent's personal estate, are entitled to administer the estate, but when they have no such right, they are not entitled to administer the estate. Probate Code, § 422.

6. Husband and Wife ⇨29(4)

Consideration for prenuptial agreement, by which surviving husband had agreed to waive all claims to deceased wife's property and estate, was the decedent's promise to marry, and the fact that the parties were subsequently married.

7. Descent and Distribution ⇨62

Where surviving husband had executed prenuptial agreement waiving all claims to wife's estate, surviving husband was deprived of inheritance from decedent.

8. Executors and Administrators ⇨185

Where surviving husband had executed prenuptial agreement waiving all claims to wife's estate, surviving husband was not entitled to a family allowance.

9. Descent and Distribution ⇨62Executors and Administrators ⇨19, 185

If surviving husband had been deceived by deceased wife's alleged oral promise of an inheritance, he had duty to allege promise constituting such deceit, and, absent such allegation, prenuptial agreement waiving all claims and interest in wife's estate barred husband from obtaining letters of administration, family allowance, and share in estate. Probate Code, §§ 422, 453.

10. Evidence ⇨443(2)

In proceeding by surviving husband for letters of administration of wife's estate, where husband had executed prenuptial agreement waiving all claims and interest in wife's estate, offer of proof that, as inducement to contract, wife had orally promised to provide for husband by will, and had reiterated such promise after marriage, was properly excluded.
